A NEW VOICE LOZENGE, useful for public speakers and all who suffer from delicate, relaxed, or irritable throat, has been sent us by Messrs. Hawker Brothers, 1, Railway-approach, London-bridge (1s. box). The special feature is that they dissolve immediately.

WEST-END FACTORY GIRLS.—Miss Meredith Brown writes from the Shaftesbury Institute, Harrow-street, Lisson Grove, N.W.:—Who will invite some of our factory girls to the country on Bank Holiday, August 6? "Oh, Miss," exclaimed one of our girls, "we did like our Whit Monday treat, it was slashin'." "And you 'ad the lot of us back sober," continued another; "it's the first Bank Holiday as we ain't got blind drunk before night." After the noise of the factory, standing ten hours a day with aching feet, to return at night to unwholesome and crowded homes, is it any wonder that the acme of their delight is a holiday in the country? Who will help? "I was a stranger, and ye took Me in!"

Sunday Afternoon, July 29.

The Prodigal Son—Wilful but Penitent.
Luke xv. 11—32.

The parable of the Prodigal Son has been called the "pearl of parables." Might it not be compared to a string of pearls? It was spoken to rebuke error; it reveals a world of truth. It sets before us human perversity, the sinner's misery, the possibility of restoration to happiness in the favour of God, the way of restoration, the bliss of the restored, and the churlishness of those who reflect upon the beneficence that rejoices in the work of restoration. The hero of the lesson is the prodigal, and the central point of interest is his relation to his father's home.

(1) Look at Him going from Home (vv. 11—13).—Note: (a) His youth (ver. 12, "the younger").—See here "developed, but unused power like a bow stretched by the archer, with the arrow quivering on its strained string" (Pulsford). No period of life more beset with danger. (Compare Solomon's "Rejoice, but know thou," Eccles. xi. 9.) (b) His independence ("Give me," ver. 12; "took his journey," ver. 13).—This was a casting off of restraint. But restraint in youth is good. (See "It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth," Lam. iii. 27). (c) His recklessness (ver. 13, "gathered all together").—He took all, risked all, and lost all. See how he was himself involved in the loss (ver. 24, "was lost"). See how much is risked by those who wander away from God (Matt. xvi. 26). (d) His inexperience. Amongst the things gathered together there was no experience. Let the young man starting out from home beware. He will meet with dangers for which no training can prepare him, unanticipated, numerous. Let him read Ps. cxix. 9; put a Bible in his trunk, and spend an hour a day with it in peaceful meditation.

(2) Look at Him away from Home (vv. 13—16).—He is in a far country. Sin separates from God (Eph. ii. 13). Here his life is: (a) Wasteful (ver. 13).—See the sin of wastefulness (Luke xvi. 1). Contrast this with God's law of increase and improvement. (b) Costly (ver. 14, "spent all").—No fortune will ever satisfy the craving of an unregenerate heart. Sad that so much should be spent for so little. Compare the prophet's "why do ye spend?" (Isa. lv. 2). (c) Licentious (ver. 30, "harlots").—This sin lower than earthliness, and but a step removed from devilishness. See "earthly, sensual, devilish" (James iii. 15). (d) An experience of privation (ver. 14, "want").—See how to the wicked God sends want (Amos iv. 6). Trace the mercy of God in this. (e) Of degradation (ver. 15, "swine").—"We feel at once," says Professor Plumptre, "the shudder that would pass through the hearers of this parable as they listened to these words." (See Isa. lxv. 4.) (f) Of isolation (ver. 16, "no man").—They could have helped, but would not. In the work of saving a soul, men could not help if they would. Here man is shut up to God; yet he needs no other helper. Compare David's "No man," and "I cried unto Thee, O Lord" (Ps. cxlii. 4, 5).

(3) Look at Him Thinking of Home (ver. 17—19).—Destitution led to reflection. "Came to himself." Reason began to do the work for which it was designed. His passions, ungratified, lost something of their power. The flesh left without provision suffers weakness. See here the wisdom of Rom. xiii. 14. Without fleshly gratification the poor wanderer is without all gratification, and in this plight he thinks of home. When he thinks of home he thinks (a) Of plenty (ver. 17); (b) Of parental love (ver. 18); (c) Of returning (ver. 18, "I will arise").—See the determination of this "I will." (d) Of his personal unfitness to be there (ver. 18, "I have sinned").—The confession he then frames reveals his sense of sin as having been personal—against his father—bold and daring ("against heaven"), and as having deprived him of all claim upon his father's regard. (e) Of offering himself as a servant (ver. 19, "Make me," &c.).

(4) Look at Him Returning Home (ver. 20, "He arose").—Comp. "He arose" with "I will arise." Many get as far as "I will arise," but no further. Note that his return was (a) A personal act.—He arose himself. He wasn't carried nor driven. It may be said he was drawn, but nothing more. Coming to Christ is always a personal act. (b) A personal act involving personal effort.—"He arose." It was a long journey. (Comp. "Far country.") Salvation not the result of personal effort (Titus iii. 5). Yet no salvation without it (Luke xiii. 24). (c) Empty-handed—(Comp. "Spent all," ver. 14). Whatever he had originally, he had nothing now. (Comp. "He that hath no money," Isa. lv. 1.)

(5) Let us Look at how he was Welcomed Home (ver. 20—24).—The welcome was (a) Prompt (ver. 20, "Great way off"); (b) Hearty (ver. 20, "Kissed him," cp.); (c) Forgiving ("the son said" with "but the father said," vv. 24, 25); (d) Bountiful (ver. 22, 23); best robe, ring, shoes, and fatted calf; (e) Joyful (ver. 24, 25); music, dancing, &c. The remainder of the parable is a rebuke of the churlish spirit of the Pharisees, revealed in the fault they found with Jesus for receiving sinners and eating with them.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, July 29.

THE TABERNACLE.

Exod. xl. 1—16; Golden Text, Rev. xxi. 3.

Place.—The encampment before Sinai. Time.—The preparations for the Tabernacle were made during the last five or six months of their first year's sojourn in the wilderness; and the Tabernacle itself was put up on the first anniversary of the Exodus.

Parallel Accounts.—Exod. xxv. 1—28, xxx. 1—21, xxxvi. 1—39. The Anointing.—Exod. xxix. 1—37, xxx. 21—38; Lev. viii. 1—30. Exposition.—Heb. ix. 1—28.

The Intent and Design of the Tabernacle.—Its name: tabernacle, from Latin tabernaculum, a tent. It was the movable dwelling-place of Jehovah. But it was meant to be far more than a meeting-place between God and his people—far more than a place of worship. It was also to be, both as a whole and in every detail, a picture, a symbol, a type, a visible parable, of Jesus Christ and his salvation. Now, a symbol, or type, to be of any use, must be very exact, for a very slight alteration in the type may mean a great difference in the thing signified in it; just as the change of one letter in a word may alter its meaning entirely. This was no doubt the reason why every detail of the plan of the Tabernacle was revealed to Moses by God (Exod. xxv.—xxviii.; Heb. viii. 2, 5. "See, saith He, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the Mount.") "Moses was no more left to settle the plan and the furniture than Noah was left to settle the colours of the rainbow."—Parker. Teachers will do well to make this Divine authority of the Mosaic type very clear at the outset. Also how wonderful it is that God should have given so complete, and minute, and exact, a few series of pictures of spiritual things more than 1500 years before the spiritual things they typified could be properly understood. The writing of the law by God on tables which He Himself had made was not more wonderful than the institution of these symbolical ordinances.

Let us suppose ourselves approaching the Tabernacle from the East. We come first to

The Court (ver. 8).—It is a space 150 ft. long by 75 wide, enclosed by curtains of plain white linen, 7½ ft. high. These are hung from pillars of accacia wood, which are set in sockets of copper, are connected by silver rods, and their capitals overlaid with silver. But at the end of this court which faces us, i.e., its front, or Eastern end, the plain curtain gives place, for a space of 30 ft., to one made of finer linen, richly embroidered with gold and colours. This curtains forms the "court gate" (ver. 8), and is of the same pattern and material as the curtain that hangs at the entrance to the Holy Place.

Signification.—The Court stands for the Church, the people of God in their separation from the world; for no Gentile could enter that court. The white curtains that effect this separation teach that the way to be separate is to be better, purer, holier. The fine embroidered curtain at the entrance tells of Christ, the Way (John xiv. 6).

Entering the Court by this "Court door," we come first to the Altar of Burnt Offering (ver. 6).—Often called the brazen altar. It was 7½ ft. square and 4½ high. On it were burnt the whole burnt offerings, and other animal sacrifices, to the Lord. Every morning and every evening a fresh victim was laid upon it, and its fire never went out.

Signification.—The suffering death of Christ on behalf, and in the stead, of sinners. It was the first object that met one approaching the Tabernacle; so there is no approaching God in peace, and no acceptable worship, except through Christ crucified. "Without shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. ix. 11—14, x. 1—9). Every Israelite could approach the altar; so every believer has an interest in the death of Christ.

Passing the brazen altar, we come to the Laver (ver. 7).—A huge case of brass (or copper) filled with water. If we would enter the holy place, we must draw some of this water and wash both hands and feet. This laver was made from the mirrors of the women of the camp, given as free-will offerings.

Signification.—The moral cleansing that goes with true pardon, and which is necessary to all who would draw nigh to God. "Redemption through his blood" leads to washing, to change of heart and life.

Having lost guilt at the altar, and impurity at the Cross, we now enter the Holy Place.—It is a chamber 30 ft. by 15, with the earth for floor, and the curtains for roof. We enter by a curtain, the counterpart of the "court door." The walls are made of boards of accacia (shittim) wood, overlaid with gold, and set in sockets of silver. This silver was the only thing in the whole structure which was not a freewill offering. It was composed of the half shekel which every male was bound to give as atonement money (Exod. xxx. 11—16).

Signification.—The curtain at the entrance tells of Jesus Christ, by whom we draw near to God. Everything told of Him: in his Temple doth everything tell of his glory. The common accacia wood spoke of his humanity: the pure gold overlaying it, of his divinity. The only light in the Holy Place came from the candlestick, which prefigured Jesus, the Light of the World.

The Furniture of the Holy Place.—On the right stood the Table of Shew-Bread (ver. 4). It was 2 ft. 3 in. high, 1½ ft. wide, and 3 ft. long, and was made of accacia, overlaid with gold. "The table was furnished with two vessels for bread, two for frankincense (spoons, Exod. xxv. 29), and probably two for wine (covers and bowls, Exod. xxv. 29, for the drink offering, which always accompanied the meat offering), all of gold. Upon the platters were twelve loaves of bread, six on each, representing the twelve tribes; and on the top of each pile was a small saucer of frankincense. The bread was renewed every Sabbath, the stale loaves being eaten by the priests on the spot."

Signification.—Christ, the Bread of Life (John vi. 51). Also, in the presence of God, his people are to find a home with a table spread. We have here a prefiguring of the Lord's Supper. But more clearly still of the everlasting feast in heaven.

On the left stood the Golden Candlestick (ver. 4).—This was made of a talent of pure gold, and cost at least £35,000.

Signification.—Christ, the Light. There was no other. Secondarily, his Church, shining before God. The cheerfulness of the Divine presence—there is both light and food—"The Lamb is the light."

Immediately in front, towards the holy of holies, stands the Golden Altar of Incense (ver. 5).—It was 3 ft. high, and 1½ ft. square, and was made of accacia wood, overlaid with gold. The priest burned incense upon it morning and evening. On each occasion the fire was brought from the brazen altar outside, in a golden censer.

Signification.—(1) Christ, and his intercessions for his people. (2) The incense tells of the prayers of saints. (3) The fire came from the brazen altar: so the inspiration for true worship—the fire comes from an understanding of the dying love of Christ. (4) The altar is Christ: by Him alone worship is acceptable.

We shall now enter the Holy of Holies, separated from the Holy Place by a splendid embroidered veil—another type of Christ. This is the "veil of the Temple," which was rent at his death. The Holiest Place is a chamber 15 ft. every way. Its only furniture is the Ark of the Testimony (ver. 3). This was a chest of accacia (3 ft. 9 in. by 1 ft. 3 in. by 1 ft. 3 in,), plated with fine gold within and without. Its lid—the Mercy-seat—was solid gold; and on it were the two cherubims, with outstretched wings shadowing the Mercy-seat, also of pure gold. On this Mercy-seat the High Priest sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice, and from it the glory of God shone as "He communed with him." Within the Ark were the Tables of the Law, a golden pot of manna, and Aaron's rod that budded.

Signification.—The Ark symbolised Christ—in whom God can meet men in mercy and forgiveness. The Law was within the Ark: so the Law was perfectly honoured in the heart-life of Jesus. Also, Mercy rested on Law, as the Mercy-seat rested on the tables of the Law. But between the Law and the glorious symbol of God, the Shekinah, was the blood of the sacrifice. So only through the atoning death—the blood of Christ—can mercy and truth meet together.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THIS Mission is as usual active in promoting tent meetings in various parts of London and the country. The wintry weather which has prevailed of late proved a serious obstacle; but, in spite of this hindrance, services have been held at a small village, where the villagers have manifested great interest, coming in large numbers, and filling the tent, which will hold about 300. Many appeared impressed, and gave evidence of conversion. At in Oxfordshire, the work has been going on very prosperously; here also the tent was crowded, and persons came forward for private conversation on spiritual matters. Of some great hope is entertained that they have really passed from death to life. At Great Barford, two miles from Deddington, whence the tent was removed, services were commenced last week. Another tent has been erected at

in which services were commenced on Sunday, 15. Much interest is manifested by local friends, who are devoting themselves heartily to the work. At services were started on Sunday, 15, under circumstances of an encouraging nature, and great expectations are entertained for the future. At Percy-road, off Carlton-road, services have been held on four nights weekly, with addresses by Mr. George Hucklesby, Mr. H. Veasey, and other friends.

It is expected that in a few days another tent will be in full operation at Folkestone, where services of a similar kind have been held in former years with encouraging results, and where, more recently, the Town Hall has been occupied by the Mission.

All communications to be addressed to the Director, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—Dear Sir,—I propose leaving England in the middle of August for a visit to Canada: (1) To recruit my health, after great strain of labour, and (2) to start our Railway Mission in the Dominion. Friends on the other side may address letters to me at Poste Restante, Montreal. May I ask your readers not to forget the Home Mission, needing help just now.

Yours faithfully, D. SPENCER, Sec.
18, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

SEAMEN IN NEW ZEALAND.—For many years now, Mr. R. A. Falconer has been engaged in important work among the seamen of Dunedin and Port Chalmers. He is known in many circles of Christian activity in this country, and, since leaving for the Antipodes twenty-five years ago, has had a hand in many good movements. His present charge is the Port Chalmers Rest, with an active participation in evangelisation in Dunedin and district. Mr. Falconer, "the seamen's missionary," is at present rallying his friends, in order that, if possible, the freehold of the Rest may be purchased.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—With reference to the proposed mission hall in the East of London, Rev. John Wilkinson, director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, says in a circular recently issued:—"We have long thought how helpful it would be to our work in London if we had one central mission hall large enough to embrace all the departments of our work. Of course the Convalescent Home at Highgate, the Inquirer's Home, and the Children's Home on Newington-green, would remain as they are. We desire, if the Lord will, to have a building that will accommodate our Medical Mission, attached to which we would like a small hospital with ten or twelve beds, and with one doctor and a nurse resident. Rooms for Gospel meetings, prayer-meetings, sewing classes, night school, reading rooms, rooms for special lectures and tea meetings, indeed every accommodation for reaching the largest possible number with the Gospel of Christ. The estimated cost for the freehold ground, and the building and furniture, is not less than £10,000. A friend who knows the work well has promised the first £1000.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

CONTRIBUTIONS are now urgently needed to sustain this MISSION OF MERCY to Young Women and Girls.

OPEN DOORS have been kept for the reception of the Friendless, and the Rescue of the Fallen, FOR MORE THAN 30 YEARS.

8,747 Young Women have been admitted to the Reformatory Homes.

3,148 Girls in their teens have been admitted to Preventive Homes.

In the year 1860, a Reformatory Home was established at Holloway, which has worked, with God's manifest blessing, until the present time; and on the principle that the Committee have just purchased (for £750) the Lease of a very Commodious House in the

which will be adapted as an extension of the

PREVENTIVE HOME WORK.

The increase of Missionary effort lends happily to the rescue of very many Young Innocent Girls who otherwise might fall into evil ways.

Out of a total of 616 APPICATIONS for admission received since last January, 285 were on behalf of Young Girls—PREVENTIVE CASES.

The Homes sustained by the funds of this Institution provide for more than 200 INMATES.

£1,000 IN CONTRIBUTIONS is needed to maintain the Homes during the autumn months, and Donations towards this amount are earnestly solicited, IN SUMS LARGE OR SMALL, according to the convenience of sympathisers.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., will, as usual, kindly take charge of Gifts.

ZENANA BIBLE & MEDICAL MISSION.
Or Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, in co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

THE OBJECT OF THE SOCIETY IS THREEFOLD, VIZ.:—

1. To send to the women of India the Gospel, by means of female missionaries.
2. To alleviate their sufferings in sickness, and minister to their spiritual need, through the agency of duly qualified lady medical missionaries.
3. To promote education, especially among the higher classes, based on Holy Scripture.

The agencies it employs are:—

1. English lady Zenana missionaries.
2. Fully-qualified lady medical missionaries.
3. Eurasian and native assistants, Bible-women, nurses, &c.

The medical staff at present consists of the following:—

Miss ALICE K. MARSTON, L.K.Q.C.P.I.
Miss MARY PAILTHORPE, M.B. London.

Others will have obtained their diplomas by next year.

There are 120,000,000 of women in India, one-third of whom are computed to be shut up in Zenanas. They can, therefore, only be reached by means of female agents.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Society's income has nearly doubled during the last seven years, and that its operations have considerably more than doubled, the present income is altogether inadequate if the appeals and calls from India for more missionaries are to meet with any response. £1,000 additional income must be raised during this year to carry on efficiently present operations. The Committee earnestly APPEAL for CONTRIBUTIONS towards this sum.

Donations and subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, the Lord Kinnaird, or by the Secretary, 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

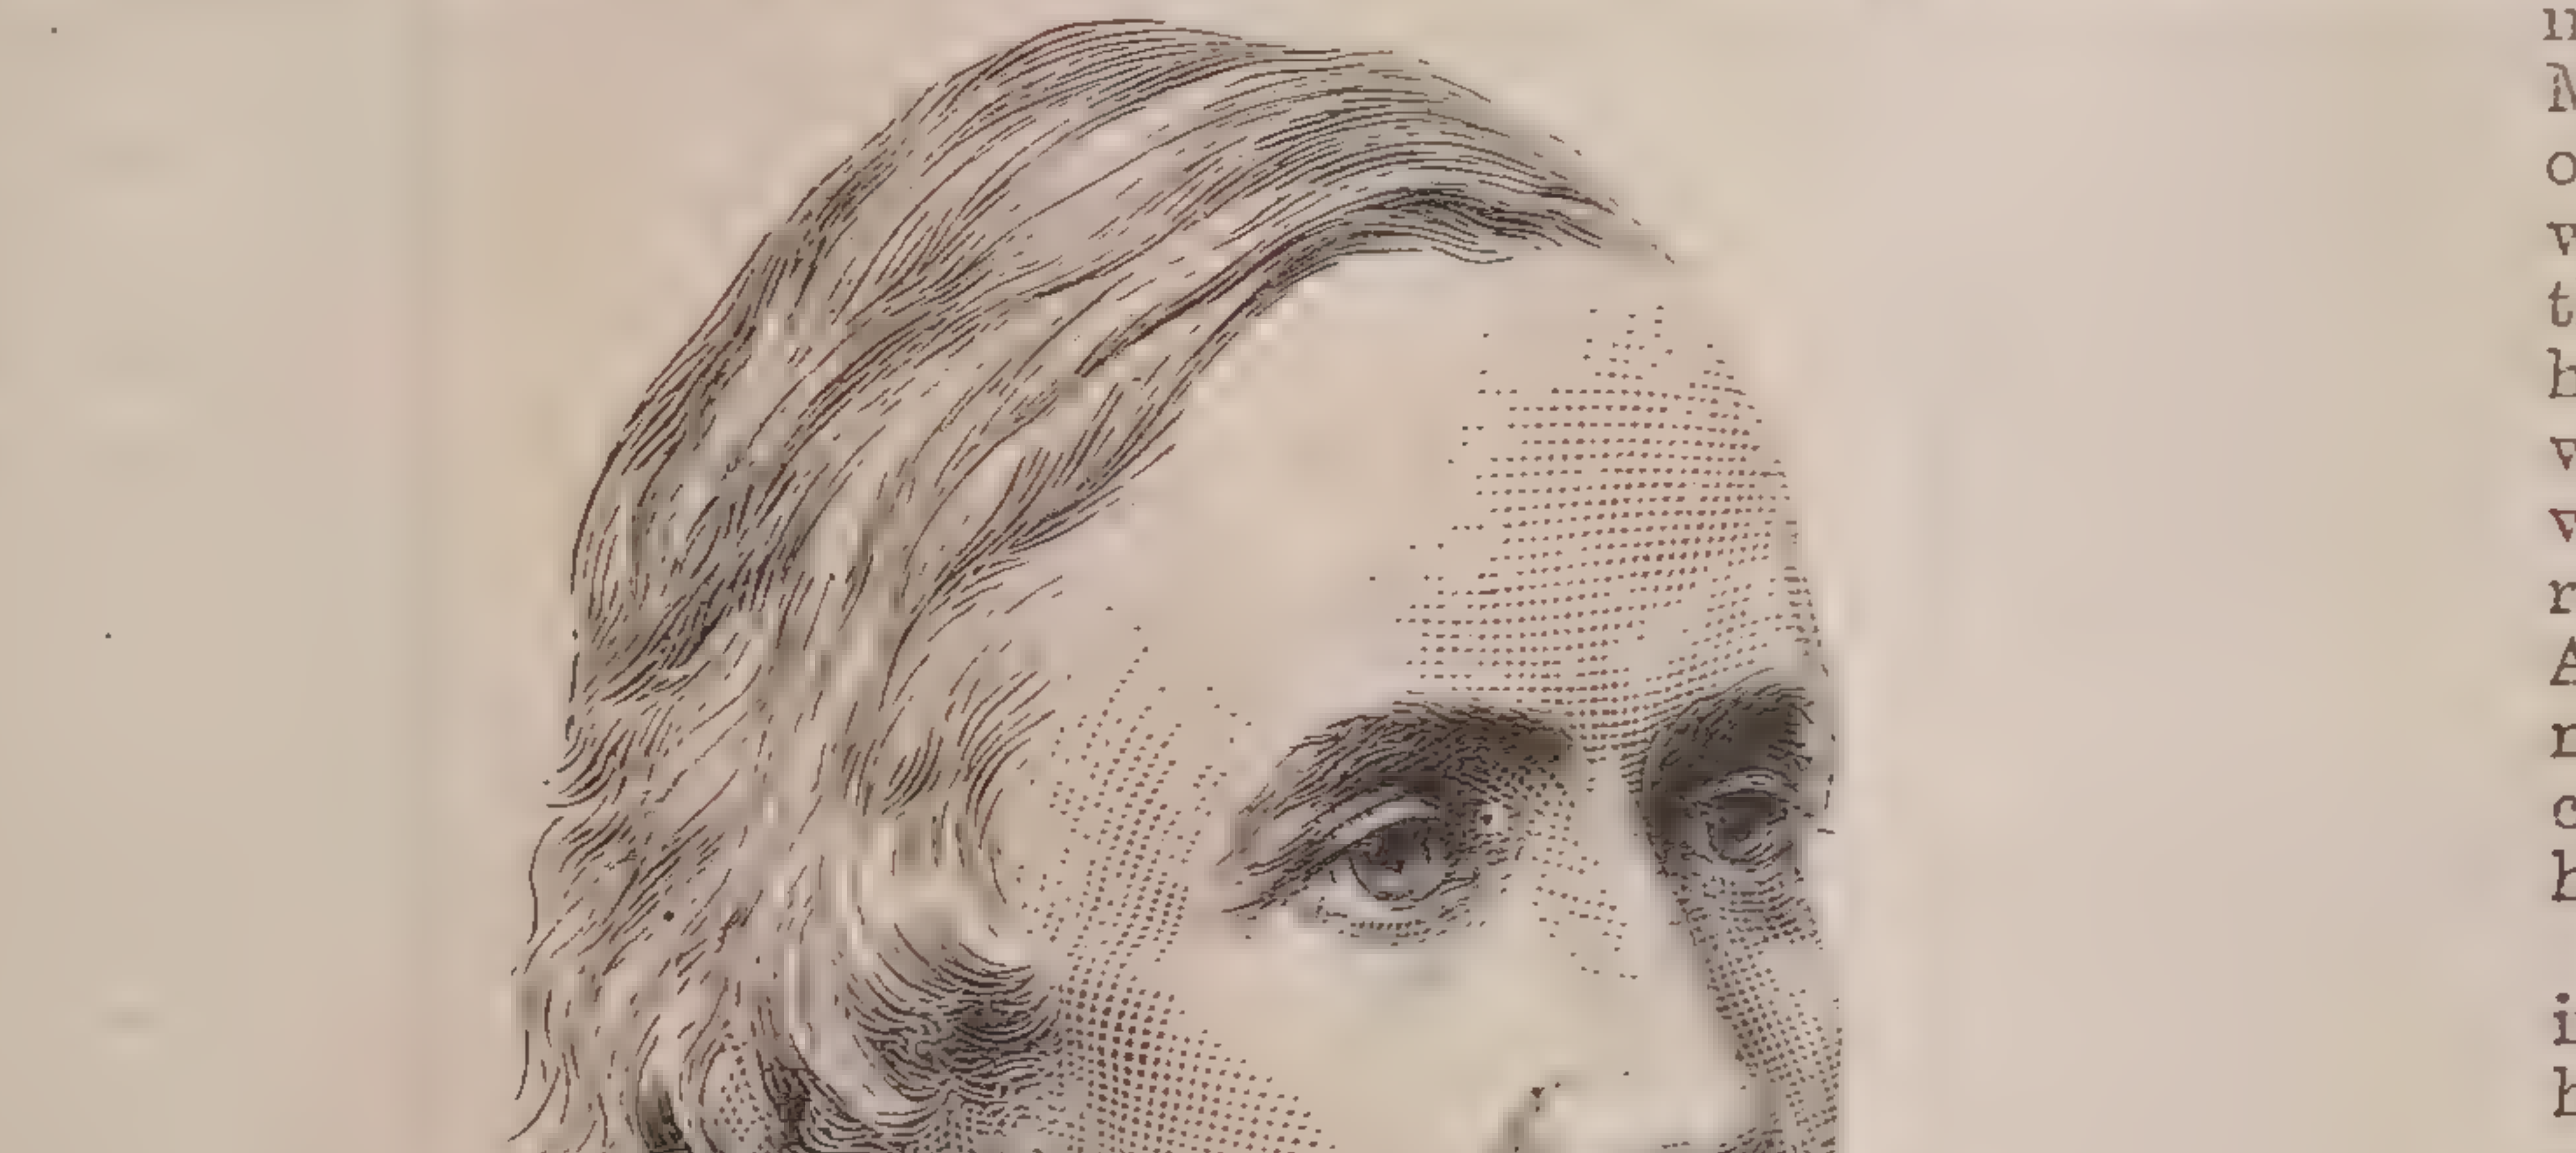
THE LATE

CANON T. D. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.

IN the quiet little town of Keswick, nestling in the broad valley of the Derwent, between the lake and the hills, an annually-recurring event is taking place this week. For a number of days the ordinary tourist, whose sole object is rest or changed activity, is displaced. There is an invasion of a thousand and more of earnest and purposeful individuals who fill every available room in the town, and pour in periodical streams through the streets with Bible and hymn book under arm. These people are not in search of happiness, for the proportion of bright and cheerful faces is very large. What they seek is holiness, and they have come to this spot from all parts of the United Kingdom, because here is held the "Keswick Convention for the Promotion of Practical Holiness."

As the special aspects of Christian truth which have been chiefly emphasised at these gatherings have become known as "Keswick" teaching, it may be of service to our readers to set before them some sort of account of the man with whose name this Convention has been in the past prominently connected. For eight successive years Rev. Canon HARFORD-BATTERSBY shared with his beloved friend, Mr. Robert Wilson, of Carlisle, the honour—for so he esteemed it—of inviting all who loved the Lord Jesus to come together before God in order to begin or to deepen their practical experience of that holiness which is set forth in the New Testament as the true character of the Christian. For seven years he himself presided at all the chief meetings of the Convention; and though now his spirit has been withdrawn from earthly ken to join the invisible company of the saints, an air of holy peace and calm seems still to be wafted from the churchyard where his honoured dust now lies.

As a volume of the nature of a biography is being prepared we will not anticipate its general contents.* We will rather choose for notice such points as will illustrate the action he took in his closing years with regard to the doctrine and practice of holiness.



(From Copyright Photograph by Mr. Trelle, Victoria Hall, Norwich.)

First, it was no excitable youth, carried away by a shallow wave of emotion, who rose amidst a vast assembly at Oxford on September 3, 1874, to testify of the "simplicity of this way of faith" upon which he confessed he was then for the first time entering in full consciousness. Born in 1822, and ordained in 1847, he was then fifty-two years of age, and had passed twenty-seven years in the ministry of the Church of England. And if youth did not mislead him neither did an unrestrained and excitable temperament. He came of a Quaker stock upon his father's side of the family, and the tone and temper of the Society of Friends was still largely maintained in the home of his youth. Moreover, the early death of his sweet young mother while he was scarcely three months old deprived him of an influence which would have been most valuable in expanding and ripening his character. Accordingly, over reserve, not effusiveness, was a characteristic feature of his disposition.

Nor, secondly, was it inexperience which led him to mistake earnestness for truth, and zeal for knowledge. His early opportunities showed him what good there was in Quakerism. His college days fell during the height of the Tractarian movement, while Newman and Manning were preaching in St. Mary's. Among the crowd of listening faces there might often be discerned the pure, open, earnest countenance of the young undergraduate of Baliol. One of the sermons of the latter was largely instrumental in fixing in his mind the desire for the ministry of the Church as his vocation in life. Then when the life of a banker, which his father and uncle wished for him, became by force of circumstances undesirable, he betook himself to such preparation as was open to him before he finally took orders. Again and again he regretted that his ministerial education had not been more complete. But he had had before him, ever since leaving Harrow, the prospect of becoming a clergyman. This was his cherished aim, and though several times set aside in deference to others, the hope of it was never wholly abandoned.

Consequently, when he entered upon the work of his first curacy, he had passed through the important formative years from twenty to twenty-five, yielding varied experiences of foreign travel and of college and country life: not with the thoughtlessness of a worldly mind, but with a high purpose and hope to govern his judgment and control his acts. In a large parish of a dockyard town he came face to face with the hard realities of life: the routine of work, the coldness of Christians, the indifference of the many, the divided energies of the few.

* The biography has been undertaken by one of his sons. There are very copious diaries and journals, extending over a period of forty years. It is hoped that the volume will be ready by Christmas.

After two years in the south, he migrated to Keswick, where he found, as incumbent of St. John's, that remarkable man, Frederic Myers, from whom, at least in part, he must have imbibed that spirit of large-hearted toleration which was as far as possible removed from indifference to error.

On Mr. Myers' death, in 1851, he succeeded to the living, which he held till his own death. His marriage, in 1854, opened up for him the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears, the comforts and trials, the enduring peace and the disturbing anxieties, of family life. The little town, of which not quite half fell within the limits of his parish, provided a sphere for the exercise of all the love and patience and wisdom he could command. It was long before he could reconcile himself to the hard and cold outside which the Cumbrian folk showed, even to one so gentle as himself. Here he found that in general the Nonconformists had a simplicity and reality of spiritual experience which he too often missed amongst Church of England people. Feeling that an exclusive spirit is a great barrier to blessing, he early established in Keswick the observance of the Week of Prayer; and for that week in the year, at all events, the one grand fundamental unity of living faith in the living Son of God swallowed up all differences on other matters.

His constant theme as a preacher was personal religion. No one could say that he spake that which he did not know, or that he lifted up any standard of devotion which was not his own ideal to aim at. But, honoured as he might be by all who knew him, as an unusually consistent servant of Christ, his journals bear painful witness to his own dissatisfaction with his spiritual condition. The truth of his fundamental convictions he never doubted. In the world-wide Evangelical Alliance, which he warmly supported, and in the Diocesan Evangelical Union, of which he was the moving spirit, he showed his loyalty to his principles, and his desire that such principles should be more widely and heartily embraced. But his papers show that he felt rather than saw that these principles were incomplete: they were good so far as they went, but they did not cover all the ground; the "truth as it is in Jesus" must be something more fully meeting the need of man.

Accordingly, after his mind had been turned by various publications to the question of holiness by faith, he made his way to the Union meetings at Oxford, and there learned a secret of blessing through full surrender of heart and active appropriation of Christ by faith, which he never afterwards forgot. From this time the sense of despair, of helpless infirmity, of unsatisfied longing disappeared. A new joy and a new power had been discovered. This new discovery brought with it a new responsibility to make it known. Feeling this deeply, he first used what opportunities offered themselves to give a sober and dispassionate testimony to the value of the new form of teaching, and the new methods of imparting it. And then, in co-operation with Mr. Wilson, he created a new and special opportunity by erecting a great tent in his own parish for meetings for the promotion of Scriptural holiness. And from that year (1876) to this, without intermission, this Convention has been annually held.

His last invitation was written during his fatal illness, in 1883. But though his death on the eve of that gathering cut short his work on earth, he had presided long enough to give to the Keswick Convention a character of its own: by the quietness, earnestness, sobriety, and naturalness of his manner, he helped to redeem it from the charge of excitement; and by his serenity, unselfishness, teachableness, and love, he was able to establish a harmony of mind and feeling among the speakers that brought glory to God and good to souls in a very unusual degree.

"BY THE WAYSIDE.'

One cold rainy day in May, 1883, we came down a long hill, somewhat wearied with house-to-house visiting in the rain, and found a cottager with a boiling kettle willing to take us in. We found her desirous to know the truth, and on leaving one of the party said, "Friend, Jesus says to you, 'Come.' Will you with your heart say, 'Yes, Lord, I come.'" She assented, and, believing in her sincerity, one posted her Miss F. R. Havergal's "Royal Invitation."

Some time after we called again, to hear that the family had left. Their only whereabouts known was a large county forty miles away. A year or two after an invitation came to us to visit this county, and one evening our kind hostess pressed us to visit again a small village where opposition had been shown. We went, and had a well-attended meeting. At the close we were saying "Good-bye" to the people, when a woman came up and said, "Don't you know me?" We were ignorant, but soon found it was our entertainer on the rainy day. Both she and her husband were blessed by our rainy day visit, and were helping to the best of their ability in mission work in the village. Some months ago still more cheering news reached us of the little place and our friends.

"THE LARGER HOPE."

It is hardly possible to exaggerate the dangers which must result from the teaching of what is called "the larger hope." The peril is not diminished, but rather increased, by the fact that it is often associated with otherwise evangelical teaching. We deplore it by whomsoever taught; but in the pulpits devoted to the preaching of non-evangelical doctrines it is manifestly less dangerous than when men who have won a position of influence as evangelical add this to their teaching. In the choice of some of its advocates and defenders we think that much of the subtlety of the serpent is displayed.

(1) Among other evils resulting from it, not the least is the doubt it suggests as to the inspiration and infallibility of Scripture. Those who have been accustomed to believe in the sufficiency and sole authority of the Word of God in all matters of faith can hardly retain that conviction while accepting the doctrine of "the larger hope." For its warmest advocate would hardly dare to claim that Scripture anywhere asserts it; while much of the teaching of our Lord and his Apostles seems to contradict it. To many it will assume the form of an addition to the message God has given, and what becomes then of the doctrine of the sufficiency of the Scripture? And since this addition seems to contradict other portions of the Word of God, what portions are afterwards likely to be accepted as infallibly true? Is it wise to run such solemn risks for the sake of declaring what, after all, on the showing of its advocates themselves, only "may be," when the Gospel contains so many verities which our hearers need to know and feel? Men should pause before they teach anything that would weaken the authority of the Divine Word.

(2) It is inevitable, also, that this doctrine will weaken the force of the warnings and appeals of the Gospel. There are many uttered by our Lord Himself, which could not be uttered at all by those who encourage men to "faintly trust the larger hope." Nor could such teachers repeat the terrible threatenings of the Apostle against those who "obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. i. 6—10). The lie of the serpent in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die," finds its modern echo in the "larger hope"; but the echo is all the more dangerous, because uttered by those who are accounted preachers of the truth. Strange that ambassadors for God, who are sent to rebel subjects to offer terms of peace, should destroy the value of their own message by even a suggestion, that if the terms are not accepted, the threatened punishment may not follow!

(3) This doctrine cannot fail to strengthen men in the habit of delay. There is no greater hindrance to men receiving the Gospel than the spirit which says: "The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off" (Ezek. xii. 27). The prospect of another opportunity in the future leads to present neglect of the Saviour's claims. But let men get hold of the idea that there is another chance hereafter for those who continue impenitent here; that, after all, there is some way of escape for those who do neglect the great salvation, the result can easily be guessed. Procrastination will become easier to them; the "more convenient season" will be put forward into the future world, and they will be strengthened in their present rejection of Christ.

These are serious results to charge upon a doctrine which is becoming increasingly popular. The question of continuing in fellowship with the advocates of this doctrine is troubling the minds of many who value, above all things, faithfulness to God's Word, while they tremble at the prospect of further divisions. Ezekiel was called to "prophesy against the prophets of Israel," because they "strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life" (Ezek. xiii. 2, 22). Are not the advocates of this doctrine doing the same? And if they are strengthened in this by the fellowship of others, the question of separation must soon be decided. GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.

IN one of our Northern towns a short time since, a Congregational minister, in conversation, said, in regard to his approaching Sunday-school anniversary, "I select the hymns; I do not leave it to the superintendent or teachers." "Why not?" was the inquiry. "Well, very likely they would select hymns that I object to have sung in my church." "What hymns do you refer to?" was the next question. "Why, such hymns as 'Rock of Ages, cleft for me,' or 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' or 'There is a fountain filled with blood.' I am not going to have such hymns sung in my church." The Holy Spirit with his needed prescience might well cause Peter to write, "But there were false prophets also among the people, as among you also there shall be false teachers, who shall privily bring in damnable heresies, denying the Lord that bought them, bringing upon themselves swift destruction" (2 Peter ii. 1).

Here is a man who evidently denies that we are "redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 18, 19). Here is deliberate refusal to use hymns which enshrine the chief truth of the Gospel, and which have been accepted for centuries by the whole church of God; and yet, sir, I suppose the Congregational Union is utterly powerless to remove this deceiver. There can be no question that the Scripture I have quoted applies in this case with incisive force. This man "privily brought in his damnable heresy." Had he clearly and honestly stated to the church of which he is pastor that he did not intend to have the hymns named sung, the church would never have elected him.

Of course, I can understand pastors of churches, in these days of departure from "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," drifting into the denial of Christ's sacrifice for sin; but in such cases moral integrity requires that they should at once resign their position. To enter a church, occupy its platform, and then subvert its recognised doctrinal teaching, is dishonesty of the worst possible type. I observe that the R.V. says of these men, they bring in sects of perdition (2 Pet. ii. 1).

Why do not these men act honestly? Let them take neutral ground, and propound their modern vagaries there. The spread and working of this accursed leaven is undermining the fundamental truths of the Gospel, and is defiling and corrupting in many directions. Let us make no mistake, nor suffer the cry of "Peace, peace" to arrest the watchman's needed alarm.

The difficulty of the position must be recognised. Men so utterly lost to honesty and truth, take courage from the fact that no Court exists which has power to stay their nefarious practices. They are aware, too, that if such a Court existed, and any man should formulate against them a definite charge of heresy, they would immediately become objects of sympathy, and be lauded up to the skies, as men suffering in the interests of liberty and truth.

That is how far we have come in these enlightened times. Certainly, if any man, however prominent, either could or would, in defence of revealed truth, prefer such a charge, he would be written down a narrow-minded bigot and a persecutor of his brethren. If any man wishes to be held up to ridicule and have opprobrium heaped upon him in these last days of what our Lord called "a wicked and adulterous age," let him either prosecute for heresy, or stand immovably for the defence and maintenance of the whole Gospel of Christ Jesus the Lord.

I freely confess that I have no anxiety for any prosecution for heresy. It is a law court rather than an ecclesiastical court which is needed. It should be practical on the ground of a gross breach of trust to proceed against these men. At present I see nothing open to us but resolute protest by word and pen.

There can be no question that the tolerance of these men in the denominational unions will cause many faithful men to come out of them. Better that ten denominational unions should perish than the great truth that "we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. i. 7), should be denied, hidden, ignored, or misrepresented. It is not some theory of the atonement which is denied, but the doctrine itself; and "if the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do?"

DR. MARCUS DODS ON SCEPTICISM.

WE have received the following letters respecting the article under this title in our last:—

MY DEAR SIR,—Allow me, in a single word, while very busy, to express my extreme satisfaction with your article this week on Dr. Dods's paper. He promulgated very much the same views at a Free Church Conference in Glasgow a few years ago, and was taken to task for them publicly, e.g., by our United Presbyterian Church minister, Dr. D. Young, of Glasgow; and yet it was Dr. M. Dods that the Committee in London applied to for a paper on a subject which was almost sure to give further publicity to his objectionable and dangerous views. Dr. Dods is a learned man, and said to be a good man; but he seems to be sadly lacking in judgment, not to speak of other things. A SCOTCH MINISTER.

SIR,—May I be allowed to point out one thing in connection with the article on "Dr. Marcus Dods and Scepticism," in your issue of June 20?

The writer of the article, in commenting on Dr. Dods's statement that Christ required of men only that they should follow Him, says that "'Jesus Christ and Him crucified,' 'Jesus and the Resurrection,' was an impossible Gospel then." That is to say he admits that what our Lord Himself preached to men was a Gospel that did not include, for instance, the Atonement.

Now our Lord said He offered men "rest," "peace," "forgiveness." He said He was "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." The modern evangelical—I use the word in a respectful sense, and I presume the writer of your article comes under the designation—says these things are given only by a Gospel that preaches the Atonement. But they were offered and given at a time when such a Gospel was "an impossible Gospel."

The logical conclusion seems irresistible. These blessings can be had without the preaching of that or any other special doctrine. Your writer's further statements about the Apostle's doctrine—which opens a large question—do not at all invalidate this conclusion.

Surely what men still need is no more than "rest" and "peace." Surely our souls cry out only to be shown "the way," taught "the truth," and to have "life" given to them. If this need could be and was met by Jesus Christ at the time when "the Gospel of the crucified Christ" was "impossible," why may it not be still so met, humbly but hopefully, by his ministers?

I am expressing no opinion as to the value or validity of the orthodox doctrine—a theological point. I am speaking solely to the point of its being essential to Gospel preaching and to Christianity. As a matter of simple fact, it was not essential either to Christ's preaching or to his Christianity. So preaching that does not hold to the forefront these special doctrines is not a "new path." Dr. Dods, rather than your writer, may quote Jeremiah's counsel: "Ask for the old paths and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls." In that very path to which Dr. Dods wishes the presentation of Christianity to return, Christ Himself walked, and preached that very "rest." (It is interesting to note that in one column Dr. Dods is charged with seeking "new paths," and in the next with "going back beyond Pentecost." As to the latter point, if we do not so go back, where is our personal Jesus?)

There are many other things in your article one might notice, but I do not wish to take up your space. I write this note to state a sincere difficulty in connection with your writer's criticism, and I hope it has not been stated unfairly or uncharitably.—I am, &c., A STUDENT.

It is obvious that the Gospel, as preached by the Apostles, and as summed up in "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and in "Jesus and the resurrection," was impossible before his death had taken place. But that atoning death had been foretold in all prophecy from God's sentence, "Thou shalt bruise his heel"; to John's testimony, "Behold the Lamb of God." It was foreshadowed in all the sacrifices, from the firstling of Abel's flock, to the paschal lamb slain and eaten the night before the crucifixion of our Lord.

The Son of Man had power on earth to forgive sins, and to give rest and peace, because He was about to make atonement for sin by his blood. He was, from the foundation of the world, the Lamb slain. God had honoured Him for four thousand years by the passing over of past sins, in the forbearance of God. And when He died, as the propitiation for sin, God's righteousness, in having so passed over the former sins, was made manifest.

The preaching which ignores the blood of Christ as the atonement for sin is a new path, inasmuch as the doctrine of the Old Testament is that, "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul"; and of the New that, "Without shedding of blood is no remission."

John the Baptist said of Jesus, "Behold the Lamb of God, which beareth away the sin of the world." And Jesus said of Himself, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." So that, when our correspondent represents Dr. Marcus Dods as wishing the presentation of Christianity to return to a path which is not marked by the blood of atonement, he returns not to the old path, but strays into a new one, of which the Bible knows absolutely nothing.

As to going back beyond Pentecost, our objection is not that Dr. Dods magnifies the earthly life of Christ, but that he separates it from the doctrine which flows out from his death and resurrection. Our answer to the question, "Where is our personal Jesus?" is, "In heaven." There Stephen saw Him standing, and prayed, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Thence he said to Saul of Tarsus, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." The personal Jesus of our friend is Jesus before his baptism into death, of which He said, "How am I straitened until it be accomplished." The personal Jesus of Paul is Christ, who "died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died and rose again for them. Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more." Peter's personal Jesus was the Christ by whose "precious blood we are redeemed, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot, by whom we do believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope might be in GOD."

Let me now ask my student-friend a question. Did the risen Saviour commission Paul to preach the Gospel, as stated in Acts xxvi. 16—18? If so, did Paul go beyond his commission, in preaching that "the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ"? If not, is it dealing rightly by the souls of men to ignore or to depreciate the testimony commanded by the risen Christ?

HOME TEACHING FOR THE BLIND.—There are now about sixty Associations established in the British Isles for the teaching of the blind, carrying on their work very much on the same lines as the Home Teaching Society for the Blind, of which the thirty-second annual report has just been published. This excellent Society has eighteen teachers, all but one of them blind, who last year paid 48,500 visits to the homes of the blind of London and suburbs. The Society sadly needs more supporters. ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XX.—HAGAR AND ISHMAEL CAST OUT.

GEN. xxi.

EVEN though we were hearing this story for the first time, and did not know of the terrible crisis to which we were approaching in the next chapter, we might be sure that something of the sort was imminent, and we should rest our conclusion on the fact of the stern discipline through which the great patriarch was called to pass. Faith is the expression of our inner moral life, and it cannot be exercised, in its loftiest form, so long as there is any obliquity of the heart, any hidden or unholy affection. These things must be cut away, or passed through the fiery discipline of sorrow, that, being freed from them, the heart may exercise that supreme faith in God which is the highest crown of human existence.

The Almighty Lover of souls knew the trial which awaited his child in the near future; and set Himself to prepare him for it, by ridding him of certain clinging inconsistencies, which would have paralysed the action of his faith, in the hour of trial. We have already seen how one of these, the secret compact between himself and Sarah, was exposed to the light and judged. We have now to see how one other matter, the patriarch's connection with Hagar and her child, was also dealt with by Him, who acts on us either as fuller's soap, or if that be not strong enough, as a refiner's fire.

In what way the presence of Hagar and Ishmael hindered the development of Abraham's noblest life of faith, we cannot entirely understand. Did his heart still cling to the girl who had given him his firstborn son? Was there any secret satisfaction in the arrangement, which had achieved one cherished purpose, though it had been unblessed by God? Was there any fear that if he were summoned to surrender Isaac, he would find it easier to do so, because, at any moment, he could fall back on Ishmael, as both son and heir? We cannot read all that was in his heart, but surely some such thoughts are suggested by the expressions which to this hour record the history of the anguish of this torn and lonely heart; as one darling idol after another was rent away, that it might be cast naked and helpless on the omnipotence of the Eternal God. "The thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight" (ver. 11).

Not a few who read these lines sigh to possess a faith like that which Abraham had; which staggers not through unbelief; a faith to which God cannot give a denial; a faith which can open and shut heaven, and to which all things are possible. But are you willing to pay the cost? The cost of suffering; the cost of rending from your heart all that would frustrate the operation of so glorious a principle; the cost of seeing one cherished idol after another cast out; the cost of being stripped even to nakedness of all the dear delights in which the flesh may have found pleasure. "Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto Him, We are able." You hardly realise all you mean when you say so much; but it shall be revealed to you step by step; and nothing shall be too difficult, all being measured out according to your strength by Him who knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. Let us not, then, dread the pruning-knife, because it is held by the hand of One who loves us infinitely, and who is seeking results that are to fill our hearts with eternal gratitude, and heaven with praise.

This final separation from Abraham of ingredients which would have been prejudicial to the exercise of a supreme faith was brought about by the birth of the long promised child, which is alluded to at the commencement of this chapter, and which led up to the crisis with which we are now dealing.

"The Lord visited Sarah as He had said, and the Lord did unto Sarah as He had spoken." It is impossible to trust God too absolutely. God's least word is a spar of imperishable wood driven into the Rock of Ages, which will never give, and on which you may hang your entire weight for evermore. "The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations."

But we must be prepared to wait God's time.—"Sarah bare Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time of which God had spoken unto him." God has his set times. It is not for us to know them; indeed, we cannot know them; we must wait for them. If God had told Abraham in Haran that he must wait for thirty years until he pressed the promised child to his bosom, his heart would have failed him. So, in gracious love, the length of the weary years was hidden, and only as it was nearly spent, and there were only a few more months to wait, God told him that "according to the time of life, Sarah should have a son" (xviii. 14). The set time came at last, and then the laughter which filled the patriarch's home made the aged pair forget the long and weary vigil. "And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare unto him, Isaac" (laughter). Take heart, waiting one, thou waitest for one who cannot disappoint thee; and who will not be five minutes behind the appointed moment; ere long "your sorrow shall be turned into joy."

"A woman, when she is in travail, hath sorrow, because her hour is come, but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish for joy that a man is born unto the world." That joy may give the clue to the unwonted outburst of song on the part of the happy and aged mother. The laughter of incredulity, with which she received the first intimation of her approaching motherhood (chap. xviii. 12), was now exchanged for the laughter of fulfilled hope. And she gave utterance to words that approached the elevation of a rhythmic chant, and which served as the model of that other song with which the virgin mother announced the advent of her Lord. So Sarah said, "God hath made me laugh." And long after, one of her daughters said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. For He that is mighty hath done for me great things, and holy is his name." Ah, happy soul, when God makes thee laugh! Then sorrow and crying shall flee away for ever, as darkness before the dawn.

The peace of Abraham's house remained at first unbroken, though there may have been some slight symptoms of the rupture which was at hand. The dislike which Sarah had manifested to Hagar, long years before, had never been extinguished, it had only smoldered in her bosom, waiting for some slight incident to stir it again into a blaze. Nor had the warm passionate nature of Hagar ever forgotten those hard dealings which had driven her forth, to fare as best she might in the inhospitable desert. Abraham must have been often sorely put to it to keep the peace between them. At last the women's quarters could conceal the quarrel no longer, and the scandal broke out into the open day.

The immediate occasion of this open rupture was the weaning of the young Isaac. "The child grew, and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feast the day that Isaac was weaned." But amid all the bright joy of that happy occasion, one shadow suddenly stole over the scene, and brooded on the mother's soul. Sarah's jealous eye saw Ishmael mocking. It was hardly to be wondered at. The lad had recently suffered a severe disappointment. He had grown up as the undisputed heir of all that camp, accustomed to receive its undivided loyalty, and it was very difficult to view with equanimity the preparations made in honour of the child that was destined to supersede him; and so, under the appearance of sportive jesting, he jeered at Isaac in a way which betrayed the bitterness of his soul; which indeed he was at no pains to conceal. This awoke all Sarah's slumbering jealousy; which may have often been severely tested during the last few years by Ishmael's assumption and independent bearing. She would stand it no longer. Why should she, the chieftain's wife, and mother of his heir, brook the insolence of a slave? And so she said unto Abraham with a sneer and the sting of the old jealousy, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son, for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac."

We cannot but recall the use which the great Apostle makes of this incident.—In his days the Jews, priding themselves on being the lineal descendants of Abraham, refused to consider it possible that any but themselves could be children of God, and the heirs of promise. They arrogated to themselves exclusive privileges and position. And when large numbers of Gentiles were born into the Christian Church beneath the first preaching of the Gospel, and claimed to be the spiritual seed, with all the rights pertaining thereunto; they who, like Ishmael, were simply born after the flesh, persecuted them which, like Isaac, were born after the Spirit. Everywhere the Jews set themselves to resist the preaching of the Gospel, which denied to them their exclusive privileges; and to harry those who would not enter the Church through the rites of Judaism. And, as the result, the Jewish nation was rejected, put aside, cast out. Succeeding ages have seen the building up of the church from among the once persecuted ones, whilst the children of Abraham have wandered in the wilderness fainting for the true water of life (Gal. iv. 29).

But there is a still deeper reference.—Hagar, the slave, who may even have been born in the Sinaitic Desert, with which she seems to have been so familiar, is a fit representative of the spirit of legalism and bondage, seeking to win life by the observance of the law, which was given from those hoary cliffs. "Hagar is the covenant of Mount Sinai in Arabia, which gendereth to bondage, and is in bondage with her children" (Gal. iv. 24, 25). Sarah, the free woman, on the other hand, represents the covenant of free grace; her children are love, and faith, and hope; they are not bound by the spirit of "must," but by the promptings of spontaneous gratitude; their home is not in the frowning clefts of Sinai, but in Jerusalem above, which is free, and is the mother of us all. Now, argues the Apostle, there was no room for Hagar and Sarah, with their respective children, in Abraham's tent. If Ishmael was there, it was because Isaac was not born. But as soon as Isaac came in, Ishmael must go out. So the two principles, of legalism, which insists on the performance of the outward rite of circumcision, and faith, which accepts the finished work of the Saviour, cannot co-exist in one heart. It is a moral impossibility. As well darkness co-exist with light, and slavery with freedom. So, addressing the Galatian converts, who were being tempted by Judaising teachers to mingle legalism and faith, the Apostle bade them follow the example of Abraham, and cast out the spirit of bondage which keeps the soul in one perpetual agony of unrest.

You, my readers, are trusting Christ; but, perhaps, you are living in perpetual bondage to your scruples, or you are always endeavouring to add some acts of obedience, by way of completing and assuring your salvation. Ah! it is a great mistake. Cease to worry about these legal matters. Do not always imagine that God's love to you depends on the performance of many minute Acts, concerning which there are no definite instructions given. Trust Christ. Realise his wonderful and complete salvation. Work not towards sonship, but from it. Cast out the bondwoman and her son. Live the free, happy life of Isaac, whose position is assured, and not that of Ishmael, whose position is dependent on his good behaviour. "The servant abideth not in the house for ever, but the son abideth ever."

The remaining history is briefly told.—With many a pang, as the vine bleeding copiously when the pruning knife is doing its work, Abraham sent Hagar and her child forth from his home, bidding them a last sad farewell. In the dim twilight they fared forth, before the camp was astir. The strong man must have suffered keenly as he put the bread into her hand, and with his own fingers bound the bottle of water on her shoulder, and kissed Ishmael once more. And yet he must not show Sarah how much he felt it. How many passages in our lives are only known to God!

Yet it was better so; and God provided for them both. When the mother's hopes were on the point of expiring, and the lad lay dying of thirst in the scorching noon, under the slender shade of a desert shrub, the Angel of God stayed her sobs, pointed out the well of water to which her tears had made her blind, and promised that her child should become a great nation. Ishmael would never have developed to his full stature if he had perpetually lived in the enervating luxury of Abraham's camp. There was not room enough there for him to grow. For him, as for us all, there was need of the free air of the desert, in which he should match himself with his peers, becoming strong by privation and want. That which seems like to break our hearts at the moment, turns out in after years to have been of God. "And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice."

One more weight was laid aside, and one more step taken in the preparation of God's friend for the supreme victory of his faith, which we are to consider in our next.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XVII.—"I DREAMT I WAS DEAD."

"I have had that bad boy in my black books for several years," said the Rector, "I was obliged to punish him in many ways, and at last, for the sake of the other boys, I expelled him from the school. I do not usually send a boy away for being bad, but this one is an exception. He is a most audacious fellow but I keep on praying for him."

The boy in question persisted in coming with other lads to the services in the church, and even remained behind to the after meetings.

One evening I ventured to speak to this uncultured youth; but, receiving very unsatisfactory answers, I left him to himself, but would not allow him to interfere with the other boys or hinder them. Upon another occasion I was led to speak kindly to him about his soul, and he let me go on so long without interruption that I really began to hope the word was making an impression upon him. Suddenly, to my surprise and disappointment, he turned towards me, and said, "I havn't heard a word you've been talking, and don't want to. You're not a-going to catch me like that—don't ye think it."

"I am sorry for you," I replied. "It will be your loss more than mine."

The following evening I happened to be preaching in another church, a mile or two further off. My young incorrigible was there also, but this time he was sitting alone, and, I thought, looking a little sad. After passing him by once or twice, I looked at him, and said, "You are here; you seem to like coming to church, wherever it is."

He did not answer, or even look up, so I continued, "I wonder whether you mean to give your heart to God."

He muttered, "I had a dream last night."

"Indeed!" I replied, "what was it about?"

He said, "I did not like it. I dreamt that I was dead, and being carried away to hell."

The poor boy had evidently not yet recovered from the fright he sustained in that dream. I said to him, "You know that dream must come true if you do not give up. You had better do so at once. Shall I pray with you?"

He made no answer. I said, "Have you been praying for yourself?"

"Yes, I have," he muttered in a sullen way, with his head still bent down, "as well as I could."

"What did you ask for?"

"I prayed God not to kill me yet."

"But what is the use of keeping you alive if you will go on in your bad ways, and set such a bad example to others? You had far better give up, I say."

"I will," he responded, in a mournful voice; "I didn't like my dream."

"Let us kneel down, then, at once. What is your prayer? What shall we ask for?"

"Ask the Lord God," said the boy, "to save me like Josey; he is downright good now. I should like to be like him."

"We need not ask God to save you after any particular pattern," I said: "you had better ask Him to save you, and let Him do it as He will."

"Oh, Lord God, do save me," he cried out. "I am bad, and I feel very bad; oh, do save me!"

I told him that God loved him, and would rather save him than not, and that Jesus Christ died for him. "He shed his blood on purpose to procure your pardon. If you believe this, thank Him for his love to you."

This wicked lad was soon changed, and brought from death into life. He was, as he said of himself, that happy that he could not help going to "tell the chaps about himself."

Now he attended the Bible-class where he used to be such a trouble, but in a very different spirit. He was a brand plucked out of the burning, and one who was not ashamed to manifest the great change which had been wrought in him.

This boy had been a kind of ringleader among his associates, and now he was disposed to hold his place, and use his influence for good. He did not aspire to rule, or apparently make any effort for this, but it was in him, as if born to do so. He had only to speak, and other boys did as he suggested. In a very short time he was the means of bringing in numbers of the lads who were his followers, that is, those who had not already submitted to God before he did.

His example and stedfastness were a great help and encouragement in the class, as well as in the neighbourhood in which he lived.

It was so remarkable that a lad who had manifested such dislike and even opposition to all good things should have been the subject of the rector's prayers, should have persisted in coming to the services, though he said he would not yield, and should have been arrested through a dream.

Humanly speaking, he could have easily declined himself, and, besides this, have drawn away other lads with him, but he did not.

Instead of doing so, we find him at the special services; and though he was so rude to me, yet I was led to speak to him, to care for his soul, and at last was instrumental in leading him to the Saviour.

Shall we say that this is special favouritism? Does not God love other sinners in the same way?

God is not responsible to us for his doings or ways. He doeth as He will, and is perfectly free to do so.

However remarkable this lad's conversion may have been, I think no one can consider the history of his own conversion without seeing signs of Divine interposition also. We cannot fail to observe that circumstances which had no connection with one another came together, and persons who had no agreement or intercourse with one another were made to work together to the one end of bringing us to conviction and conversion.

In this way, more or less, God's Spirit strives with every soul, and when there is yielding the strivings of the Spirit are more closely applied. On the other hand, when there is no yielding, but rather an opposition to the reasonable calls of the Spirit, there is a hardening process, which ends in the rejection of that soul.

God cannot deny Himself, or alter his own law. As a man sows so must he reap; if he sows resistance he reaps resistance. If he sows procrastination he reaps procrastination; but if he sows submission to God and acceptance of his offered salvation, he receives salvation to the joy of his soul. God says, "Whosoever will may come." The elect are those persons who willingly fall in with God's plan, and the non-elect are those who do not.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.—Cardinal Lavigerie, Archbishop of Algiers and Carthage, preached on Sunday, July 1, in St. Sulpice, Paris, on the African slave trade. The evidence brought forward was heartrending. No fewer than 400,000 slaves are annually brought down to the coast to be sold. Add to this number the massacres provoked by resistance, the deaths caused by cruel treatment, and the fact that only one-fifth of those who begin the journey live to end it, and it is easy to calculate that at least two millions of our fellow-creatures are yearly victims to the still existing slave trade. The Cardinal closed by saying, "We ought not to content ourselves by stating the evil. Means must be sought to remedy it. France, England, Italy have already done much to free the slave, but we must not stop. Formerly military orders were formed to defend the weak. Let a new crusade—a pacific one—be begun to-day; let those young men whose hearts are moved by generous impulses begin to organise a defence against the slave trade. Spread the story, speak to all, Christian or non-Christian, and tell them the cause to defend is that of humanity."—Le Christianisme.

PLAIN WORDS ON PLAIN SPEAKING.

Mr. J. Townsend Trench recently delivered an eminently practical address at a meeting of Methodist local preachers, in Dublin. After some remarks on the use of the voice, he spoke of the Divine message which the preacher has to convey to the people.

His first piece of advice was, in the words of the Lord to Jeremiah, 2500 years ago:—"Be not afraid of their faces." If you are afraid of either the "goodies" or the "badies," and I am not sure which are the severest critics, you had better clear out, and take to scribbling, shoemaking, or some other respectable business, as you are certainly not fit to be a King's messenger.

Secondly. Make them understand you. A man said to me some time ago, "The worst of you is, that if you preach any wrong doctrine, you will destroy us, for you are sure to make us understand it." Well, preach the truth if you know it, and if you do not, you had better hold your tongues until you do.

Thirdly. Seek not your own glory. If you do that, you are done for; and yet of all temptations this is the most powerful. "Well preached," whispers the devil in your ear, as you leave the pulpit. "Lord, help!" you exclaim. "Now, devil, pass on."

Fourthly. Don't offer the Lord what costs you nothing. If you think you can preach without study, you are labouring under a great delusion. I preach very little; moreover, my sermons are no great things, but I never preach one that does not cost me from four to six hours' study.

Fifthly. Don't preach beyond your experience. If you do, your audience will find you out before you have been at it for ten minutes, and God will find you out earlier still. I once heard a man preach on "Christian Perfection," and after the service I went up to him and said, "Excuse my asking, sir, do you experience all you have been urging upon me?" He replied, in a very flurried way, "Well, I am afraid I have an engagement now, but I will see you about it some other time." And off he went.

Sixthly. Avoid politics in the pulpit. You have enough to do with the passions of the heart, the reasonings of the intellect, the ambitions of the soul, without degrading celestial interests by importing partisan politics into the pulpit.

Seventhly. Heat the iron before you try to mould it. Remember that you have a difficult work to perform, and do it with common sense, or rather with uncommon sense. But in the citadel which you have to storm you have always a friend, namely, the man's own conscience. That tells him that religion is right, and that he had better surrender.

In conclusion. You will find that your attainment in method, and achievement, and also in result, will be pretty much according to your faith and your works. Go in for a big thing while you are about it, and at last the Saviour's own hand will place on your immortal brow a crown, whose glittering gems will forever reflect his smile of approbation.

SARDINIA.—In May, 1887, Mr. John Thomas, of Sassari, Sardinia, a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, was arbitrarily arrested, by order of the Mayor of Busachi (Province of Cagliari), and detained for seven days in prison, as "a seller of prohibited books." Legal proceedings were immediately taken by the proper authorities. At the trial of the case, the Mayor and carabineer were both sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and to a fine of 100 frs. (£4) each. They are, besides, prohibited from taking part in any public office for three months; they have to pay costs of trial, and also give indemnity to the injured party. It is said that they intend appealing against the sentence; but it is hoped that the Higher Court, even if it modify the sentence, will not in any way weaken its moral value, which is that of a decided victory for the Gospel and for liberty.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY.*

THE PRINCIPLE OF THE TITHE.

The principle of proportionate giving is manifestly inculcated both in the Old and New Testaments. It is not a question of what we "choose to spare," but what God requires us to set apart for sacred objects. To the question, "How much must I give?" the short reply must be, "According to some general rule, qualified as to special applications."

To such as are content to be guided by the statements and analogies of Scripture, preponderating force will be found to attach to the principle of the tithe. It is, for one thing, the most ancient form and method of consecrating income to the service of religion.

Tithe-paying was not simply a Mosaic law. Abraham paid tithes, hundreds of years before Moses was born; so did Jacob; so, presumably, did all the patriarchs. In giving the law to Moses the first mention of the tithe is the simple statement—"The tithe is the Lord's." Not shall be, but is; and it was twenty years after this before God directed that the Levites should be supported from it.

A word of qualification on both sides of this subject:—

(1) Cases exist where men have small incomes and large or sickly families. Whilst it is no part of our aim to press the principle against such, it remains true that some advantage and blessing will follow—even in such exceptional cases—where some definite portion of income is consecrated.

(2) On the other hand, there are thousands of cases where one-tenth would be utterly inadequate as an offering to the Great Giver of all. Where there is an ample income, and the family claims are very small, one-eighth, one-sixth, one-fourth, or even one-half, given to benevolent and Christian objects, would not in such cases be disproportionate giving. The following inspiring example is given as illustrative of this principle.

A friend of the writer's commenced married life on £180 a year. He then gave one-tenth. His income rose in two years to £220, when he and his wife argued thus: "If when we had £180 we could give one-tenth, and live on £162, we ought now to give on a higher scale"; so an eighth of £220 was set aside. When the income rose to a higher figure one-sixth was given; and now, having "honoured the Lord with his substance," the promise has been fulfilled. His present income is, probably, from £800 to £1000 per annum, and one-quarter is now devoted to charitable and religious objects.

Systematic giving will be easy in its operation, and blessed in its results, in proportion as we can regard it in the light which will be thrown upon it in eternity; and can carry into it the sense of not being simply a duty which we are bound to discharge, but a privilege which it is our happy lot to enjoy.

A JUDGE ON GAMBLING. — Mr. Justice Stephen, at Manchester Assizes, a few days ago, when dealing with a disgraceful gambling case, said, "If I had my way, betting would be not only void, but illegal and immoral." Mr. Justice Stephen thinks that if the public would only give proper attention to the matter, the change he thus indicates could be effected. "Here, therefore," says The Methodist Times, "is something practical for all Christian men to do. Let them seek to create such a public opinion as will compel the Legislature to suppress by law the terrible evil of gambling."

GOD'S TOUCH.

I've read how one with household care
Engrossed, did yet betimes repair
To God's own Word, to quiet there
    Her busy, anxious soul.
Unnumbered toils the morn had brought,
Her hand turned feverish at the thought
Of all her tasks, and how she ought
    To compass well the whole.

But soon these words: "His touch He laid Upon her hand; the fever stayed,"
With life her weary frame pervade,
    With joy her bosom fill.
In such, with Hagar's opened eye,
She sees a well of water nigh,
And, drawing thence a full supply,
    Her quickened pulse grows still.

Would'st thou, by thronging duties prest,
In place of tumult, toil, unrest,
Have peace divine within thy breast
    Which none can understand?
Look up, the helpful pity claim
Of Him to heal all woes who came,
His soothing touch is still the same
    On every fevered hand.

BOSTON OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

For some months now Mr. W. F. Davis has been in prison at Boston, Mass., for having infringed a city ordinance by preaching on Boston Common on a Sunday. The decidedly Christian portion of the community has all along shown its indignation at the severe treatment extended to Mr. Davis, and meetings have been held by way of agitating for the repeal of the obnoxious ordinance. Deputations have waited upon the City Council, and argued that the ordinance was unconstitutional, unnecessary, and an interference with free speech, and it is gratifying to learn that a great impression has been made on public opinion.

Recently the entire question of allowing open-air preaching on the Common was discussed at great length in the City Council. The result is briefly referred to by Mr. Davis in a letter to us from "Cell 20, Suffolk Jail, Charles-street, Boston, Mass. He says: "Some idea of the progress of public sentiment may be formed by considering that, while twenty-five have now voted for repealing the ordinance, and twenty-four for retaining it, a year ago I did not know of a single member in favour of repealing the ordinance."

One of the members of Council, in the course of the debate, as reported in The Boston Evening Traveller, said of Mr. Davis: "I know no person who has been so self-sacrificing in his life as that man has. He is a graduate of Harvard College, who went and took charge of the North-end Mission, and lived in that vicinity with his family, and carried on the work connected with that mission: a man who leaves all the society he has here, and goes out to the lumber regions of the West during the winter. He is an educated man, and I say that a man who does that is not a crank, but has a spirit within him that many of us may do well to emulate."

It is devoutly to be wished that measures for Mr. Davis's release will soon be consummated, and that open-air preachers will have secured to them in Boston opportunities such as are available in other large cities in the United States.

[I met Mr. Davis at Northfield, at Mr. Moody's first Convention. He is a worthy, unworldly, courageous, conscientious and longsuffering man of God, and his wife is a patient, faithful, much-enduring help meet for him.—R. C. M.]

BISHOPS ON MISSIONARY WORK.

During last week several Colonial and missionary Bishops delivered afternoon addresses in St. Paul's Cathedral. It had been publicly announced that the addresses would deal with the missionary work of the bishops' dioceses; but the Bishop of Sydney, who occupied the pulpit on Monday, said nothing of special operations in his diocese, nor did he speak of its peculiar needs. Taking for his text 2 Cor. x. 15, 16, he dwelt in general terms upon the duty of the Church in relation to Colonial evangelisation. He urged the great importance of Englishmen doing their utmost to Christianise the civilisation of the future in the new countries of the world, and indicated some of the evidences that God has imposed a great duty in this direction upon the British people.

THE BISHOP OF COLOMBO

spoke on Tuesday on work in Ceylon. The population of the island is between two and a half and three millions, of whom about one-tenth are Christians. The people are divisible into three classes—the Cingalese, the Tamils, and the Mohammedan Arabs. Having remarked upon the characteristics of these, the Bishop related the circumstances of the introduction of Roman Catholicism into the island about the year 1500. Ever since then there has been much profession of the religion of Christ; but the hold of the truth upon the people has not been very firm, as from time to time large numbers of converts have openly relapsed into heathenism. The work of the Church of England in the island embraces a threefold endeavour: the evangelisation of the heathen, the pastoral or parochial building up of Christians, and the organisation and unifying of the diocese. An important element in the population is the European, which now reaches 5000, and includes a very large proportion of the culture and wealth of the community. Among the Buddhist Cingalese, a specially vigorous mission is prosecuted. Every effort possible is made, however, to reach the heathen by the advance of actual church work. Each parish is, as far as possible, a centre from which the light radiates into the darkness around. The native clergy are supported by their own flocks, and they take their places alongside the European clergy in church councils. In conclusion, the Bishop contended that by comparing Ceylon as it is with Ceylon as it was, we may form some idea of what Christianity has done for the island.

THE BISHOP OF CENTRAL AFRICA, on Wednesday, delivered a very interesting address, on work in the Dark Continent. Having spoken vigorously of the duties of European Christians in the matter of evangelising the heathen, he said: When I go, even a very little way, into that great country, I find numbers of people who have not only never heard the Gospel, but have never even seen the face of anyone bearing the Christian name, or recognising the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of his life. Instead, however, of pouring into Africa to give her new life, and to impart to her their light and civilisation, Christian nations have poured into the country to rob her of her sons, to take them off by the thousand into their own lands, and to hold them in captivity.

It has been asserted that the natives of Africa are not capable of receiving those high mysterious truths which make up the sum of our religion. But God has put no such difference as that allegation implies between races and peoples of the world. He has made of one blood all nations, and the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is thoroughly adapted to the necessities of every tribe on the face of the earth. It is not for us, however, to treat the African as if he were a European, nor must we send an essentially English civilisation to him. But if you take a natural and noble course, and send to Christianise him in his own social and political surroundings, you will see that he is as capable of being civilised and Christianised as people of our own country are.

The people are capable of work. I have had porters carrying loads of sixty pounds' weight on their heads, fifteen hours a day, for stretches of a month at a time. The love of travel is innate in many of them, and to do what I now relate shows that they must have great capacity for hard work for lengthened periods. If you could see these Africans living in their own way before ever coming into contact with Europeans, you would realise how very far they often are from being savages, and I am sure you would shrink from applying that title to them any longer. Take their agriculture. Far away from any part of the country where Europeans have influence, I have found extensive fields of maize and peas, evidently highly cultivated, and cleared most carefully. The peas are in ridges over a great extent of country, implying very great care and labour.

If we look at the way in which the chiefs govern the country, we find the same interesting features. Many of the chiefs are far removed from irresponsible autocrats, and really govern by persuasion and constitutional methods. I remember one who was so employed all day long administering justice, that he was only able to come at an early hour in the morning to see me occasionally. His life was one of hard work, and his methods were entirely constitutional. Then, again, there is an African chief, with whom I feel it a privilege to be on terms of intimate friendship. He tries to govern his people on thoroughly constitutional and Christian principles, and his only wish, in all his ruling, is to do what he believes is the will of God. That chief is at the same time most careful to act according to the well-known customs of his country, so far as those customs do not militate against Christianity.

The truth is, there are two sides to native life and character in Africa, as also there are in this country. If strangers were to visit this city of London, they would have to report that there are two sides to the life of its inhabitants. Moreover, if anyone were to set himself to make out a case against our own civilisation and the life of our country, he might draw a very dark picture, I have no doubt. So it is with Africa. But there is also the brighter side of which I have spoken, and it should redeem the people from being stigmatised as savages.

When they are influenced by Christianity, and their desire for knowledge has been in some measure satisfied, there is plenty of intellectual capacity in the Africans. Going among tribes speaking five or six different languages, I have been constantly obliged to speak through an interpreter. I know one man who has acted as an interpreter, who was brought up in slavery. He will take his stand by my side when I am preaching, and after I have spoken for twenty-five minutes, he will preach my sermon off in his own language with earnestness and eloquence.

The Africans also value their Christian privileges. In the kingdom of Uganda there has been a terrible persecution of Christians. Twenty young men had their arms cut off, and were cast into the fire. As the flames wrapped them round, they sang a Christian hymn. While the martyrs were suffering, other natives were seeking the truth. They came by night, and asked the missionaries to prepare them for baptism to take the places which their brethren had occupied in the ranks. Certainly, if you number the Christian converts in that part of the country, you will find they are but few, compared with the masses of the people. But why? Because the number of missionaries that have been sent from this country have been so few. Our great need is to train a native ministry, and for this we need labourers, such as conduct the theological colleges of this country. We have growing up now under our care many promising young men who may do good work in the future, if only their training is committed unto qualified hands.

Having spoken of mission work as active compliance with the Lord's command to "preach the Gospel to every creature," the Bishop alluded to recent eulogies of Mohammedanism. Of those who had declared the religion of Mahomet more suited than Christianity to the state of the natives of Africa, he said, if they had lived in that part of the country where he had spent the past four years, they would never venture to open their mouths on the subject again. In conclusion, he called for more labourers to enter the African mission field, especially to assist in training a native ministry.

THE BISHOP OF JAPAN,

on Wednesday, made some appropriate references to Christian activity in the "Britain of the East." Having shown it to be the duty of the Church to proclaim the Gospel throughout the world, he mentioned Japan as emphatically an "open door" at the present time. Japanese youths have visited Western lands with the avowed object of learning our modes of thought and methods of government. In the higher schools and universities of the country the English language is largely used as a medium of education, and thus our literature is opened to the students. The latest inventions of our civilisation are very freely adopted, and even our atheism and agnosticism have their believers and professors. Can it be doubted, inquired the Bishop, that the Church has been called to bear witness for Christ in Japan? In part that call has been responded to. Let me bear my testimony with all gratitude—as one who has had an opportunity of seeing the missionary work of the Church in many countries — to the special excellence of the band of churchmen and churchwomen who are in Japan working for God. Some of them, in intellectual capacity and spiritual devotedness, are in the first rank of those who represent us in heathen lands.

The task which is set before these workers is very difficult, inasmuch as, having renounced the ancient creeds, the people are open to other influences besides that of the faith of Christ, There is, however, reason to believe that the preaching of the word of the cross will produce in Japan a strong Christian type. The persecutions of two centuries and a half ago show that suffering for the cause of Christ will be borne as readily in Japan as it was borne by Christians in the first century.

Patriotic and independent, the Japanese are not disposed to rely upon foreign missionaries, but they wish the new faith to be promulgated by people of their own nation. At present there are two needs: (1) Funds to support more mission workers, men and women alike; and (2) that young men going to the country to fill business posts shall realise that a heavy responsibility rests upon them as Christians living among heathen. On this latter head, the Bishop said: a Christian man in heathendom cannot but be a missionary—we will use no lower term—of Christ, or an antagonist of the Gospel. No neutral position is possible. Determine, then, I pray you, to enable us to reverse the judgment which has so far held good, that in no Eastern cities does the Gospel make such slow progress as in the open ports.

THE BISHOP OF CHICAGO, who delivered the address on Friday, spoke on mission work in general, from the standpoint of God's loving provision and man's great need, and urged his hearers, by their influence and prayers, by their benefactions and sympathies, to show themselves co-workers with God, in the bringing back of a fallen race to the Divine favour and life, by diffusing knowledge of the Gospel of Christ.

For the Young.

THE LITTLE STRANGER.

By Miss Gardner, Calcutta.

She was rather a little girl, this Ahmadi, about whom I am to tell you, and not a very pretty little girl either. She was about eleven when I first knew her, and had been married four years. In the country where Ahmadi lived, it was not necessary to be either old, or pretty, to be married, for it was a country in which every little girl was expected to be married, long before she was through playing with her dollies. Nor was it necessary that she should see her husband, or know anything about him, until after the marriage ceremony was performed. All the arrangements were made by her father, and mother. So it happened one day, a day after a whole week of gayety and feasting, and all sorts of strange ceremonies, Ahmadi found herself possessed of a husband, a lad of twelve or thereabouts. When, at last, she got a good look at him, he did not please her at all, and he on his part did not seem to think much of his little girl wife. In fact they did not fancy one another.

This, however, did not matter much, in the beginning, as they were only children, and played about at their different plays, he going in and out as he pleased, she shut up within the house, and with the exception of an occasional beating, which the young lord saw fit to give his slave, nothing of much importance happened. But as time went on, and the boy grew older and stronger, the beatings became more and more frequent, and the cries of the little girl more pitiful, if there had been anybody to be moved with pity for her, but there was not. As she grew older, she was delicate and sickly, the constant state of fear in which she lived not being a good way to bring about a healthy, physical condition. Her father-in-law joined with his son, and lent the energy of his stronger arm when that of the younger man seemed not sufficient for their cruel purpose.

At length however, the poor child's condition reached the ears of her mother, and the mother-heart moved with love and pity went to her child, and finding things even as she had heard, she took her little one away, back to her own home. But this did not suit the brutal instincts of the young husband. He must have her near him, that he might vent the ill humour of his cruel disposition upon her as often as he liked. The mother refusing to let the little one go back, he took the case to law, and lost it, being bound over to "hold the peace" for six months. During this time Ahmadi lived with her mother, enjoying her tender care, and love.

But by and by the six months passed away, and again the going back stared them in the face. They could not bear the thought, the child clung to the mother and cried "Don't let me go." But what could she do? The law could no longer afford them a protection. If they stayed where they were, the husband would claim his wife, and go she must. So they resolved to go away, and helped by the missonaries who had been their friends through all this heavy trial, they fled to Calcutta, to them a foreign land. Here she is, with her mother, and has been here for the last two months. The little Ahmadi is getting to be bright and cheery, but the mother carries about a weary sad face, that it makes one's heart ache to see. She has not learned Christ, and of course the burden of this great affliction must seem heavy indeed. When she learns what a Friend she has in Jesus, how the way will lighten before her!—Missionary Link.

VISITING A CHINESE MANDARIN.

By Mary E. Scott, Ta'ning, China.

This morning (Feb. 20) we had our first visit from a "Tai-tai," or Mandarin's wife, and she proved an interesting and intelligent woman. Her servant and her younger son accompanied her; and another very nice woman, and two or three younger ones followed in her train. The Tai-tai's husband, who is one of the under Mandarin's in this city, is a very interesting man. He knows Shanghai, Yanchau, and other cities in the South, and is generally interested in steam cars and all foreign things. We were able to give the Tai-tai a simple remedy for her little boy, who was rather out of sorts, and, of course, we asked the Lord's blessing on it. Altogether she seemed very favourably impressed with her visit, and ended by inviting us to go and visit her, promising to send her servant for us. We are asking the Lord to save all the household.

Two days later Elder Chang went to a village about five miles away, whence the people had sent a message asking him to go and explain the Gospel to them. We were making the most of our time to get some letters written, when the Tai-tai's servant and her little son appeared to conduct us to her house. We were soon ready, and on our way; but our surprise was great when our guide clambered down a ruined wall, and we espied the Tai-tai waiting to welcome us. The house was rather, not to say very, dilapidated, but the room we were asked into was one of the most refined and comfortable Chinese rooms that I have seen, and there were several foreign things about. There was more glass in the windows than we can boast, and actually two clocks, whose merry ticking sounded delightfully home-like; whether they told the true time of day or not need not be said. The room was not large, and at one end there was a very comfortable k'ang (used as a bed, couch, and settee), upon which we were invited to sit. Then, as I remember noticing in the South, there were, instead of a wardrobe, numbers of boxes, piled up one on the top of another.

Opposite the window there was a couch, evidently arranged for opium-smoking, for upon it was a tray, with the lamp and other apparatus, and we know that the Mandarin is a victim to this dreadful practice. But, praise God, he very much desires to break it off, and asked us if we could give him medicine. We told him that at present we had none, but hoped soon to visit our friends at Sih-chau, who had kindly offered to give us some. We were very pleased to see some Gospels, which we have given him, close at hand in his special corner, also a book, which he said Mr. Cassells [one of the Cambridge seven] had given him—another proof that the saying is true, that "one soweth, and another reapeth."

We had not been there long before tea was brought in, and some very nice sugared walnuts, and some other kind of nuts, also some ground rice cakes, which we ate with ivory chop-sticks. The husband stayed in the room all the time, and put us through a regular cross-examination about the way we managed our housekeeping, and the prices of many things, also the difference between the English and Chinese way of reckoning time. He wanted to know how much my watch cost, but was satisfied when I said that, as my father and mother had given it to me, I did not know how much it had cost. We also compared notes as to our travels. But what pleased us most was to hear him say that every day he read the Gospels; and when we were speaking of the one true God and only Saviour, he kept breaking in with, "right," "yes," and so on. He was very pleased with my entire New Testament, and we promised to send him a Gospel of Mark and Acts of the Apostles, neither of which he possessed. We also promised to send the lady a piece of soap, which she was very anxious to have; and they produced a pretty fan, with the request that I would paint some flowers on it. I have not much spare time, but could not refuse, especially as I asked if my teacher might write some Bible words on one side. I think I shall have the loving words of Jesus, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," &c.

By and by we proposed to go; but they insisted that we should stay and dine there, with the usual polite intimation that there food was not good, &c. The master of the house left the room two or three times to hurry matters, when we again proposed to go; and presently we were invited into the next room, which seemed half kitchen and half dining-room. The first course was pork, which we happily managed to escape eating, as some really deliciously cooked mutton and chicken quickly appeared, all served up steaming hot in delicate china bowls. There was also boiled seaweed, which was very nice, and shrimps, salted.

The feast began by the Tai-tai offering us wine in tiny cups; but she did not press us to drink it, when we told her it was not the custom of Jesus's disciples. Before commencing to eat, we explained that we always thanked God for our food, and would like to do so now. So one of us asked a blessing in Chinese. By and by appeared basins of rice and a basin of a sort of seaweed broth, into which we all three dipped our pretty china spoons. There were other things as well. Our hostess kept helping us to prime morsels with her own chop-sticks, but she was such a nice refined little lady that it was not nearly so bad as it sounds. Altogether we quite enjoyed our chong-kueh-tih (= middle kingdom) meal!

When we had at last convinced our hostess and her dear old servant that we were quite satisfied, and had duly contradicted her assertions that her food was "puh-hao" (not good), we all returned to the sitting-room, where we were delighted to find the husband with the Testament in his hand, reading away at Revelation. After a little more conversation, tea was again given us (boiling water being poured on the former cold tea-leaves, in the pretty covered china cups), and soon after that we were able to make our adieux, after repeated invitations on both sides to "come again."

We returned home, accompanied by the Tai-tai's servant and little boy, to whom we gave the promised books, also an entire New Testament (unfortunately, in rather small print, but it was the only kind we had for giving away). I should say that the poor man's eyesight is very bad, and it shows a good deal of energy and determination for him to have done so much reading as we found he had. However, his wife can read, and, of course, the boys. The dear old servant wanted some medicine for her cough, and we also sent a cake of Pears' soap for the mother.

On our return we were greeted by our teacher, who had come back from the village greatly encouraged, as many people had assembled to listen to the Gospel message. After hearing his news, we soon had our delayed noon prayer-meeting, and, as you can well imagine, we did not forget to praise for this entrance into another house.

MR. CHARLES E. FAITHFULL, of Marseilles, requests his friends kindly to address him, care of Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., until end of August.

WHY NEGLECT OUR HOTEL SERVANTS?—Christians who are making holiday tours this summer and autumn, will be often staying in hotels, and ought to remember the servants in these great houses, where the pressure of business too often drives away all thought of God and of eternity. Two young ladies, while staying in a large hotel on their summer trip, invited the women servants to meet them in their bedroom of an evening. They sang for them Sankey's hymns, and told them of the Saviour's love. When leaving, they took the names of the servants, writing to them afterwards, and regularly sending to each a monthly paper or book. Will not others do likewise, and thus win many for Jesus, among our hotel servants this summer?

THE BIBLE IN ROME.

IN a very interesting communication to Mr. William Fry, of Dublin, Rev. James Wall, of Rome, relates the following instances of the power of the Scriptures as witnessed in connection with his work:—

(1) A man who received a copy of Luke's Gospel said: "Thank you; but I want, and have wanted for a long time, the whole Bible, not only for myself, but also for my three daughters, whom I want to educate according to Scripture. We have lost all faith in the priest, and cannot bear that our children should be brought up by the priests who destroy all family ties."

(2) For several weeks Mrs. Wall had noticed a man among the patients at one of our Medical Missions reading his New Testament. He was not ill, and, therefore, not in need of the doctor. When asked why he came, he replied that four years since he had purchased a New Testament in the country, and had ever since felt the need of coming to the preaching. He is now a regular attendant at places of worship, and always carries his Bible with him.

(3) One of our evangelists entered a countryman's house one evening, and asked him to buy a New Testament. The man knew nothing of evangelical meetings, but the evangelist found him reading a book, which proved to be an old Bible. For many years he had gathered his family together in the evening and read the Bible to them. The priest had tried to get possession of the Book, but had not succeeded. When the evangelist desired to pray with him, the whole family joined with the greatest pleasure. This case I consider peculiarly instructive and encouraging.

(4) Yesterday, on issuing from the city at noon, among some workmen who had stretched themselves in the shade to eat their dinner I saw one who had fallen asleep. On his jacket, carefully spread out, were several tracts, and a copy of the Gospel by Mark, which had fallen from his hand when sleep overcame him. It was a pretty and significant picture. Tens of thousands of such workmen have come from the provinces to Rome, and very many have the Scriptures, or portions of them.

(5) Several days since I was cited by the inspector of police in this parish, and asked to give information respecting a man who had in his possession a Bible and a number of tracts. As the man was poor, and had said he had received the books from us, the inspector wanted to hear me. I said I was surprised that the possession of evangelical books by anyone in Rome should be a ground of suspicion, and that if such was the case the authorities would have enough to do, since in the past year we had distributed, perhaps, 20,000 Scriptures and portions, and nearly a hundred thousand tracts, and that shortly we hoped there would not be a house in Rome without a copy. The inspector smiled, and said, "I have it myself, and have read it for years."

(6) A respectable woman received a Gospel in one of the streets of Rome. She was employed in making the embroidery which the Canons of St. Peter's use. One of the priests she served, seeing the Gospel in her house, took it away as a pestilential book, and threatened to take the work elsewhere. The Gospel made considerable impression on the woman's mind, and she longed to know the truth. Occasionally, disguised as a servant, she went to an evangelical meeting, and at last made the acquaintance of our Bible-woman, who brought her to worship. She soon accepted and confessed the Saviour. She is excommunicated and cast out of the synagogue, but is happy in the Saviour.

(7) A man passing before one of our halls received a Gospel, and, taking it home, gave it to his boy, a child of ten years. The child read it and went through Rome in search of the place where the book was sold. That place was shut, but a boy of whom he inquired directed him to come to our Sunday-school, which he did the next morning. He is now one of our most regular attendants, not only at the school, but at all the meetings during the week. He often comes to our house, and has brought his mother and elder brother. The mother is delighted at the change in the child.

These incidents, taken from numbers which come under our notice, show how willingly the people receive the Word in these parts, and how powerful that Word is in exciting interest, quickening the conscience, and saving the soul.

THE OLD TOLBOOTH, GLASGOW.

I HAVE often been in the back slums of big places, not only by day, but in those midnight hours when children of the night are found abroad; but never, in any place, have I found those whose salvation from the bondage of sin and Satan has seemed less likely than that of the outcasts of Glasgow. So near to my wit's end was I brought, at a Gospel-meeting recently, when a poor dram-drinker, with every mark of iniquity stamped upon her countenance, came up and took my hand, that I could only cry for the Lord to honour the name of Jesus in casting out from her the devils with whom I felt her to be filled.

There is, however, another side to the question. Without speaking disparagingly of others, I have never met with people more thoroughly in earnest than the good Scotch folk who are on the Lord's side in using every kind of lawful means for the rescue of the perishing. I had already been privileged to see and take part in the work at the "Grove-street Institute," "James Morrison-street Hall," and other places in Glasgow, but I knew nothing of "The Tolbooth," till, a little while ago, I got a telegram, asking me to follow my old friend, Henry Lakin, who had been conducting a rather lengthy mission there.

The place, holding about five or six hundred people, was packed down to the doors when I arrived, many of those present evidently belonging to the very lowest class in the city. A "penny tea," which was just about to be commenced, was to be followed by a testimony meeting, for which I rather anxiously waited, as there were evidently some present who had testimony to give. And quite as striking as I had expected it to be was this when it came. Ex-convicts, and other gaol birds; old soldiers, familiar with every kind of military punishment for the incorrigible of the army; women, old and young, who had gone far in the paths of sin unnameable, rose up, one after another, together with others who had preserved respectability in spite of poverty, and testified to what the Lord had done for them in "The Tolbooth Hall."

A stranger among strangers, I inquired of an unassuming young gentleman, at the beginning of the meeting, by what committee the work was being carried on. "By my brother and myself," was the quiet reply; and I found I was talking to Mr. A. P. Anderson of "the Polytechnic," who, together with his brother, Mr, Charles Anderson, is responsible, not only for the management, but for the whole expense, of the Mission. It was a glorious time I had there, the glory being God's; for what the laws of the land, with their penalties for transgressors, failed to do, the old Gospel, with its soul-reviving promises, effected, night after night, in the conversion of those who to some had been outcasts of the devil, as well as of man.

So sorry was I to leave such a work that it gladdened my heart to get back again on a later occasion and have a few words from "The Tolbooth" platform. The work was going on just as gloriously as ever. My friend Climie, the ex-collier, was the evangelist engaged, and nearly four hundred people had assembled to hear him, fourteen of whom were brought out for Christ, whether in heart or only in profession the day of judgment will declare. On the Saturday night, another "penny tea" night. Mr. Aleck Anderson took charge of the meeting himself, to the evident delight of all present; nor do I think I ever enjoyed a service more in my life—certainly I never heard more hearty singing as hymn after hymn was rolled forth in solos and chorus from Songs and Solos and The Christian Choir. Some twenty must have come out again for Christ, nearly everyone, as on previous occasions, signing "the pledge" directly after finding a Saviour.

Reflecting afterwards on the contrast between the inside of "the Tolbooth" and the street we traversed to reach "the College" station, I was made to think of the disciples, and their descent from "the Mount of Transfiguration." On the top they had been privileged to converse with the inhabitants of heaven—at the bottom there was the devil waiting to manifest his awful power over the children of earth. In the hall we had been very nigh in spirit to the heavenly Jerusalem, and its blissful associations, but oh, the cursing, wrangling, whiskey-drinking crowds that hung about the public-houses of the streets through which we passed, making night hideous with their drunken yells.

God bless those two young brothers! They only need, like Mr. Fred Charrington, to "lengthen their cords, and strengthen their stakes," and though (if they are going to continue their present plan of furnishing funds from their own pockets) it will be an immense undertaking, when they have given to, or got for, Glasgow, its "New Assembly Hall," with its corresponding institutions, it will be found that "the Tolbooth" work has become one of the most important in the Church of Christ on earth.

A NEW EFFORT FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

MANY will learn with thankfulness that Mr. E. W. Thomas and his Committee have secured a new Home, which it is intended to devote to the reception of friendless young girls of good character. On Tuesday last, while Holloway was crowded with sight-seers on the occasion of the opening of the Great Northern Central Hospital by the Prince and Princess of Wales, a large party of ladies had an opportunity of inspecting the new premises at 459, Holloway-road, and of also seeing the Royal procession.

Mr. E. W. Thomas found an opportunity of saying a few earnest words in reference to the urgent need of extending this particular branch of the Society's work. It was hoped that in Islington, where so many ladies took pleasure in engaging in Christian efforts of various kinds, this one on behalf of friendless girls would not fail to command their best sympathies. Mr. Thomas added that the chief object of the new Home would be the spiritual welfare of those who were admitted. He added that total abstinence and provident habits would be inculcated, and that the girls admitted would be trained to get their own living as domestic servants.

The new Home is well adapted for the purpose to which it will be devoted, and prayer is asked that it may be the place of blessing to many young friendless girls.

ALONE WITH GOD IN A HEATHEN CITY.—Mr. Hudson Broomhall writes from Hwai-luh, April 15: I must just write a line to-day to let you know how happy I am. My feeling has been "joy unspeakable and full of glory," nothing outward, only the consciousness of God's presence and smile, and surely enough to cause it. "Lo I am with you alway" is no empty promise, but a realised fact, and I want no other companion if it should mean losing this joy. The responsibilities are great—entrusted with the Gospel, and the only one who can do anything for their salvation. Pao-ting Fu 120 miles away, T'ai-yuen 160, and to the south I know not how far is the nearest. Chau-kia k'eo (Honan) I think is over 400 miles. There are about eighty-five cities south of this untouched by anyone, as far as outward things go. No man cares for their souls. These are all this side of the Yellow River. I feel sure, were it realised at home, that many more would be constrained to come.—China's Millions.

NOTES FROM THE CAPE.

Dear Sir,—Some weeks have passed since my return to Cape Town with the helpers the Lord stirred to leave England for South Africa.

There is more life and activity now among Christians here than there was a few years ago. A two days' Conference on the Holy Spirit in life and service has just been held in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. The addresses were given by Rev. Andrew Murray, and were exceedingly helpful and suggestive.

Early in July we hope to have Mr. Spencer Walton amongst us, and earnestly desire prayer that his visit may be blessed to the colony. Mr. Greene, who travelled with us, has held meetings in various towns in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, and has awakened an interest in the Mission.

AN OPENING FOR WORKING MEN.

I am informed, after careful inquiry, that working men may be encouraged to come to South Africa, provided they are of the right stamp for colonists—men who, if one thing fails, can turn their hands to some other. Just now there is a rush from the towns to the gold mines, leaving openings which wait to be filled. A contractor, engaged on a large building in Cape Town, was forced to send to Johannesberg in the Transvaal for men. Skilled workmen are employed at the mines, labourers being supplied by the surrounding tribes. Here is an opportunity for men on fire to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ.

With the wide-spread missionary awakening in Britain, and remunerative employment to be obtained in the midst of the heathen, why should we not have self-supporting missionaries in South Africa? A missionary visited a gold mine in the Transvaal, and spoke at one meeting in three languages, through interpreters, to a crowd of some hundreds of heathen.

AN APPALLING STATEMENT

was made in Parliament this week, with regard to the condition of Kimberley. Out of a population of 20,000 the number of deaths recorded during the year was 3272. During the same period there were 54 murders, at the average of 4½ per month. The criminal convictions numbered 11,000. At the close of the year there were 870 in gaol, of these 144 were white prisoners. In the whole colony during the year there were 1012 inquests, of which 862 were at Kimberley alone. An extract was given from a local paper, to the following effect:— "The usual parties (of prisoners) were out yesterday morning collecting dead bodies. At noon they had brought five into the mortuary. We suppose there will be an inquest upon these, and we venture to say what the verdict will be—died of drink and exposure." This terrible state of affairs is attributed to two causes, drink and illicit diamond trade.

May God the Holy Ghost direct some working-man evangelist, full of faith and power, to this devil-possessed place. £25 would carry him, with comfort, direct from London to Kimberley, by steam all the way.

At Wynberg, a suburb of Cape Town, and the military headquarters, meetings are being held nightly for the soldiers. A hall has been kindly lent to us for the purpose, until rooms are opened for them. Blessing is being given in the conversion of souls.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn.

The Soldiers' Home, Cape Town.

[Mrs. Osborn also asks if some friends will send regularly a copy of The Christian to the Christian Home (for aged and indigent ladies), Hope-street, Cape Town, and to the Soldiers' Home for the workers. A soldier was recently led to Christ in reading a copy in hospital. We shall be glad to receive the names of any willing to respond to this request, either by forwarding their own copy when done with, or by ordering others, to be sent direct from the office.]

AN AMERICO-AFRICAN MISSION.

Among the few coloured people present at the late Missionary Conference was Rev. J. A. Taylor, of Richmond, Virginia, Secretary to the Foreign Mission of the Coloured Baptists, in the United States. He was a bondsman up to the age of twenty-four, and, as he is still a comparatively young man, his remarkable progress indicates no common ability and perseverance. Mr. Taylor addressed the Conference, and advocated the claims of the mission work carried on by his fellow-Christians of the Coloured Baptist Church. The following statement is commended to the attention and sympathy of Christians in this country:—

The Coloured Baptist Church of the United States only dates back about twenty-five years, although individual Christians existed in large numbers previous to this. In 1865, when emancipation took place, they found themselves with very few Church organisations, with little or no Church property, and a very poorly trained ministry. Their first work was to organise churches; the next was to get places of worship, and the third was to have their ministers trained for the work of the pastorate. To-day, as a result of these efforts, they have nearly a thousand churches, with a membership of nearly fifteen hundred thousand. They have State conventions and associations for carrying on home mission and educational work. Last year they raised over two hundred thousand dollars for such efforts among themselves.

Eight years ago they formed the Baptist Foreign Mission Convention, to do mission work amongst the heathen in Africa. About six years ago they began work amongst the Vey tribe in West Central Africa. They have now four mission stations amongst that people—viz., Bendoo, Jundoo, Mississippi, and Workorra, besides several out-stations. There are four missionaries, with several native helpers. These have over three hundred converts, and they are now preparing to build an industrial school for the training of natives. It has been concluded that the best thing to do is to train the converts, and let them do the mission work in the interior, whilst the American pastors work at the mission stations. The Society could send to Africa at once fifty well-qualified missionaries, if they had the means to support them. If there are any good friends in Great Britain or elsewhere who would like to help on this work, such help will be thankfully received.

We shall be happy to be the medium for transmitting any sums subscribed, or they may be sent direct to the secretary, Rev. J. A. Taylor, 610, North Eleventh-street, Richmond, Vir., U.S.A.

JEWISH CUSTOMS.—Mr. J. Spencer Cooper has delivered a course of three lectures on Jewish Rites and Ceremonies, at the London City Mission Hall, Leipsic-road, Camberwell. Mr. Cooper has for many years studied the customs and manners of the Jews as recorded in the Scriptures. His three lectures were entitled, "The Atonement: its Sacrifices and Ceremonies"; "The Jewish Feasts"; and "The Jew, with a Jewish wedding." The meetings were well attended.

THE LATE MRS. MORLEY, widow of Mr. Samuel Morley, has given the following among other bequests:—To her daughters £200 for female rescue work; to the Training Hospital, at Tottenham-green, £500; Miss Sharman's Home, Southwark, £300; to the Home of Industry, Spitalfields, Mount Hermon Home, Kilburn, Morley Home for Decayed Governesses, Hackney, and Young Women's Christian Association, Leamington, each £200; and to her son, Mr. Henry Hope Morley, and Mr. Herbert Wilbraham Taylor, £1500, upon the same trusts as a bequest of £3000 by the late Mr. Morley for evangelists connected with various chapels and places of worship, provided that such trusts extend to the mission work of Mr. John Maxted, of Leigh.

THE CHINESE AND THE GOSPEL.

Rev. John Ross, who has been for many years a missionary in Manchuria, is now retiring from his work as a missionary, and has issued a valedictory address, in which are several passages worthy of the notice of all interested in missionary work in China. He writes:—

"In the large city of Moukden, which is, in proportion to its size, perhaps more crowded with officials than any city in China, my experience would not warrant me in denouncing the Chinese authorities. Nor have I much to complain of in the conduct of the literary classes. Our work to begin with, like work almost everywhere else, was bitterly assailed by the undergraduates. But it should be borne in mind that the opposition was directed not against the Christian but against the foreigner. Even in our earliest history the literary classes soon began to acknowledge the excellencies of Christianity, while they took no pains to hide their suspicions as to the object of the foreigner...From my own experience I firmly believe that were Christianity divorced in the Chinese mind from politics, both people and rulers would rapidly and extensively adopt Christianity. It is amazing to find the extent to which knowledge of and esteem for Christianity have grown in the minds of Chinese and Manchus in the city of Moukden and widely over the province of Manchuria."

This is a valuable addition to the many testimonies that what is needed in China, as elsewhere, is the simple proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

REV. HENRY BRADFORD.

Union Chapel, St. Michael's-road, Northampton, is a centre of vigorous testimony by Rev. Henry Bradford and fellow workers. It will be remembered that it was built through the exertions of Admiral Sir William King-Hall and others, who stood by Mr. Bradford when many of his friends deserted him, because he opposed Mr. Bradlaugh's candidature to represent Northampton in the House of Commons.

Recently the memorial stone was laid of a house in course of erection on the Kingsley-road, Northampton, as a personal gift to Mr. Bradford. Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, incumbent of Christ Church, Leamington, and Lieut.-Colonel Sandys, M.P., took part in the proceedings. The inscription on the stone stated that the house was built by public subscription and given to Mr. Bradford, "as a standing-proof of the faithfulness of God to his servants, and also as a mark of esteem for one who had suffered persecution in this town at the hands of some of its inhabitants for his testimony among them, and in acknowledgment thereof. 'Them that honour Me I will honour' (1 Sam. ii. 30)."

In the course of some remarks, Mr. Bradford said that Union Church is going forward satisfactorily. Subscriptions to complete the house will be acknowledged by Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, Leamington, or Lady King-Hall, The Elms, Sutton-Bonnington, Loughborough.

THE ONLY REMEDY.—A man can no more rid himself of fever by scraping off the accumulations on his tongue than he can rid himself of sin by the discontinuation of some of his sinful habits. The fever will coat the tongue again and the old nature will continue to put forth new sins or repeat the old ones. The only remedy for man is the new birth, in which old things pass away and all things become new.—Words and Weapons.

THE HOME OF REST, WALTON-ON-NAZE.—This institution for deserving respectable women requiring change of air, continues to be highly appreciated. During last year two hundred women, besides children, were accommodated, and, with very few exceptions, they all returned to their homes much benefited by the rest, good living, and fine, bracing sea-air. The money charged for cases—namely, 8s. per week—does not cover the expenses, and without outside subscriptions the work could not be carried on. Reports and information can be had from Mrs. R. H. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, N.W.

RESCUE WORK AT ALDERSHOT.

The mission, begun by Rev. J. S. Gledstone, of Streatham-hill, for the sake of fallen and endangered women at Aldershot, has ended its fifth year of work; and the report which has come to our hand shows that a great deal of good has been done at small cost. The mission has, from the first, been caried on by Miss Tummon, 21, Wolseley-road, Aldershot, a Christian lady of great experience, and evidently well fitted to cope with the difficulties which are continually arising in such a place.

How fearfully immorality prevails at this great military centre perhaps no one knows; and as little can anyone estimate the effects of that moral plague which is carried from the place to every town and village of England to which retired soldiers go to live, and to every country in the world to which our soldiers are sent. Something may be gathered from the fact that as the result of a raid made recently by the National Vigilance Association upon brothel owners and keepers, as many as nine pleaded guilty and promised to discontinue their shameful practices, while it was reported at a meeting of the Board of Guardians that one hundred girls had left Aldershot. A great many of those who had been disturbed were rescued through Miss Tummon's labours. It is to be hoped that the Christian people of the place will yet further increase their efforts to destroy a sin which finds its victims among civilians as well as soldiers. They are good friends to the mission, because they know its worth; but perhaps they may yet find it possible to do greater things.

We are glad to see that the object in carrying on work among the fallen women of Aldershot, and among those who are specially exposed to this sin, is to bring them to a knowledge of God and of his Son Jesus Christ. All is intended to make them happy and holy Christians. It is a high ideal, but the only possible one for us. "We learn that ten girls have been sent back to their parents, and three wives to their husbands; twenty-three women and girls have been sent to homes; six cases out of thirty-six have proved unstable. Opportunities of speaking the Gospel to soldiers also occur; and it is pleasant to read that "the knocker on the door of our house has several times been sounded at night by men bringing lost girls for refuge. One officer, whose duty makes him familiar with all that is going on, has been of great service." The genuineness of the work done in some cases appears from the instance of a woman who, after living an evil life for four or five years, was sent to a home; from that she went to a situation; and from the situation she was married. Her husband, an ex-soldier, soon began to abuse her, and tried to drive her to the streets to keep them both. She refused, and sought refuge with Miss Tummon, who again got her the shelter of a home. In the meantime a change came over the husband as the result of an earnest rebuke addressed to him, and having saved money and provided a home of his own, his wife returned to him. The desperate straits and temptations of some poor women may be imagined from the fact that a soldier who marries without leave and "off the strength," as it is called, cannot allow his wife more than four or five shillings a week, and out of this she has to pay three shillings or three shillings and sixpence a week for a room. The largest balance she can have on hand to live upon is two shillings a week. Work is not always obtainable, and, when obtainable, perhaps she cannot do it. When her husband is removed to another place, not only is she poor, but she is watched by evil men.

Hurst Green, Hawkhurst.—A kind friend has for some time forwarded The Christian for our reading-room, which is closed for the present, and I write to tell you this, that the sender may know. The papers have been much appreciated, and we feel very thankful to the friend who has sent them. J. W. Barling.

WORK AT PORT SAID.

On Monday week, at Clapton Hall, N., Mr. G. A. Eöll, of Port Said, gave some account of his very interesting work at the entrance of the Suez Canal. It is nearly five years since Mr. Eöll took up his residence in Egypt, and now that he thoroughly understands his sphere, he declares it to be one in which there is superlative need for steady Christian testimony. The population—nearly twenty-five thousand, of many nationalities—have no sense of shame, and life is largely a course of crime, folly, and misery. Acquainted with several languages, Mr. Eöll goes in and out among Asiatics and Europeans alike, and it is very gratifying to know that his loving labours have by no means been in vain.

In the course of his address, Mr. Eöll said: "I have distributed freely a little over 46,000 New Testaments, 2000 Bibles, 36,000 portions of Scripture, and 60,000 tracts in various languages. Besides that, I have given away thousands of copies of the Arabic Scriptures to natives. By these means I have secured opportunities of personally placing the Gospel before all classes of people, and I have never been ill-treated in any way."

Mr. Eöll referred to his efforts to treat the bodily ailments of the people, and also to his labours on board ships on entering the Canal. He distributed over 8000 New Testaments among the Italian soldiers who last year went to Massowah. The needs of the poor have also had to be attended to. Among encouraging facts and circumstances, he mentioned cases in which the Gospel has been lovingly accepted by people of many nations.

Having indicated some of the many difficulties of his work, Mr. Eöll spoke of the corrupting agencies of Port Said. The gambling table is resorted to by wealthy visitors, and murders are alarmingly frequent. Young men find it hard to pursue a course of purity, and to all strangers the pitfalls are numerous and dangerous.

In conclusion, Mr. Eöll stated that his present dwelling is too small for the pressing purposes of his work. An eligible site near the Canal may be secured, and he is hoping that the way may be opened, not only for the purchase of the land, but for the erection of a really suitable building for an outlay of about £2500. He is very desirous that the new building shall serve the purpose of a temperance hotel. On this basis, the place will be self-sustaining, while it will also meet an important need, as at present there are only expensive hotels and houses of a very dangerous character open for the accommodation of travellers at Port Said.

MR. SPENCER WALTON.

Writing on board the Royal Mail ss. Athenian, off St. Helena, on June 29, en route for the Cape, Mr. W. Spencer Walton says:—

"We have a good many Cornish miners in the steerage, and some are on the Lord's side. In the saloon there are two overworked servants of the Lord, one a Mildmay deaconess from Bethnal-green. Several meetings have been held on board, and much interest shown. At night we get forward amongst the steerage passengers, have some very nice talks, and during the day we have not neglected God-given opportunities.

"At Madeira I was much pleased with the labours of Mr. Smart and his wife. Their Protestant school is doing well, and the work at the Sailors' Rest is very prosperous. It is much appreciated, and we see by the book that 3133 sailors visited it in 1887. Nearly every vessel out of the 805 which called at Funchal was visited by the missionary, and had packages of books, &c., left on board. It is, indeed, a treat to see such a bright spot in so much darkness and superstition.

"I am really better for my voyage, and feel rested. I am sure you will join in prayer for a great blessing on work in South Africa."

LITERATURE for the BLUE JACKETS.

I thank your readers warmly for their liberal response to my appeal for help in circulating anti-infidel tracts and papers in the Royal Navy. Last year I circulated more than six tons of Gospel and temperance literature afloat. I should like to be able to circulate some tons of sound good reading combating infidelity. I have already made considerable purchases, and every ship and gun-boat of our great evolutionary fleet, now at sea, has received a parcel of these anti-infidel publications. An officer told me that they were received with the greatest delight on board his ship, one of our swift cruisers; and the senior flag-ship sent me message after message, saying how glad the men were to get them, and begging me to send more. I am greatly aided by the kindness of the Admiralty officials.

I am taking steps to send all over the world, to every ship carrying the white ensign, and if possible to my foreign helpers. I feel that the time has come when we must not fight by a single shot now and then, but we must run in as close as possible, and fire a whole broadside. Our seamen have been, and are, praying earnestly that the Holy Spirit may accompany every book and paper, and make it a blessing to some soul. I have temperance and praying men connected with my work, on board every ship and gun-boat of the attacking and defending squadron earnestly working for God.

MR. FEGAN'S HOMES.

The various institutions coming under this well-known designation are well deserving of the hearty support which has hitherto been accorded them. The Boys' Home, at Southwark, provides accommodation for about 155 street arabs and criminal homeless lads; the Little Wanderers' Home, at Greenwich, shelters about sixty-five younger boys of a similar class; and some fifty destitute boys, who have not been exposed to the many contaminations of street life, are cared for in the Boys' Orphanage, Ramsgate.

In The Rescue, Mr. Fegan records, every quarter, the progress of his good work. The July issue speaks hopefully of the lads who have this year been sent out to Canada. On the whole, they were, "physically and morally, the best party that has yet gone from the Homes." The distributing house at Toronto serves an important function in receiving and entertaining emigration parties until suitable situations are found.

Economy with efficiency is a hackneyed expression, but it well describes the management of the Homes. The discipline is decidedly Christian, and it is encouraging to know that, lovingly applied, it has subdued many a hard heart, and bent many a stiff neck. One of Mr. Fegan's racy "notes" tells of a "rough diamond" of the large class of "misunderstoods" having recently entered the employ of a rising tradesmen who was himself, years ago, an inmate of one of the Homes. All letters should be addressed to Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

THE PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—Though working on an enlarged scale this Mission continues on the same lines as when it was established thirty-five years ago, by Mr. Henry Cook, who is still its manager. In addition to the efforts on shore, there are two very useful agencies in the form of Gospel ships, by means of which the temporal comfort and lasting welfare of fishermen and sailors are looked after. The report of last year's work may be had from Mr. Cook, whose address is, Bellevue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. James Calvert, late Wesleyan Missionary to the Fiji Islands.

An important decision has recently been given in Dublin by the Master of the Rolls in regard to legacy duty. His Lordship has laid down that moneys bequeathed for masses for souls are subject to duty. The decision will be of considerable value to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for an almost incredible sum is annually so bequeathed in Ireland by persons who are anxious about their eternal repose. Hitherto it has been believed that the insertion in a will of the proviso that the masses were to be said in a Catholic chapel "open at the time for the public," constituted the legacy a charitable bequest.

Visitors to Keswick this week will do well to possess themselves of the brief but precious memoir of "George Silwood, of Keswick" (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). It will be treasured by those who knew this suffering servant of the King; and no reminiscence of Keswick will be more prized by those who learn for the first time in these touching memories the exceeding grace of God in him. George Silwood and his wife were both the fruit of Mrs. Daniell's glorious work at Aldershot. Those who want to give to a soldier a memorial of Aldershot, and of the soldiers' heroic friend whom God sent to that then camp of wickedness, can find nothing more suitable than this brief memoir of George Silwood.

E. B. asks us a number of questions whether we believe this or that about "the larger hope." All we ask is that preachers should "preach Christ," "preach the word," "the word of the kingdom," "the Gospel of the grace of God." We do not ask that the warnings and denunciations connected with the rejection of the Gospel should be emphasised beyond what is justified and required by the example of our Lord in the Gospels, and by his Apostles in the Acts. But we do earnestly protest against men professing to be ambassadors for Christ, turning the edge of the message by suggesting that God will not fulfil his word. Moreover, it is a monstrous calumny on God, and on preachers of the word as they find it, to suggest that He or they take pleasure in the death of the sinner, while, in Christ's stead, true evangelists beseech men to be reconciled to God.

The papers just to hand from China report several striking examples of the difficulties which block the progress of missionary labour in that country. One instance will suffice to indicate the nature of these difficulties, and to call forth warm sympathy from our readers with the hardly-pressed missionaries. In the province of Honan, where the Yellow River inundations have recently occurred, is the city of Tai-an-fu. There two missionaries of the Church of England Mission rented a house. Then the gentry and literati of the city held meetings at one of their principal temples, and formed plans of excommunication of the man who had let the house to the missionaries. The landlord thereupon refused to receive any rent, and entreated the missionaries to leave. The cook was seized and badly treated, and terrified by this example of cruelty the other servants fled. Then one of the missionaries acted as cook until his health broke down, and he had to seek rest at Pekin. The other courageously stayed on, though word had been passed round that no food was to be sold to the foreigner. Not only did the district magistrate and prefect refuse to prevent these acts of persecution, or repress the violence of the opposition, but there are evidences of official connivance at the endeavours to drive the missionaries out of the province.

> MY DEAR SIR,—I enclose, from the illustrated catalogue, two excellent representations of two of the pictures at a London picture gallery. The one is a beautiful picture of a young woman without a stitch of clothes upon her; the other is a lovely picture of six young women with scarcely a rag on any of them. How far such public exhibitions are profitable you can judge.—Faithfully yours,

In reply to the artistic cant by which the perpetration of these indecencies is defended, it is apposite to quote Byron's couplet:—

> Nor florid prose, nor honeyed lies of rhyme,
> Can hallow evil deeds, or consecrate a crime.

It is strange what extremes of opinion there are in the world. Professor Biny, of Bonn, perhaps one of the greatest authorities on the subject, recently declared that "everything that can be said in favour of alcohol concerns invalids alone." As an illustration of the other pole, Rev. George Webster, a clergyman in Cork, has recently asserted as his belief that "this modern form of teetotalism is the master-stroke of the devil for the present generation, and that its influence, as it has now become a religion, will sink Christianity for many a day." Strange to say, in the face of such a declaration as this, there is, perhaps, no place in the British Islands in which the curse of drink is more strikingly and painfully evident than it is in Cork.

The question of the insurance of children's lives is rapidly assuming importance. Rev. Benjamin Waugh has recently stated that a thousand children are annually starved to death for the sake of obtaining the insurance money. Surely the time has come for legislative interference with this branch of the business of Burial Societies and Insurance Companies. It is perhaps open to doubt if the important factor of the employment of married women in mills and workshops has been sufficiently considered in estimating the death rate. In many of the manufacturing towns narcotic drugs, "quietness" as the female operatives laconically term the chemists' sleeping mixtures, may have as much to do with the high rate of infant mortality as carelessness and cruelty.

Early and improvident marriages involve the necessity of the young mothers continuing to work in the mill, with the result that the children are either left to the tender mercies of the professional baby farmer, or dosed with sedatives. The question cannot be disposed of hastily, for there are economic and other considerations behind it; but it certainly calls for careful and determined treatment. The continued massacre of the innocents, to which attention has now been so forcibly directed, is a disgrace to our nineteenth century Christianity. We hope this subject, among many others, will engage the attention of the new Social Reform party that has been constituted among the members of both Houses of Parliament.

Some time ago we commented upon an excellent little pamphlet by Mrs. Caroline Haddon entitled, "Where does your interest come from?" In view of recent revelations with regard to the scale of payment of women and girls employed by Messrs. Bryant and May, Limited, we should be glad to see Mrs. Haddon's telling publication in the hands of all Christians who do not take care to inquire how their large dividends are made up. In many cases a portion of the money received from the profits in the working of some large concern, the basis of which is anything but righteousness, is expended in charity, and Mrs. Haddon's reference to such instances is very apt:—

> If the humane feeling, whose existence is testified by our numerous and well-supported charities, were brought to operate earlier; if it were allowed to determine the way in which the money was earned, instead of the way in which part of it should be spent, then large charities would soon become unnecessary; for the need of them mainly arises from the conditions, destructive of health and morality, under which large masses of our working population are forced to live.

As a third of the industrial capital of England is now that of the shareholders in large limited liability companies, the responsibility for such a state of things is not simply that of a few wealthy men. It becomes all Christian shareholders to beware less their dividends are tainted by woman's sorrow and woman's shame.

A striking instance of the evils of child-marriage in India is furnished by a case which lately came before the chief magistrate of Calcutta. The complainant was a Hindoo girl, aged eleven, who has been married for eighteen months. The husband's brother and mother live in the same house, and the child-wife, compelled to do all the cooking and household work, has been the victim of continued ill-treatment and abuse from her mother-in-law, which culminated in her being bound and gagged, and branded in several places with a hot iron. It is time that the Indian legislature placed some restrictions upon the age at which marriage may be contracted, and such scandalous incidents as the above should serve to strengthen the hands of those who are agitating for the reform of a system productive of so much misery and cruelty. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to know that the Indian High Court of Appeal has finally refused to compel Rakhmabai, the Hindoo child-wife whose case has been the subject of litigation for four years, to live with her husband.

A suggestion was made by Professor Max Müller in The Times a few months ago that an institution should be founded at Calcutta or Bombay for the benefit of these hapless child-widows of India (of whom there are no less than seventy-nine thousand under nine years of age) condemned by the relentless laws of caste to a lifelong penance. We should be glad to hear that this very reasonable and excellent suggestion has taken practical shape.

A West London clergyman is reported as having very properly drawn attention to the growing grievances of overworked domestic servants in Belgravia. On Sunday evenings, between the hours of seven and nine o'clock, as many carriages, it is stated, may be seen conveying their occupants to parties as on any other day of the week. In many houses, after the clock strikes twelve, dances begin. This Sunday fashion of "the upper ten" tells a story, the sadness and hardship of which it is not difficult to think out, as it bears upon coachmen, stable boys, cooks, maids, and many besides. All honour to the West-end clergy who are outspoken on the matter.

We are told that a prayer-meeting is held weekly in the precincts of the House of Commons. Among other members, Sir John Kennaway, Mr. S. Smith, and Mr. H. Wilson, are constant attendants. The First Book of Chronicles tells us that David in his troubles "inquired of God." How different would his life have been had he always done this. And now, at a time of party conflict, misunderstandings, and national agitations, there can surely be no attitude so becoming Christian legislators, as a reverent consulting of God, and a recognition of dependence on his wisdom.

The summing up by the Bishop of Nelson of his paper, "On the prospects of Evangelical Religion in the Colonies," read at the Conference last week of the London and Clerical Lay Union, deserves emphasis: "The prospects of evangelical religion will be bright if we are true." Evangelical religion is a part of Divine wisdom. It must last to the end. But to open the door to unconverted preachers of evangelical doctrine is fatal to it. No less so is the danger of a phraseology which uses such words as conversion, atonement, and consecration, but which does not mean the real thing. Equally hurtful is recourse on the part of evangelicals themselves to unspiritual agencies for carrying forward spiritual work. These cautions go to the very root of that failure of evangelical religion which many are deploring.

Dr. Baldwin, the Bishop of Huron, struck the same keynote when at the same meeting he declared we were bound to stop men from entering the ministry when it was evident that they were not spiritually qualified. They might be learned and eloquent, draw large congregations, and be flattered. But, as to seeking the lost, raising the fallen, and speaking peace to burdened souls, a poor Christian sempstress in her visitations to her neighbours might do more. Others besides Episcopalians would do well to ponder such timely utterances.

We note to the same effect the report of an interview with the Bishop of Travancore, as given in The Yorkshire Post. "You will never," said Dr. Speechly, "convert either Mohammedans or Hindus by controversy. The essential thing is to preach the Gospel." On the other hand the Bishop says, in his diocese of three millions of souls, he guards the people from half-fledged men who are ignorant of theology. The Bishop has started ten Y.M.C.A.'s which help him much. He is now forming Y.W.C.A.'s. He instructs all his clergy to preach constantly on the sanctity of marriage.

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—We have seen a letter lately received from the skipper of a fishing smack in the North Sea, in which he expresses great gratitude for the operations of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. He tells of two of his crew who have received much benefit from the medical aid given by the Mission ship; one of the men, he says, would not have lived to reach Yarmouth if he had been sent home. In view of the great and pressing need for medical help to those poor fellows, we sincerely rejoice to know that a friend of the Mission has just given £3500 to cover the cost of another hospital mission ship, which, by permission of the Queen, will be called the Albert.

The Keswick Convention.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.]

THE fourteenth annual gathering for the deepening of spiritual life is being held this week at this charming retreat among the Cumberland hills. The Convention, properly speaking, began on the Monday evening; but a preliminary meeting for prayer was held in the tent on Saturday evening. There was a great influx of people on Saturday into Keswick, and the gathering in the tent was a very large one. The tent has been re-modelled and greatly enlarged, but it is not likely, even now, that its dimensions will be adequate for the largely increased numbers that attend year after year. It is quite apparent that the Conventions are exercising a powerful influence on the thousands who come yearly.

The heads of the Convention were well to the front at the preliminary meeting on Saturday evening. Mr. Bowker, the veteran chairman, took his place on the platform, and along with him was Mr. Robert Wilson, one of the founders of the Convention. It was a gratification to see present a much-missed speaker who occupies a unique position as a Bible expositor, and whose Bible-readings have made a deep impression—Rev. Hubert Brooke, who has been absent from the last two conventions owing to impaired health. We were glad to see him back in apparent freshness and vigour of health. There were also present, Revs. William Haslam, G. Grubb, J. A. Jacob, &c. After a short time was spent in silent prayer, Mr. Brooke and Mr. Grubb offered prayer, after which Mr. HASLAM gave a very practical and helpful Gospel address on "Forgiveness and cleansing," from Isaiah xliii. 15, "I even I am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake." We thank God, he said, for every one who can rejoice in the forgiveness of sins. Pardon carries life with it. God gives a new life as different as the life of Christ is different from the life of Adam. We limit this forgiveness very much, allowing doubts to come in as to what it covers. There are some Christians who, though they know they have forgiveness in this world, think that they are to stand at the judgment bar of God. We believers are to be judged to be sure, but it is for our works. But we need more than forgiveness; we need cleansing. Now our object in these meetings is not merely evangelistic, but to entreat believers to seek cleansing from all unrighteousness—from those besetments, those entanglements, that produce sinful thoughts, ways, actions; that God may forgive them and remove the causes of them. We have a sinful nature, and our nature can never change. The law of the spirit of life can keep the evil nature down. Christ has not only died to save us, but He is coming to deliver us with a final deliverance; to change our vile body into the likeness of his own glorious body. He, as High Priest, has gone beyond the veil for the cleansing of the believer. May God give us such a blessing at this gathering as we shall not forget all the days of our life, and throughout eternity.

At the forenoon service on Sunday in St. John's Church an excellent and practical sermon was delivered by Rev. J. A. JACOB to a very large and interested audience from Luke i. 74, "That we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve Him without fear." He showed that deliverance and service do not proceed concurrently, but the deliverance must be effected before the service is possible. This deliverance has been achieved perfectly; it is one which we merely accept, not one to which we contribute. Those looking for Christ's life, the life of consecration, must remember that the life of sanctification presupposes the life of justification. When we have found deliverance from the guilt of sin we are not to live a tottering and disturbed life; a see-saw kind of life, sometimes moving away from the path of obedience and making convulsive efforts to find our way back to Christ. The life is a position of peace, of hope, of victory over sin, that should render us superior to the frets and small irritabilities of life.

On Sunday afternoon, in the tent, there was a very large gathering, Mr. Robert Wilson presiding. The Rev. Wm. Haslam delivered a very earnest and impressive address from 2 Peter i. 17.

On Sunday evening, in St. John's Church, Rev. HUBERT BROOKE delivered a remarkably instructive and practical sermon, taking as his subject the first six verses of Exod. xxi., from which he illustrated the nature and conditions of Christian service. The Lord Jesus said in his sermon on the Mount, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon"; but He never gave a third choice. Every soul in the world is a servant. The only matter about which we have a choice is which of the two masters we will serve. Under the heading of the service of Christ, there are put before us in God's Word two very distinct degrees of service—one represented by the first six years of the bondman's service, and the other by the seventh year, when he chose his master's service for ever. The first six years of service the Hebrew servant rendered, was performed to his master as a duty; but in the seventh year his master said he might go free with wife and children. The servant, however, might choose to remain out of love to his master, and pledge himself to be his servant for ever; and in doing so he entered into a deeper rest than he experienced during the first six years, when relieved from his debt, burdens, and anxieties, he served his master not from necessity, constraint, or duty, but because he loved to do so.

On Monday morning there was another large gathering, notwithstanding there was much rain pouring. Mr. Bowker presided. A great many requests for prayer were presented, and Rev. G. C. Grubb offered prayer embracing requests for China, Ireland, England, India, Ceylon, Africa, and especially the part of it that has never heard the Gospel. A touching request was presented by a mother for a backsliding son, which particularly moved the audience, and Rev. Mr. Jacobs led impressively in prayer.

Mr. BOWKER delivered a helpful and stimulating address, from the Epistle of St. Jude, showing that Christians are exhorted to build themselves up in their most holy faith. The audience was much impressed.

The opening meeting of the regular Conference on Monday evening was crowded, in a once more enlarged tent, with at least 2500 Christians from all parts of these islands. A spirit of preparation was everywhere manifest, and men and women wore the look of those who had come to do spiritual business. Mr. ROBERT WILSON struck the right keynote in his opening word, based on Isaiah lxi. The meetings must be a time of blessed rejoicing; when Christians begin to rejoice, they indeed find that they have the joy of the Lord, and that such joy is their strength. It had recently been told that a boy of twelve was converted through seeing how happy the people were at Keswick. Therefore, let the children of Zion be glad in their King. The meetings had been thought and prayed over month after month, and the Lord would not disappoint them.

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE followed with a most suitable exhortation in the same line from the words "Also they saw God and did eat and drink." This should, by God's grace, be the record of every soul who has come prepared to do business with God. Let the meals of blessing be so taken at these meetings that, at the close, all can say "I have seen God and have eaten and drunk in his presence; and in the strength of that meat will I walk all the days of my life."

TRAINING RESCUED SLAVES.

WHILST cruising for the suppression of slavery on the East Coast of Africa, I put into Mombaza for a few days on May 9. Mombaza is a town inhabited by about 10,000 to 15,000 people, principally Arabs and Swahilis, who recognise the sovereignty of the Sultan of Zanzibar. On the opposite side and a little higher up the inlet or harbour stands Frere Town, established since 1874 by Rev. W. S. Price, under the auspices of the C.M.S. This settlement receives a large number of slaves, recaptured by our men-of-war.

I paid a visit to the schools and various buildings. Everything struck me as being very well regulated and in capital order. There are about seventy to eighty girls under the care of Miss Fitch, who takes the deepest interest in them. About the same number of boys are under Mr. England. In view of the material upon which these teachers have to work, I must confess I was agreeably surprised at the results I saw.

The system of training at Frere Town seemed to me a very good and practical one. The boys and girls are taught how to earn their living in different ways. At the same time they are taught to honour God, not only by precept but by example. I am glad to say the simple truths of Christianity are not here wrapped up in a gorgeous ritual. Attention is also paid to training young natives as Bible-readers and catechists.

The children, about 150, of all ages, came off and spent an afternoon on board. They sang part songs and many beautiful old hymns in Swahili to the same familiar tunes one hears at home—such as, "One there is above all others, '&c. It was quite a treat to see and hear these children singing so well and reverently. Everyone of them had been rescued from slavery by our men-of-war. If subscribers to the C.M.S. could have heard them I am sure they would double their subscriptions.

Two days afterwards I went up with Revs. Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones (the latter a coloured minister of the Gospel) to Rabai, fifteen miles inland, standing on a high range of hills, and in the midst of beautiful scenery. This settlement is wholly worked by Mr. Jones, and is indeed a model one. It is composed principally of people from the Wanika tribe. Some of these are Christians; others are not, but have taken up their abode there for safety from the irrepressible Masai warriors. They conform to the rules, and are gradually being brought under Christian influence. Two native readers go into the surrounding country and read the Bible to Wanikas at their request, these readers being supported by the native congregation. A commodious church, neatly built of stone, stands in the centre of the settlement. There is service every morning, and a congregation varying from 200 to 300 at every service. There is a mixed school of about 100. The settlement is very pretty. The Wanikas are of a dark brown hue, and very bright and intelligent looking.

We arrived at Rabai about 9 a.m., and Mr. Jones asked me if I would say a few words in the church, to which I gladly assented. He sent word round to the huts and fields where the people were working and tolled the bell. Soon after 10, I went to the church and was astonished to find the building full. I should say at least 500 were present, the men one side, the women the other, and young people on mats down the centre. It was indeed a remarkable sight to see this congregation—they were so attentive. I spoke a few words on "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Mr. Jones translating most admirably. Every eye was fixed on the speaker and they attended to every word. The service ended with "Rock of Ages," heartily sung in Swahili. I felt that it was indeed a privilege to witness such a sight, and speak to such a congregation.

There is a good and great work going on at Rabai, and also at Frere Town, the former entirely through native agency, and thoroughly evangelistic, and it is deserving of every support from all, whatever may be their denomination, who are desirous of having the Gospel preached to the heathen.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

DEAR SIR,—I am much interested in the correspondence on this subject. In a book entitled "Specific Unbelief England's Greatest Sin," by A. S. Lamb (Nisbet), I find the following passages, which seem to me no less questionable than those quoted by "An Inquirer" in your issue of July 13:—

> "Justified" means made just. Now, "just" is an absolute measure. It admits of no metric comparison. All that can be said of a thought, word, act, or judgment, is that it is just or unjust. It may be the one or it may be the other, but it cannot be more than just, or less than unjust.

But in defiance of this sound aphorism the writer proceeds to affirm that—

> To create a righteousness which could be imputed was the prime object, so far as we sinners are concerned, of our blessed Lord and Saviour's incarnation.

And again—

> The Apostle tells of a righteousness altogether independent of man's personal obedience to this law. He announces that there is a righteousness pure and absolute, perfect and entire. A righteousness consisting in the fulfilment of this very law in its manifest particulars and details, wrought out by Another, and available for the benefit of all who will accept it for their own.

If an act or thought "cannot be more than just," how could a righteousness "consisting in the fulfilment of the law" be created, which could be imputed to another? Was the obedience of the Lord Jesus superfluous, or a life of supererogation, that it could be attributed to others? ANOTHER INQUIRER.

DEAR SIR,—The passages as to Christ's imputed righteousness, quoted by your correspondent, "Inquirer," are not very happily expressed; and in particular it seems objectionable to say that "Christ acquired so much righteousness" as was sufficient to justify all who believe in him, for Christ's righteousness should be regarded as infinite in value. The statement of "P. E. M." is clearer and better.

The controversy as to whether the atonement made by Christ for sinners consisted simply of his sufferings and death, or whether it included also his obedience to the law, is an old one; and opposite views on this question may be taken by those who agree in rejecting the Broad Church theory, that sin might have been pardoned as now, if Christ had never died. But all who hold the evangelical doctrine that we owe the forgiveness of sins to the fact of their having been borne by Christ "in his own body on the tree," must, I think, agree, upon reflection, that the value of his sufferings was connected with his obedience. It is quite certain that Christ's death would have availed us nothing if his righteousness had been less than perfect. Only "a Lamb without blemish and without spot" could be the sin-offering for a guilty world. Neither would the negative righteousness of mere innocence (like that of a lamb) suffice; it must be the positive righteousness of one who had in every respect fulfilled the requirements of absolute justice.

Besides this, if Christ had been a mere man, his righteousness, however perfect, would not have made his sacrifice sufficient in value to redeem the souls of a whole world of sinners. In order that a victim might be found whose life would be a ransom for the human race, it was needful that the Son of God should clothe Himself in human flesh and blood, and so "offer up Himself."

But, granting that no less a sacrifice than that of the righteous Son of God would have availed for the putting away of sin, was it likewise requisite for this purpose that his sacrifice should be preceded by his obedience to the law? We can, of course, understand that a single act of unrighteousness, committed in the course of his human life, would have disqualified Him from bearing the sins of others; but, supposing that Christ had simply come down from heaven, clothed Himself in a human body created for that purpose, and in that body had suffered crucifixion, would his redeeming work have been equally efficacious?

There seems to be some ground for holding the opposite view. St. Paul tells us that Christ's death had the effect of making God's pardoning mercy compatible with his justice (Rom. iii. 25, 26). And if it be asked why Christ's sufferings had this effect, the simplest answer is that they were a homage paid to the honour of God's law, which man had broken. God glorified his righteous law by declaring that the transgression of it could not be forgiven unless its penalty were borne by Christ Himself. Now, this reparation made to the injured majesty of the law would seem to be rendered much more complete by the fact that Christ, who submitted to its penalty, had Himself rendered to it a perfect obedience from the cradle to the cross. Can we think that the law would have been equally honoured if Christ had simply come down from heaven to suffer death and return thither as above supposed? Surely not. This view of the matter seems best to agree with St. Paul's words: "As by the disobedience of one many were made sinners, so by the obedience of One shall many be made righteous" (Rom. v. 19). The obedience here spoken of may refer principally to Christ's obedience in suffering and dying, but there seems no reason why it should not include the whole of his obedience.

If, then, believers owe their justification before God, not only to what Christ has suffered, but also to what he has done on their behalf, we may surely say that, as their sins were laid to his account, so his righteousness is laid to their account; or, in other words, is imputed to them.

St. Paul says again: "He hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). Christ could be made sin for us only in one sense, namely, in having our sins laid to his charge. And if we interpret in the same manner the corresponding expression, "that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him," we must say that his righteousness is reckoned to our account, and that we for his sake are treated as though we had kept the whole law.

I remain, Sir, truly yours,

Paris, July 20. HORACE NOEL.

I would reply to "A. S. A.'s" two queries, by saying (1) that there is no such doctrine in Ss. as "The imputed righteousness of CHRIST," and (2) therefore no use in saying what it means. What is spoken of in the Epistle to the Romans is "the righteousness of God...unto all and upon all them that believe" (chap. iii.). "God just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

The significant fact on which depends "peace with God." It is strict justice or righteousness, not love or mercy, pity or grace—stern justice—now that He has set forth his Son a propitiation (mercy seat) through faith in his blood, to declare, I say, at this time his (God's) righteousness: that He might be righteous, and the righteousfier of him that believeth in Jesus.

In 1 Cor. i. 30, Christ has been made unto the believer, "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Himself, the person, not his work or law-keeping; and in 2 Cor. v., the Christian is spoken of as being "made the righteousness of God in Christ," but what is called "the imputed righteousness of Christ," though it has a large place in human theology, has none in the Word of God.

I would here quietly but firmly protest against the second "extract" in same column as "A.S.A.'s" queries: When, where, and how did the Christ of God "acquire so much righteousness" that it could be doled out to "make many righteous in the presence of God"? What, was He ever in Himself anything but perfectly righteous, and everything else that was perfect? What had He to "acquire"? What He was in Himself He has been made unto the believer. What He did, enabled the righteous God to do this righteously. If He "acquired" anything it was a glory which He could share with those who have been made God's righteousness in Him, for his intrinsic Godhead glory was incommunicable. S. V. H.

[From the above and other communications received, it is evident that our correspondents agree in not accepting the quotations made by "Inquirer" as a correct representation of the doctrine. They are in entire agreement also as to the fallen condition of man; that we are justified through faith in Jesus Christ, and not by works of law; that the earthly life of the Lord Jesus was essential to his atoning and redemptive work; and that the believer is made the righteousness of God in Him. The only difference of opinion appears to be as to the way in which the believer is connected with the righteous life of Christ.—ED.]

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The "Annual Record of Facts and Incidents" in connection with the St. Giles' Christian Mission, under the superintendence of Mr. George Hatton, is deeply interesting from beginning to end. There are in these seventy pages, many and gladdening testimonies of Divine blessing having attended the many efforts put forth in the densely populated and needy district where sin has too long had a sadly strong dominion.

On Sundays and week-days, in fact all through the week and all the year round, meetings of some sort are held in connection with the Mission, and many earnest labourers are more than fully engaged. The field affords grand opportunities for whole-souled effort, and it is gratifying to know that many who have been converted to God by means of the Mission have been led, in the enthusiasm of their love and the fervour of their faith, to attach themselves to one or other of the agencies as active and voluntary workers. In fact, it is customary with Mr. Hatton and his helpers to teach those who receive blessing through the Mission that it is distinctly their duty and privilege to manifest their love for Christ by making known to others the good news of salvation.

Among the "incidents" are some truly remarkable cases of men being turned "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." Criminals have become model Christians, drunkards have become thrifty and thoughtful members of society, and men and women who had sunk to the very depths of misery and sin have been given the helping hand which has enabled them to become citizens of heaven. Then, again, among the poor and neglected children, a good work has been done, cheering their lives, and guiding them into the paths of purity and holiness.

Here is an interesting item of intelligence from the Brewers' Court Branch of the Mission: "Some time ago, a girl came to her teacher for advice. She was, she said, much tried by the worldliness of the family in whose service she was. The counsel given to her was to lay the matter before the Lord in prayer, and not to act hastily. Not long afterwards she reported with great joy that the Lord had opened the way, and given her a situation at Windsor Castle, where she still is."

Not only are the distressed relieved, but work is often procured for those who need it. Hungry children are fed, and the sick are visited. Temperance and cleanliness are advocated, along with sobriety and godliness. In season and out of season, the Mission workers are asserting a really practical Christian activity. Mr. W. Wheatley, the secretary, carries on a remarkably successful Prison Gate Mission. Many a wretched man and woman, released from prison, has, by his good counsel and timely help, been encouraged to seek the ways of honesty and the favour of God.

The St. Giles' Christian Mission is worthy of all the confidence it enjoys, and it is hoped that its workers will be cheered in their endeavours by the hearty assistance of those who, though not on the spot, are not without responsibility to spread light and hope where there is now darkness and despair. Copies of the "Record" (otherwise the twenty-eighth annual report) may be had from Mr. G. Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

POST-OFFICE WORKERS.—At the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, an afternoon meeting was held on Friday last, of gentlemen belonging to the Savings Bank Department of the General Post-office. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided. Sir Arthur Blackwood wrote expressing regret at enforced absence. Brief addresses were delivered by the Earl of Aberdeen, Mr. H. Fairfax (of Sydney, South Australia), by the Chairman, and the General Secretary. Those present quite crowded the room, and the interest was manifested by the evident reluctance with which the audience of young men dispersed.

AN APPEAL FROM INDIA.

Dear Sir,—India is in a peculiar crisis as to one point. There has been a desperate conflict regarding the legislation which licensed certain outcasts for evil purposes. In all that great excitement, who was thinking, who was pleading, who was planning for the rescue of these outcasts? Think of the various phases of the slavery of immorality in India, and of the great numbers of those bound in its chains. Think of the fearful destruction and damnation that surround them.

As those engaged in rescue work, we feel intensely the urgent ueed of some speedy, strong, and practical action. We want Christian friends in England to come over into India and help us. The special need just now is rescue workers—regular visitors, to go out into the highways and hedges, and, by loving entreaty, "compel them to come in." Though there are four or five Rescue Homes in India, yet (so far as we are aware) there are in all India no regular rescue workers devoting their time to this special line of visitation. We have long been appealing for such workers, but thus far in vain.

To make this call more practical and personal, we now appeal pointedly:—

(1) To the Gospel Purity Association.—Your work has taken a strong missionary phase, and your general secretary has recently led the missionaries of India in their powerful charge against state license of vice. Your way is now open to send workers here to "rescue the perishing." Your mission of law for men has been eminently successful; you may now expeet equal fruit in sending a mission of Gospel to the women of India. Will the host of friends who have so heartily prayed and worked for India of late, now assist the G.P. Association by gifts of hearts, hands, and means to enter this great and effectual door? As the general secretary is now in England, preparing soon to return to India, will you kindly act at once?

(2) To the Salvation Army.—You have undertaken special work among these classes in England and Australia; why not begin at once among the fallen of India's millions? Surely you need no prompting in this most important work of salvation. Friends of the Salvation Army should notice that, as a daughter of the General has married its Indian leader, it affords a special opportunity to furnish her with facilities for opening and prosecuting a great rescue work in India.

We have named the above societies because of their recent aggressive action, but we also appeal earnestly:—

(3) To all other Christians.—Let societies or individuals take up this work. We who are in this field feel very keenly the demand for strong and speedy efforts in behalf of these needy outcasts. We will welcome any who come in the name and spirit of the Lord, to pluck bands from the burning. We will assist those who come as far as in our power. Pray and labour for India.

SOUTHEND HOUSE.—This exceedingly well-appointed residence, near Southend, in Kent, was recently opened by Mrs. Frank Bevan, for the reception of poor mothers with infants needing country air and rest, also for children. It is the second of such institutions now attached to the North-East London Gospel Mission. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and there must have been over 100 workers and friends present. Mrs. Bevan spoke with her usual pathos and power, and appealed most warmly for an affectionate and generous regard for the needs and the sorrows of our poorer neighbours. Mr. Chorley gave a very interesting account of the circumstances which led up to the possession of so desirable a building. He asked help towards the furnishing, as well as for current expenses. Tea was served at the close of the meeting in a marquee on the lawn.

LEARN TO GIVE.

Learn to give, and thou shalt bind
  Countless treasures to thy breast;
Learn to love, and thou shalt find
  Only they who love are blest.

Learn to give, and thou shalt know
  They the poorest are who hoard;
Learn to love, thy love shall flow
  Deeper for the wealth outpoured.

Learn to give, and learn to love;
  Only thus thy life can be Foretaste of the life above,
  Tinged with immortality.

Give, for God to thee hath given;
  Love, for He by love is known;
Child of God, and heir of heaven,
  Let thy parentage be shown.

NORTH LONDON NEEDS.

Three years ago a club was opened in Queensland-road, Holloway, for youths between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one. A room, kindly lent by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, then vicar of the parish, was furnished, for use five nights a week, and ever since then endeavours have been made to reach the lads thereby. The first part of each evening is devoted to reading, writing, and arithmetic, the remainder to games and amusements, closing every night with a short Scripture reading and prayer. A Bible-class is held on Sunday afternoons.

Many of the young men are very degraded, but it is encouraging to know that some of the worst have been brought to the Lord, and are now living bright Christian lives. The young lady at the head of the work, and to whom much of the success, under God is due, is anxious to form a drum-and-fife band. An opportunity offers, also, of purchasing a house, admirably adapted for a youths' club and lodging-house. The district is poor, and outside help is being sought. Information will be gladly furnished by Rev. Talbot Hindley, formerly of Margate, now vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway, N.

"OPEN DOORS IN JAPAN."

In the deeply interesting pamphlet bearing this title (1d. Passmore & Alabaster), Miss McLean communicates many remarkable facts, and points some very powerful arguments. Having been for nine years a worker in the field, she speaks from valuable personal experience. Her genuine solicitude for the Japanese is forcibly manifested when she appeals for more workers, and asks impassionately, "Who will go?"

It is abundantly shown that the great need of Japan is the truth as it is in Jesus. The people are so hungering and thirsting for Western knowledge that they will readily listen to expositions of the Christian faith. Above all, "living epistles," such as may be "known and read of all men" are wanted.

The population of Japan is over 37 millions. In 1872 all the native Christians could be counted on one's fingers, and now the number of communicants is 11,000. Having stated this fact, Miss McLean says: "A people who have caught the spirit of progress like the Japanese are sure to advance, so that great responsibility rests on English Christians if they let this golden moment slip." It is hoped that Miss McLean's appeal will meet with a hearty response, especially on the part of those who are most easily able to choose their lot in the matter of sphere of testimony for Christ.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

This Mission has extended its field of operations to Richmond Bridge. It now covers a distance of seventy-two miles. The multitude to which it seeks to minister is made up of sailors of all nationalities, firemen, bargemen, watermen, passengers, emigrants, and soldiers going on foreign service. In addition to three chaplains there are nineteen missionaries, all of whom are sailors; knowing the "ins and outs" of the mariner's life, they are admirably qualified for their duties. It is sought to appoint a Christian seaman as an honorary helper on board each vessel. The account of work accomplished last year was such as greatly to encourage the Committee to extend the work. Never before has so much been done in one year. Thirty-five thousand vessels, with from fifteen to one thousand souls on board, were visited, and over half-a-million tracts in different languages were distributed, besides many thousand copies of the Scriptures. Over twelve thousand emigrants received gratuitously a copy of the New Testament; while farewell services were conducted on 144 emigrant vessels. Temperance work is kept in the fore-front.

To counteract the influence of evil literature, the Mission is distributing Gospel tracts, magazines, and good sound books on board each ship with good results. One of the chaplains says:—On board an Orient liner I was trying to hold a service with the emigrants, when a young fellow came up and told me that he did not believe in the Bible, and continued to interrupt me. I requested him to wait till I had finished speaking, when we could discuss the question quietly. He replied that he wanted to argue the matter at once; so we debated it for a very long time. He then began to use the most foul language about our Lord Jesus Christ, saying that Jesus was crucified for blasphemy, and that his condemnation was not contrary to Jewish laws. I told him if he used such words I would not argue with him any more, but would leave him. I noticed two young ladies who were sitting near, crying bitterly. I went to them, expecting to find that they were in this state of mind because of leaving their native land for a distant country, and tried to comfort them by speaking of the great truths of the Gospel; they informed me that they were not going abroad. They said, "We are crying because of what we have heard our brother say to you just now." I observed, "I am sorry he should have talked in such a blasphemous manner." They requested me to call him, and speak to him again. I did so, and he willingly came. I said to him, "I guarantee you have a praying mother." "Yes," he replied; "and a godly father too." "And yet you don't believe in your father's and mother's God." He rejoined, "No, I do not; I have been taught to believe that the Bible teaching is all a sham." The sisters informed me that he was a runaway lad. They had come after him, just to say good-bye. I impressed upon him the fact that nothing would give him happiness in life but Christ's love in his heart—the knowing of the Saviour as his never-changing Friend. As we were steaming away in the launch, the young fellow leaned over the bulwarks, and called after me, "Thank you, sir, for your good wishes; do not forget to pray for me."

To keep the work in efficiency £100 is needed every week. £250 is still required to make up the amount necessary to purchase a new steam launch. The Secretary is Rev. H. Bloomer, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

IN THE VILLAGES.—At the noon prayer-meeting on Monday, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, Mr. W. R. Lane mentioned, as cause for deep gratitude to God, the remarkable success that is at present attending village preaching in some parts. He gave some interesting details of labour at Westhide, in Hertfordshire, where after a week of tent meetings some twenty people confessed Christ.

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

A correspondent in Northfield writes to us as follows:—

A profound impression has been made by the delegation to the Summer School which came across the seas, and they have already accomplished much good, particularly in kindling fresh interest in the foreign missionary work. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, heads the party. His spiritual, Biblical expositions and affectionate delineation of labours in the foreign field have done much good. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Mrs. Radcliffe came with Mr. Taylor, who is also accompanied by his son, and private secretary. Before returning to England Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe will make a brief tour through America and Canada. Edinburgh University, which sent Prof. Henry Drummond last year, is represented by J. C. B. Geddes, a leader in the Students' Holiday Mission work among the young men outside of the University; Robert Latta and Charles M. Douglas, who started an important work among the working men of Edinburgh. From Oxford come A. V. Magee, son of the Bishop of Peterborough; L. B. Sladden, secretary of the Oxford Christian Union; H. Kempson, F. W. W. Digby, and N. H. Smith; with E. I. Steinitz, C. H. Clissold, from Cambridge, and W. R. Nepoin, a law student of Utrecht, Holland. George B. Studd, of London, is with them, and he with the others have been doing an excellent work. They were given a royal reception by New York and Yale students on arriving in this country, and the fellows expressed themselves as being delighted with their trip.

The great field of usefulness opened before this Bible School for students can be somewhat realised by noticing the scope of the colleges are other institutions represented here. There and fully 400 picked young men from over 100 institutions in this country and abroad. The larger colleges are represented by considerable delegations: Yale stands at the head with 36 men; Mount Hermon has 33; Princeton, 29; Amherst, 25; Oberlin, 25; Cornell, 23; Williams, 12; Harvard, 10; Lafayette, 4; Queen's college, 4; Wesleyan, 6; Vermont, 4; Toronto, 5; Rutger, 5; Springfield School of Christian Workers, 10; with students from 85 other schools scattered over the States and Canada. This body of students board and lodge in the various school buildings, except that perhaps fifty find very comfortable quarters in cosy little tents pitched on the hill sides, where they manage to get most of the conveniences of civilisation with a taste of camp life.

One very noticeable feature and outgrowth of this remarkable school, the like of which was probably never organised on earth before, is the growth and development of the missionary spirit, started at Mount Hermon two years ago, when large numbers consecrated themselves to the work of foreign missions. Thrilling testimonies of returned missionaries each year have done much to stimulate additional cultivation of this portion of the Master's vineyard. The seed sown here has been fructified by the Holy Spirit, and a canvass of the colleges last year resulted in the pledging of more than two thousand young men to foreign missionary fields, a mighty army to be a great factor, under God, in Christianising the world.

The English friends of Mr. Moody would doubtless like to know something about what has been done during the past year on these consecrated hills. While Mr. Moody was absent the past winter on an evangelistic tour through the South and West, several of his colabourers and efficient lieutenants combined in a new departure, which will be much appreciated by the thousands who annually pilgrimage to this spiritual Mecca, in the erection of a model summer hotel. "The Northfield," as it is called, will be an important adjunct to the schools in many ways. Christian men of means can now drop into town for a few days, see the practical benefits of the school, and decide whether they will invest money in this admirable undertaking. To come and feel the heavenly atmosphere that permeats the neighbourhood, is a stimulant to the generous giver, and if Christians were to visit the place but for a few days, the schools would soon be richly endowed.

The schools are flourishing and accomplishing a work that will tell in the generations to come. A dozen young women graduated last month at the Seminary, nearly all beginning at once in missionary fields; while at Mount Hermon ten young men were sent out, one-half the number continuing their education by going through college, and the others going at once into fields of active Christian labour. There have been no changes or additions of buildings at Mount Hermon this year, the schools now having eight handsome brick structures, and seven wooden buildings, but a gymnasium is sadly needed. At the Girls' Seminary a beautiful stone library has been erected by James Talcott, of New York, at a cost of $25,000, the interior of which is finished in old English oak, and it has a capacity for 40,000 volumes. Here again is on opportunity for useful giving, for the library now as yet has only 4000 volumes—a small affair for such an institution.

GEORGE MULLER IN NEW ZEALAND.

(From a Correspondent.)

Since the arrival of Mr. Muller in Australia, we have looked forward to a visit from this honoured servant of God. Mr. and Mrs. Muller arrived in Auckland from Taranaki, on Thursday, April 19. His first service was held in Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's Tabernacle on Sunday morning, April 22, when Mr. Muller preached to a crowded congregation. In the evening the City Hall was filled by an eager throng, many being unable to get in. Deep interest has been taken in Mr. Muller's visit. Invitations were sent inviting him to hold meetings in the various churches.

He was invited to meet the ministers of the city; he was heartily received, and spoke words that stirred every heart and sent many away cheered and stimulated.

During May Mr. Muller held two services on Lord's days, preaching in one of the churches in the morning, and addressing large crowds in the City Hall in the evening. The story of the orphanage brought an overflowing audience in the City Hall when Mr. Muller's account of the Lord's dealings with him was listened to with deep attention. On Tuesday evenings he held large gatherings of Christians in the City Hall, the one for "Christian workers" being highly valued.

He has preached in the different churches—Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Wesleyan, where good congregations have always listened to the word he has delivered, with deep attention and growing interest.

On Friday, June 8, Mr. Muller spoke at an important meeting of ministers in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. The subject was, "How to increase spirituality in the churches." The Ven. Archdeacon Maunsell presided, and the attendance was very good, Mr. Muller's address was a powerful one. At the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. he also spoke words of counsel.

Next Tuesday, June 26, Mr. and Mrs. Muller propose leaving for Sydney, and Melbourne, where they will be gladly welcomed. We are deeply thankful for the visit of this servant of God.

The president of the Y.M.C.A., Rev. Joseph Hill, has returned from holiday missions in Australia, Sydney, N.S.W., and in Dunedin, N.Z. He has been much encouraged, and has been privileged to see much blessing.

Auckland, New Zealand, June 18.

MISSIONARY REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND.

Dear Sir,—A highly important series of missionary meetings has just been held in Edinburgh, which I am sure many of your readers will be glad to hear of. Scotch brethren who attended the Centennial Missionary Conference in Exeter Hall were so impressed with what they saw and heard and experienced in those grand meetings that they desired to have as much of them as possible repeated in the Northern Capital. An influential committee was accordingly appointed to see what could be done to secure this end. They secured the services of Drs. Gordon and Pierson of the United States, Principal McVicar, of Canada, a few missionaries who chanced to be tarrying in this country for a season, and several American ladies, earnest workers in the home work of Foreign Missions.

The meetings began Saturday the 14th inst., with a garden party on the grounds of Mr. Duncan McLaren. This was no mere pleasure party, but a meeting of great earnestness and power which struck the keynote of all the subsequent gatherings. On Sunday the delegates from abroad spoke morning and afternoon in various churches in the city, and in the evening a public meeting of great interest was held in the large Synod Hall, which was filled to its utmost capacity. A very interesting part of that great meeting was the public dedication of five young medical missionaries who are soon to go forward on their grand and merciful mission. On Monday afternoon a ladies' meeting of great power was held in the Free Assembly Hall, and a public meeting which carried the tide of enthusiasm still further was held in the same place in the evening.

Still another meeting was arranged for Tuesday evening—a conversazione—in the Mission House of the Church of Scotland. This proved to be the climax of the whole Conference. A suggestion that was made privately by several persons after the meeting of the previous evening now found more definite and public utterance—viz., that an effort be made to secure the services of Drs. Pierson and Gordon to carry the holy fire of missionary enthusiam into all Scotland. These beloved brethren had given up much of their expected vacation to be present at the Edinburgh meetings. And now the proposal was that they give it all up, and much more time besides, to seek to bring the needs and claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world, and the command of our waiting Lord, to the apprehension of the entire Church of Christ in Scotland. A committee has been appointed consisting of members of the different denominations to arrange for undenominational or rather all-denominational meetings through the country.

None too soon has this holy fire been kindled in Scotland, and the prayer of many, I trust, will be that it may spread over the border, and sweep through England and through all Christendom.

When it is remembered that there are more than one thousand millions of people on the globe to-day who have never heard that Jesus has died; who are dying at the rate of thirty millions a year; that in a little more than thirty years they will all have gone down in death; that we too are fast passing away; that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; that the Saviour is waiting to see of the travail of his soul; that He has placed ample resources in the Church to evangelise the world even in the few years that remain of this century; that He is calling us onward by opened doors and his rich blessing on the work we have attempted—remembering these things, any enthusiasm any of us may have is coldness compared with what ought to enwrap us.

May the Lord graciously forgive the past supineness of his people, and arouse us all to efforts more in keeping with the great work He has placed before us, and more worthy of Him who gave Himself for the life of the world.

Yours in the service of the Gospel,
W. F. Armstrong, of Burmah.

TRAINING BOHEMIAN PASTORS.

The Mission, work on behalf of our Bohemian and Moravian Protestant brethren carried on at Alt-Tschau, near Neusalz, on the Oder, has been attended by blessing. The institution was started in 1868 by Mr. F. A. Ruhmer, with the object of training men who could act as teachers and itinerant ministers in Bohemia and Moravia. The actual home of an original revival of the pure Protestant faith brought about by John Huss, who himself received his impulse from the great English reformer, John Wyclife. Upwards of 300 men have been trained, some of whom are teaching and propagating the Gospel among our oppressed Bohemian brethren.

Last year the Institution contained thirty young Bohemians, some of whom have gone back to their country to enter upon their duty as teachers and evangelists. Many applications had unfortunately to be refused owing to the want of funds. It is desirable to extend the institution in order that many more young Protestants may be received. Any further information will willingly be given by Mr. Leitritz, 41, Sandringham-road, Dalston, London, E.

SAILORS ON THE CORNISH COAST.

Near St. Columb-road Station, on the Cornwall Minerals Railway, is a natural amphitheatre, known locally as the "Queen's Pit," a place much used in the summer as a gathering-place for "teas" and anniversaries. Wesley is said to have preached in this very pit, as well as in the better known pit at Gwennap. On the other side of the county, on the South Coast, lies the beautiful harbour of Fowey. This port now carries on a very extensive and increasing coast trade, which brings many vessels into the river. A special effort is being made to buy and fit up a Sailors' Rest and Home at Fowey. A must suitable missionary—Mr. Lightfoot—is working at Fowey. He has so gained the confidence of all who know him that the work is being taken up all over the county; but Cornwall is not a rich county, and the money comes in but slowly.

Several ladies and gentlemen on the North Coast arranged to hold special services on July 15 and 16 in the Queen's Pit, in order to make the work more widely known. On Monday, which was fortunately fine enough to allow of outdoor meetings, the afternoon meeting was addressed by Miss Messer, from London. Mrs. Perrin, of Mawgan Rectory, also spoke of the good she had known done by means of Sailors' Rests. A large crowd gathered in the "pit" for the evening meeting. This was presided over by Mr. H. J. Rowse, jun., of Carworgie, who has taken much interest in the Mission, and has rendered efficient aid as also the members of his family.

Mr. Lightfoot gave a graphic account of the work at Fowey and the coast. Miss Messer set forth clearly the needs of this and similar work, in which she takes such an active part. Rev. — Burton, of St. Denys, conveyed the cordial invitation of his vicar (Rev. J. G. Childs) to Mr. Lightfoot, to visit St. Denys at an early date. The large numbers present gave evidence of Cornish sympathy in a work peculiarly affecting their own sea-girt county.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE OPEN-AIR PREACHERS' HOLIDAY.

If these preachers know how to work, as they certainly do, they also know how to play. Anyone who saw them at quoits, cricket, football, and croquet on the occasion of their summer festival would have been fully convinced, though a doubter before. This festival was celebrated on the 18th inst. at Leggatts, Potter's Bar, Herts, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, and was the eleventh of the series. Of a total membership of 1000 preachers associated with the Open-Air Mission, 250 managed to assemble on this occasion, the majority from London and its suburbs, but some also from various parts of the country. One had walked ten miles, and another fifteen.

Dinner and tea were served in a spacious tent, and after the former addresses were delivered by Rev. Adam Chambers, from America, and Rev. Muroyn Clare, from Belgrave Chapel. The latter put a three-fold thought into the preachers' hearts about work, by saying it should be done in God's way, in God's strength, and for God's glory. After tea suggestive words were given by Mr. S. G. Sheppard, Mr. Herbert W. Taylor, and Rev. G. S. Batty, Vicar of North Mimms, in which parish Mr. Sheppard's house stands.

Between dinner and tea, Mr. Kirkham (secretary) conducted an hour's prayer-meeting in a tent, with special reference to the weather; and it was noteworthy that not a drop of rain fell here during the day, though thunder and heavy rain prevailed in districts not far removed. These active spirits divided themselves into three bands on their way to the railway station, and held three vigorous meetings on Little Heath and in Potter's Bar, thus paying back in spiritual things what they had received from the locality in personal enjoyment.

In the middle of summer what should be more welcome to Christian hearts than a stimulating record of open-air preaching, bidding the reader go and do likewise? Such a document is the thirty-fifth annual report of the Open-air Mission, recently issued. As we glance at the contents, we are surprised that so much work can be done for so small an income, even though we know that most of the thousand members are volunteers.

Another point which will surprise some is that so much present fruit is found from this wayside sowing. We are told of hundreds of conversions, and some striking ones are given as specimens. But the state of the masses, as revealed by the special agents of the Mission, prove how urgently this work is still needed. This is specially seen in the records of "The Racing Mania." The pictures which illustrate this report will still more commend it to general readers. Copies, sixpence each, may be had at the office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—A very hearty meeting was held on behalf of this Mission, at Nuneaton, on Wednesday, 18th inst. Mr. D. C. Joseph (who has recently returned from Jerusalem) gave a most interesting account of his mission work among his poor Jewish brethren. His description of the Holy Land, and especially of the "Jews' Wailing Place," was graphic and touching; so was his account of the readiness of some Jews to listen to the open-air preaching of the Gospel.

COSTLY CHRISTIAN WORK.—Cunning critics have sometimes busied themselves with calulations as to how much it cost on the average to convert a Jew, a Mohammedan, or a Hindu. If the bill St. Botolph's vestry has to pay for expenses connected with the Prince of Wales's visit the other Sunday be a fair sample of the outlay on similar occasions, it must take a fortune to edify a prince—and then the result may not be very satisfactory. This account was about £300, to be exact, 3s. 3d. under that sum. This is a heavy amount to pay to get one sermon preached to one prince; and it casts into the shade all the extravagance of the most lavish missionary society.—Christian Leader.

DRUNKENNESS IN FRANCE.

At the Aldersgate-street Noon-day Prayer-meeting on Friday last, Mr. C. E. Faithfull, of Marseilles, spoke on this subject. In the course of an interesting address, he said that there is a popular idea abroad that drunkenness does not exist in France. People would soon disabuse themselves of this idea if they mixed with the people. Drunkenness is on the increase in France. Shocking cases of depravity arising from the influence of the drink are common. The drinking saloons are, as a rule, open all night, and at five in the morning the effects may be seen by those who explore the back streets of the cities. In the cafés fifty out of every hundred persons may be seen drinking absinthe.

A man in Marseilles introduced a vile drink called Pekoe, which may now be found all over France. He has built himself a palatial residence, valued at four million francs, out of the profits. It is a significant fact that on the quay at Marseilles where the Sailors' Home stands there are sixty-three cafés; all of these are brilliantly lit up at night for the supply of drink. Drunkenness may not be the great sin of France, but it goes hand in hand with the giant evil—immorality.

ABRAHAM'S FAITH & OBEDIENCE.*

We must not suppose that Abraham found the command to offer up Isaac an easy one. From the narrative in the Book of Genesis we should infer that he expected God to provide a substitute for Isaac: "And Abraham said, My son, God will provide Himself a lamb for a burnt offering; so they went both of them together" (Gen. xxii. 8). But the Apostle gives us plainly to understand that Abraham offered his son because he accounted that God was able to raise him from the dead. Both answers are true. They reveal to us the anxious tossings of his spirit, seeking to account to itself for the terrible command of Heaven.

At one moment he thinks God will not carry matters to the bitter end. His mind is pacified with the thought that a substitute for Isaac will be provided. At another moment this appeared to detract from the awful severity of the trial, and Abraham's faith waxed strong to obey, even though no substitute would be found in the thicket. Another solution would then offer itself. God would immediately bring Isaac back to life. For Isaac would not cease to be, nor cease to be Isaac, when the sacrificial knife had descended. "God is not God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto Him" (Luke xx. 38). Besides, the promise had not been withdrawn, thought it had not yet been confirmed by an oath; and the promise involved that the seed would be called in Isaac, not in another son. Both solutions were right. For a ram was caught in a thicket by the horns, and Abraham did receive his son back from the dead, not literally, indeed, but in a parable.

Most expositors explain the words "in a parable" as if they meant nothing more than "as it were," "so to speak"; and some have actually supposed them to refer to the birth of Isaac in his father's old age, when Abraham was "as good as dead" (Heb. xi. 12). Both interpretations do violence to the Greek expression, which must mean "even in a parable." It is a brief and pregnant allusion to the ultimate purpose of Abraham's trial. God intended more by it than to test faith. The test was meant to prepare Abraham for receiving a revelation. On Moriah, and ever after, Isaac was more than Isaac to Abraham. He offered him to God as Isaac, the son of the promise. He received him back from God's hand as a type of Him in whom the promise would be fulfilled. Abraham had gladly received the promise. He now saw the day of Christ, and rejoiced (John viii. 56).

* From The Epistle to the Hebrews. By T. C. Edwards, D.D. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This, the latest volume of "The Expositor's Bible," is a work of very great value. The meaning of the Epistle is brought out with much clearness, and at the same time with a freshness which will make the book specially acceptable to students. Like the other volumes of the series, this is essentially popular, although it takes into account the most recent results of scholarship.

Negative Criticism.

Present Day Tracts on "The Higher Criticism."—Six tracts, by well-known scholars, are here brought together in a handy volume. Questions relating to the origin of Christianity, and the authenticity of the Pentateuch, the Gospels, and the greater Epistles of Paul, are ably dealt with by Rev. Drs. R. Payne-Smith, A. B. Bruce, H. Wace, F. Godet, and the late J. S. Howson. In a way that should be reassuring to all who know in whom they have believed, it is shown that negative criticism knows no consistency, and is often very irrational. Though the critics are ever shifting their ground, and discrediting each other, it is well that searching essays like these should be written to indicate to the general public the tendencies and results of destructive criticism. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Rome and the Scriptures.

The Power behind the Pope. By William Wright, D.D. 1s. Nisbet. About a year and a half ago, M. Henri Lasserre, of Paris, an accomplished writer, and a devout Roman Catholic, brought out an edition of the four Gospels in picturesque modern French. To the surprise of many, the book received the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris, making it "authorised." The Pope even sent M. Lasserre his "apostolic benediction," and expressed his approval of the work. In the course of twelve months no fewer than twenty-five editions left the press. Then, all of a sudden, the "sacred congregation of Cardinals" condemned and proscribed the version as a book of "degraded doctrine," which none of the faithful were to read or possess! In the little volume before us, Dr. Wright tells this "tale of blighted hopes," and gives a translation of M. Lasserre's remarkable preface to his first blessed, and then cursed, version of the Holy Gospels. It is clearly shown that there is "a power behind the Pope, the Cardinals, the Archishops, the Bishops, the people, and the press of France," which thus dashes the bread of life from the children's hands. Surely the enemy of God and souls is that power. Dr. Wright has done a good service in writing this exposé, and we hope his book will be widely read.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The first monthly part of the new series of Great Thoughts (6d. A. W. Hall) contains a large selection of fresh and readable extracts from well-known authors, as well as special contributions both of prose and poetry. A historical tale by Dr. George Macdonald is begun.

Bible Helps for Busy Men. By Algernon C. P. Coote. 1s. Hawkins. To many persons this volume of Scripture illustrations, references, and analysis will be very useful. That it has already been acceptable is clear from the fact that the copy before us is one of the third edition. Sunday-school teachers and workers needing help in the preparation of addresses will find much to help them in this book.

Non-Alcoholic Beverages. By Robert Seager. 1s. National Temperance Publication Depot. As a man of business and a temperance reformer, the author of this book is deservedly held in high respect throughout the Eastern counties. He not only tells us how to make several cheap and useful non-intoxicating beverages, but presents us with some entertaining sketches of his busy life as an advocate of total abstinence principles. The book has a real reason of existence, and we trust it will be instrumental of good.

The Days of the Passover. By Thomas Newberry. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. The events of the last Passover week are dealt with in a suggestive manner in this little book, and some notes are added on the manifestations of the risen Lord, and his ascension into heaven. Through misapprehension as to an elementary fact in chronology, Mr. Newberry suggests that Christ was 37 years of age at the time of his death; but the commonly-held belief that our Lord's earthly career extended over a period of about 33½ years rests on grounds which may well be regarded as conclusive. We do not gather that Mr. Newberry has at command any facts to support his singular statement.

Conversations at the Unity Club. Reported by a Member. 2s. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company. With a view to Christian unity, religious differences are here presented as discussed by a number of earnest thinkers. Sceptics, Romanists, and Protestants of various denominations enter into more or less vigorous debate, and a perusal of their opinions and contentions may in some cases be turned to profitable account. There is no pretension to thoroughness in argument, but there is at times a forcible expression of sound sense and high principles. To those who are interested in the thrashing out of questions of doctrine, the book will have a special attraction.

Absent from the Body, present with the Lord, is an anonymous tract, raising questions of absorbing interest. J. F. Shaw & Co.

"Pull it up by the Roots." By E. L. 6d. per doz. National Temperance Publication Depôt. An excellent envelope tract, showing the miseries that come from indulgence in strong drink.

"The King of Glory." Sacred Cantata. Compiled by Rowland Cross. The contents are varied and well chosen, the whole forming an attractive Song Service. Both notations are given. J. Haddon & Co., Bouverie-street.

An Officer's Experiences of Foreign Missions. By Major Seton Churchill. 2d. Nisbet. The claims of missions are warmly vindicated in this pamphlet, by one who has witnessed a good deal of Christian activity in heathen lands.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons have just brought out a series of illustrated booklets, entitled Wisdom for Workers. In the form of terse narratives, much instruction of a healthful kind is presented to artisans and thoughtful workers in general. 6d. per packet of twelve.

Text Cards for Children to Work. Miss H. C. Brown, Trelawney-road, Falmouth, has just brought out a second series of text cards for children to work in silks and wools. When filled in, the texts will be specially suitable for hanging up in hospitals, mission rooms, &c. The price is 1s. 2d. per packet, post free.

The Religious Tract Society has published a second series of the very attractive little books called Aunt Mary's Pretty Pages for Little People. The excellent pictures will certainly commend the very wholesome letterpress to young folks. These useful little books are made up in packets of twelve.

Christian Perfection, So-called. By Robert Brown. 2d. Partridge. The author of this tractate is a reliable expositor of the Scriptures. He shows very plainly what Christian perfection is, and what it is not. We sincerely trust that many who desire light on the subject may have the advantage of perusing Mr. Brown's very instructive little book.

The Marian Persecution. Messrs. Broom & Rouse, 15 and 16, Paternoster-square, have published a historical map of the Marian persecution, exhibiting the principal martyrdoms that occurred in England and Scotland in the sixteenth century. An accompanying key gives some details—on the one hand sad, and on the other glorious—of this ever-interesting chapter of history. The price of the map and key is 1s.

OBITUARY.

MISS MARGARET JANE GREEN.

This earnest and devoted worker died very suddenly on the 6th inst. As the founder, in 1866, of the Orphan Homes at Sibton, Yoxford, Suffolk, the spiritual and temporal needs of the inmates were, to the day of her death, her constant care. The work was not without its difficulties; debt had to be fought against, illness in the Homes had to be faced, but faith triumphed over all, and God blessed the work carried on in his name. The future of the Homes at Yarmouth and Saxmundham is in the hands of Him who is a "Father to the fatherless," and who will doubtless choose others to care for them.

MR. GEORGE FULLER, OF SERMON-LANE MISSION.

The poor of Islington have sustained a heavy loss in the removal of the founder and superintendent of the Sermon-lane Mission, Liverpool-road. He had suffered from a very painful complaint for many months, and latterly his sufferings had been most severe, but borne with Christian patience and resignation. His last moments were full of peace. Mr. Haig Miller, who knew and loved him well, will shortly supply us with a sketch of the exemplary life and labours of this devoted man, who so beautifully showed what even humble talents could be made when consecrated to the Saviour.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at Stonehaven, conducted by Mr. F. S. Ball, during July and August.——For work in four tents under the care of the Gordon Evangelical Mission in Aberdeenshire.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE CHURCH ASSOCIATION."

SIR,—I have read with surprise and sorrow the letter of "L. D.," relating to the action of the Church Association, and I equally lament the agreement which you express with his deprecation of the effort now being made to exercise discipline in the Church of England by the prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln for his flagrant contravention of the law.

(1) That as an attempt to maintain and enforce the discipline of the Church, by means of the Ecclesiastical Courts constituted for that purpose, will bind together and increase the number of those who are breaking the law, it is inexpedient and unwise to make such attempt. This is simply an abandonment of all claim to uphold law and order in either Church or State. If no efforts are to be made to repress crime, because criminals will only unite more closely, and attract others to their side, there is at once an end to all authority, and consequently to all order. Law and order must be henceforward but empty names.

(2) That "opinion cannot be put down by force," and that those who contemplate prosecuting the Bishop of Lincoln should "go to the God of truth," and not to Cæsar.

There are two entirely erroneous assumptions here. First, that it is attempted to put down opinion by force. It is not opinion that is in question, but practices which contravene the law of the Church of England. People are free to hold whatever opinions they choose, but men holding orders in the Church of England, whether bishops, priests, or deacons, are not at liberty to carry on practices forbidden by her laws. Secondly, that the Church Association is appealing to Cæsar. They are doing nothing of the kind; they are appealing to the laws of the Church, formed for the very purpose of preventing such practices. To call this appealing to Cæsar, and to be trying the courts of law instead of the throne of grace, is to raise an utterly false issue.

(3) That the lawbreaker in this instance is a most excellent, sincere, and conscientious man. This may be so, although your correspondent very naïvely asserts that "everything that the Bishop of Lincoln does was condemned years ago." He and others with him may persuade themselves and believe that "what they do and teach is true and right," and that they are acting loyally to the Church of England, though their practices have been "condemned" by her laws. But the question is one, not of their personal virtues or private opinions, but of their public breaches of the law of the Church of which they are ministers. Law takes cognisance of a man's actions not of his convictions. And to urge that a person's excellence of character is to exempt him from the consequences of repeatedly and flagrantly breaking the law of the land is to take up an utterly unjustifiable and ruinously dangerous position.

The writer assumes that although those who are "bringing forward this case are honest and sincere in their desire to uphold the cause of Christ's truth in the land," they have given up faith in the power of prayer, and are not approaching the throne of grace. I can assure him that this is not the case. It is in the spirit of much prayerfulness and of entire reliance on the power of God that the Church Association is making this effort to maintain purity of doctrine and practice in the Church of England? We give all possible credit to Ritualists for honesty of purpose; we are ready to approach them as private individuals with Christian consideration; but we are compelled to regard them as public officials of the Church to which they profess to belong, whose influence and example carry immense weight; and when we find them continuously, deliberately, and intentionally violating her laws, and thereby leading multitudes of our fellow-countrymen back into the soul-destroying errors of Popery, from which our ancestors died to deliver us, we have no course open but to withstand them to the face, and by the use of the Church courts and laws, to restrain them from practices utterly subversive of the evangelical character of the Church of England.

Your correspondent would apparently abandon all attempts to exercise discipline in the Church. I do not then understand the teachings of either Old or New Testament. The Church at Thyatira was specially blamed by Christ because she "suffered" false doctrine and practices, and unless we do all that lies in our power to repress both, we must every one of us incur the same guilt. While entirely at one with "L. D." in his view that we should "outpreach, outpray, and outwork the Sacerdotalists," I assert that it is our bounden duty, in loyalty to God, and in faithfulness to his truth, to put in force the laws framed for the maintenance of godly discipline, or else to abandon all claim to be considered Protestant members of the Church of England.

I therefore desire most earnestly to urge all who still occupy that position to support by their prayers and means the Church Association in their (to my mind) God-honouring and chivalrous effort to save the Church of England from the disastrous position into which the conduct of the Bishop of Lincoln by his breaches of her laws, and the Bishop of London by his veto in the St. Paul's reredos case, are bringing her.

Never was there, in my opinion, a graver crisis. Ritualism is flooding the land, the destinies of the Church of England are at stake, and the welfare of the souls of millions who are dependent on the ministrations of her clergy is grievously imperilled. Should the efforts being made now fail; should our Bishops be permitted, either by the law, or in contravention of the law, ostentatiously to carry on Romish practices, and to sanction the setting up of idolatrous images in our cathedrals, the Church of England, hitherto professedly Protestant, may write Ichabod upon her gates, and those who prefer faithfulness to the truth of the Gospel to membership in a Popish establishment will come out of her, that they may not be partakers of her plagues."—Yours faithfully, S. ARTHUR BLACKWOOD.

SIR,—Referring to the letter of "L. D." in your last impression, will you allow me to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the objects of the Church Association, but have been long ago convinced that its methods of action have failed and must fail to command success. For it is vain and futile to attempt, after the judgment of the Privy Council in the Ridsdale and Bennett cases, to carry on the conflict upon the basis of "The Prayer Book as it is." The eastward position, and the teaching with impunity of "the real objective presence"—or, in plain words, the sacrifice of the Mass—have been conceded to the Romanising party.

There is but one real and effective remedy, and that is the eradication from the Book of Common Prayer of every rubric and every phrase which can be regarded as offering a plausible ground for Sacerdotal and Romish assumption. Such a remedy, too long neglected, may now involve disestablishment and disendowment. But from the ruins of a Romanised Establishment, there might be evolved a thoroughly Protestant Church of England, with a Prayer Book that should offer, not stumbling blocks, but comfort and consolation in its use, to every humble worshipper of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Your obedient servant,
CHARLES STIRLING.

The Vicarage, New Malden, Surrey, July 23.

THE G.S.C. BAND OF LOVE.

SIR,—I observe in an ostensibly philanthropic journal that an attempt is being made by a food reform association to draw the George Smith of Coalville Society and Band of Love, at the instigation of friends, into the region of favouring one particular society.

Kindly permit me to say that the G.S.C. Band of Love, although the friend of all and enemy of none, favours no one particular society, sect, or party more than another.

Its chief aims are: First to draw the children and adults, in the gutter and at the bottom of the social ladder, into a higher and happier state of morals, social and religious life, so as to be fitted for heaven; secondly, to bind together the scattered members of the various Christian communities into one common brother and sisterhood the world over; and, thirdly, when once initiated by personal contact only, they are "brothers" or "sisters" with their own members for life.

The G.S.C. Band of Love has been started three years in its present form, and is entered at the Stationers' Hall to prevent the Band of Love being made subservient to parties for the carrying out of their own special aims and objects not in unison with the lines laid down; but branches may be formed, and are being formed, by the various churches and parties, if in unison with the liberal lines opened out.

The G.S.C. Band of Love has been set in motion by me in response to the cries and songs of the poor children, and the promptings of the Good Spirit, after much prayer, anxiety, trouble, and expense, to spread the love to God and man in the dark nooks and corners of our land and the world, and not as a primary for the regulating and prohibiting of what we are either to eat, drink, or wear.

Particulars of the G.S.C. Society and Band of Love can be had only in the first instance of the Secretary, at the Cabin, Crick, Rugby.

I am, very sincerely yours,
GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville.

PRAYER FOR FINE WEATHER.

DEAR SIR,—The extraordinary continuance at this season of inclement and very rainy weather is causing grievous loss and suffering to many persons throughout the kingdom. And if it is further prolonged it will very seriously damage the harvests.

It may, therefore, be well worth the consideration of your readers, whether they may usefully serve their country by putting up humble prayers to God for sunshine, both individually and in congregations. The exercise of sincere and reverent prayerfulness can hardly fail to bring down some real blessing from above. LONDINENSIS.

"SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS AND THE TIMES."

SIR,—Some weeks ago you published the admirable address by Rev. W. Guest, recently delivered to the Sunday-school Teachers of Tunbridge Wells. I read the address as it appeared in your columns, and was very much struck with it. I find it is now printed, under the above title, in pamphlet form, at the instance of Sunday-school teachers in Yorkshire. It may be obtained (5s. a hundred) of Mr. Brierley, 2, Bond-street, Leeds. I have ordered copies for my own teachers, and another minister in my neighbourhood is ordering for his. The pamphlet ought to be in the hands of the Sunday-school teachers of England.—Yours faithfully,
Brighton. W. CROSBIE.

WORK WANTED.

SIR,—Complaints appear from time to time in THE CHRISTIAN and other religious papers about the lack of workers at home and abroad; the requiring of high salaries, and other difficulties of somewhat similar nature. Strange to say, my observation as regards England (outside London) leads to a very different opinion. After inquiring and looking round the country for a sphere of unsectarian work, without any stipend or any conditions except a bracing climate and the absence of debt and crotchets, I can find none. Most places seem fairly supplied with buildings and workers, though judgments may differ as to whether the right people hold office, and whether the agencies are suitably organised.

Those persons who have large private means can build a hall in any likely locality; but those who (like myself) cannot afford this are in a difficult position. Can your readers offer practical advice, or state (from personal knowledge) any small town where an undenominational hall needs a worker, and where he would be allowed to work. Hitherto I have not met with a case which would bear investigation.—Yours faithfully, PAULUS.

THE MATCH GIRLS' STRIKE.—We are pleased to see that the grievances of the match girls employed by Messrs. Bryant & May have at last been recognised. The terms of settlement certainly show that their complaints were abundantly justified.

HOXTON HALL.—Rev. D. O. Mears, pastor of Piedmont Church, Worcester, Mass., where the late John B. Gough worshipped, visited Hoxton and delivered an earnest Gospel address on Sunday last. The meeting was preceded by two large open-air gatherings. Much blessing is being experienced at this centre.

CHRIST CHURCH, WEST KENSINGTON PK., W. was about to be closed at the end of last year, consequent upon the resignation of the vicar of St. Matthew's, by whom it had been erected. Bishop Richardson, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, succeeded, however, in securing the building in the interests of evangelical religion, and during the past few months a fair congregation has been maintained. At present the church is not self-supporting. Particulars will be willingly supplied by Rev. Arthur Poulton, 8, Haarlem-mansions, Brook-green, W.

Sunday Afternoon, August 5.

THE PENITENT THIEF.—LUKE xxiii. 39—43.

Two thieves were led with Jesus to be put to death. From Luke's account we learn that both were malefactors (chap. xxiii. 32, 33, 39), and from Matthew's that both were revilers of Jesus (Matt. xxvii. 44). They had possibly formed part of the band of Barabbas, and incurred the guilt of revolt against the Roman Government. The one, whose brief history we are now to consider, was convinced of sin in the presence of the Saviour and of his companion, became a believer in Jesus as the Messiah, and received the assurance that he should be with Jesus in Paradise on the day upon which he was crucified. In this narrative we have—

(1) A FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY (Mark xv. 28, and Isa. liii. 12).—More than 700 years before Isaiah had said, "He was numbered with the transgressors." The truth of prophecy is revealed in its regard for details. The corruption of the human heart is seen in the place assigned to the Saviour by the Jews. He was put to the most shameful death (Gal. iii. 13; Phil. ii. 8), in the worst of company.

(2) A DISPLAY OF MERCY.—If in the beginning of his ministry Jesus manifested his glory by a display of his power (John ii. 17), in the end of it He did so by a display of his saving mercy. The Holy Spirit must have wrought the marvellous change, which was manifest in the penitence and faith of the malefactor, for he called Jesus Lord, and no man can do this but by the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. xii. 3). The Holy Spirit usually works by the instrumentality of human means, and there are circumstances in the account of our Lord's trial and death, which may have been used in the conversion of the thief. There was the testimony of Pilate (Matt. xxvii. 21), the lamentation of the great company (Luke xxiii. 27), the words of Jesus to the daughters of Jerusalem (Luke xxiii. 28), the prayer of Jesus for his murderers (ver. 34), his calm dignity as He hung upon the cross (Isa. liii. 7), the prophecy of judgment (Luke xxiii. 29—31), and the writing in three languages upon the cross, in which the hand of the enemy set forth the kingly character of the blessed sufferer (Luke xxiii. 38).

(3) A REAL CONVERSION.—A man in Christ is "a new creature" (2 Cor. v. 17). Such was the penitent thief. The evidence is unmistakeable. Note that: (a) He ceased his reviling (Mark xv. 32).—He who turns to God turns away from sin (1 Thess. i. 9). (b) He rebuked sin (ver. 40).—He rebuked it, we may gather, because he hated it. This is Godlike (Jer. xliv. 4). (c) He feared God (ver. 40).—Implied in the question, "Dost not thou fear God?" There is reason for such fear (Luke xii. 5), and it is "the beginning of wisdom" (Prov. ix. 10). (d) He acknowledged his guilt (ver. 41).—"Due reward." Compare the prayer of the publican (Luke xviii. 13), and the confession of Paul (1 Tim. i. 15). (e) He vindicated the character of Jesus (ver. 41).—"Nothing amiss." "No fault," said Pilate (ver. 4), and the thief endorsed the judgment (comp. 1 Peter i. 22; Cant. v. 16). (f) He recognised the kingship of Jesus (ver. 12).—"Lord," "kingdom" (contrast the derisive inscription, ver. 38). While the scorner writes "This is the King of the Jews," the penitent grasps the blessed truth and prays to be remembered in the kingdom. (g) He began to pray.—Desired not temporal deliverance, but deliverance from sin. (h) He was assured of acceptance (ver. 43).—"Paradise" is in "the third heaven" (2 Cor. xii. 2, 4). The tree of life is "in the midst" of it (Rev. ii. 7), and as the tree of life is in the city that hath no need of the sun (Rev. xxi. 22, to xxii. 2), that city must be "Paradise." Jesus was there, even while He was on earth (comp. "in heaven," John iii. 13), and therefore the thief could be with Him in heaven before the time of his resurrection.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—Sir Joseph Pease has set down on the motion paper of the House of Commons, for an early day, a resolution to the effect that the system by which a large portion of the Indian revenue is raised is financially unsound and morally indefensible, and urging upon the Indian Government that they should cease to grant licences for the cultivation of the poppy, except to supply the legitimate demand for opium for medical purposes.

THE BURNT OFFERING.

LEV. i. 1—9; GOLDEN TEXT, Isa. liii. 6.

LEVITICUS.—This Book is so named, because the sons of Levi had charge of the ceremonials described therein. It was the service-book of the Levites.

Teachers of more advanced classes may do well to note the ordained by the Levitical Law. These were divided into two classes: I. The Sweet Savour Offerings—viz. (1) the Burnt, (2) the Meat, and (3) the Peace Offerings; and II. The Expiatory Offerings—viz. (1) the Sin, and (2) the Trespass Offerings. The Burnt Offering speaks of Christ, in his absolute, willing and loving devotion to the Father—the perfect Servant and Son; the Meat Offering speaks of his earthly life of perfect self-sacrifice for others; his service man-ward, and the Peace Offering tells of Christ as the ground of peace and communion between God and his people, and also, as the great object of satisfaction and delight to both God and his people. The Burnt Offering and the Meat Offering, taken together, speak of Christ, our Righteousness. In the Burnt Offering we see Him fulfilling the law:—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart"; while, in the Meat Offering, we see Him fulfilling the other half of the perfect law:—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Christ our Peace, and Christ the Bread of Life, are both shown in the Peace Offering. None of these three offerings refer to expiation or propitiation. They have to do with the keeping of the law, not with atonement for transgressions of that law.

The Sin and Trespass offerings look to the law broken, and refer entirely to the putting away of sin's guilt. They speak not of Christ our righteousness, but of Christ our Justification—"the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." The Sin offering dealt with sin in the heart, as a principle of evil; the Trespass offering with sin in the life, in its distinct manifestations.

THE BURNT OFFERING

shows us Christ "offering Himself without spot to God." "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God," might well stand as its motto. It gives us the Godward aspect of the work of Christ, revealing the servant "faithful unto death," the Son ever honouring the Father.

A MALE WITHOUT BLEMISH.—So Jesus was without sin. "Holy, harmless, and separate from sinners"—"a Lamb without spot or blemish." The tempter could find "nothing in Him." HE SHALL OFFER IT OF HIS OWN VOLUNTARY WILL.—God must be served freely and lovingly. Constrained service is an offence to Him, but loving service a joy. How free the service and sacrifice of Jesus! Loving the Father utterly, He could not choose but delight to do his will. "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of myself" (John x. 17, 18). "In this voluntary act, Christ tells out to God his own deep love to Him." AT THE DOOR OF THE TABERNACLE, &c.—i.e., that part of the court which was in front of the Tabernacle, and in which stood the brazen altar and the laver. Here only could sacrifices be offered. BEFORE THE LORD (that he may be accepted before the Lord, R.V.). Only the perfect victim could be accepted. Blemish in the victim would argue that the offerer was not right in heart. HE SHALL PUT HIS HAND UPON THE HEAD OF THE BURNT OFFERING.—By this act, the offering and the offerer became one, and so the acceptableness of the offering was secured to the offerer. Just so does simple faith in Jesus make the believer one with Him, and give Him a part in the one perfect offering. When we fully claim Christ as ours, we take also the full merit of his obedience, because we are joined to Him, identified with Him, "accepted in the Beloved." IT SHALL BE ACCEPTED FOR HIM TO MAKE ATONEMENT FOR HIM.—At first sight "to make atonement" seems to speak of propitiation, the expiation of offences against the law. But the words may be taken to mean, making satisfaction—God's righteousness, requiring perfect and loving obedience, needs to be satisfied by the burnt offering, just as his justice, which calls for punishment in view of law broken, requires the sin offering. AND THE PRIESTS, AARON'S SONS, SHALL...SPRINKLE THE BLOOD ROUND ABOUT UPON THE ALTAR. "What, then, does the shedding of blood signify? Death? No. It signifies the giving of life. The meaning is, we pour out our life in one libation of love. It is thine, Thou Giver of all existence. The man standing over the red stream is saying: Lord, this is what I would daily do, give back the life to the Life-Giver; have no life of my own, except as it is re-given me by the God to whom I dedicate it."—Parker. But first of all, the blood speaks of Christ's life given in loving obedience to the Father. HE SHALL FLAY THE BURNT OFFERING, AND CUT IT INTO HIS PIECES, and so lay bare the inward parts. The victim was to be without blemish within, as well as without—both in every part, and as a whole. In Christ were no imperfections. He was perfect in thought and heart, as well as in deed and work. His life was perfect as a whole, and perfect in every part. THE PRIESTS, AARON'S SONS, SHALL LAY THE PARTS.—All who love Jesus are God's priests. As priests, we see and admire Jesus as the Burnt Offering—his loving devotion to the Father. TO BE A BURNT SACRIFICE, AN OFFERING MADE BY FIRE; better, an offering sent upwards (as incense), a sacrifice made by fire. OF A SWEET SAVOUR UNTO THE LORD.—Words that tell of God's joy in the loving obedience of his Son.

LESSON POINTS.

The perfect consecration of Jesus to his Father's will—"I do alway those things that please Him." He did God's will from love, and with gladness. "I delight to do thy will." "I love the Father, and as the Father hath given Me commandment, even so I do."

The Father's joy in his love and obedience unto death.

Christ as our example of obedience, and God's delight in every act of obedience done from love to Him.

ILLUSTRATION.

Before the battle of the Nile, the commander of one of the war-ships placed his son Cassabianca, a lad of thirteen, on certain duty, telling him to stay at that post till relieved by his order. Early in the fight the father was killed. The boy, ignorant of his father's fate, stuck to his post, even when flames broke out, and the sailors were deserting the burning and sinking ship. He cried aloud, "Father, may I go?" and not receiving the permission, he held his position till overcome by the flames.

AFRICAN MISSION.—The coloured missionaries on the Congo, sent out two years ago by Mr. Lewis Johnson, are busy at the Mukimvika Station, but want encouragement in their school work. The pinafores, toys, &c., they took out were much valued, and a new supply will be despatched by Mrs. Hind Smith, 20, Windsor-road, Denmark-hill, S.E., this week. Pinafores, small toys, beads, pins, scissors, knives, picture-books, &c., indeed anything suitable for school prizes, will be very acceptable.

THE WHITE CROSS SOCIETY.—The second annual meeting of this Society, held a few days since in Exeter Hall, was presided over by the Bishop of Durham. The report stated that the Society is working in conjunction with the Church of England Purity Society and other associations in Great Britain and America, and that branches are being formed in South Africa, Shanghai, and other foreign centres. There had been a steady increase of members during the past year, of whom nearly 70 per cent. are young clerks in business houses. Addresses were delivered by the Bishops of Sydney and Calcutta, the Earl of Aberdeen, and Canon Wilberforce.

LODGING-HOUSE WORKERS.—On Friday evening a Conference of the members of the Union of Lodging-house Workers was held at the George-yard Mission. Much gratification was expressed at the appointment to the Bishopric of Bedford of Rev. R. Billing, the president of the Union. Mr. John Harvey, secretary of the East London Evangelisation Society, which is affiliated with the Union, gave some particulars as to the work of the Society. They are now visiting eighteen lodging-houses in Westminster, nine in Commercial-road, and others in Bow, Poplar, Limehouse, Spitalfields, &c., and they hope to bring every lodging-house in those districts under the influence of the Gospel. Mr. Harvey then delivered an address on the need of a baptism of the Spirit.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Among the memorials which have been presented to the Lambeth Conference was one on behalf of the Society of Friends, which relates to the practical application of the Church to the question of peace, by means of arbitration as a substitute for war.

It was made to appear in last week's issue that the vicar of St. Mary's, Leamington, is the leader of the Working Men's Bible-class, for the use of which an iron room was recently opened. It is the vicar's wife who keeps the large class together, and the fact is a specially interesting one, as it points to the solution of a question which many a minister desires to solve—how to get hold of the working men.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

John T. Dorland, Canada, was last week at Durham Quarterly Meeting, Newcastle.

A tent mission has just been held in Hereford. The tent, holding 1000, has been filled, and Bible-readings in the afternoon well attended. Joseph Farrar, of Kendal, and Isabella Young, York, have chiefly conducted the mission.

James Abbott, of St. Ives, has removed to Newport, I.W., and Arthur Dixon has taken his place; while C. B. Cox, of Charlbury, has gone to reside for a time, as missionary, in the reopened meeting of Nailsworth, Gloucestershire.

At Newcastle-on-Tyne, Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, has held Bible-readings on "Doing the will of God;" and during the evenings, in garden parties and drawing-room meetings, has dealt with, "My one life, and what shall I do with it?" "Our responsibility for our influence;" and "Effectual working for Christ."

Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting, held in Weston-super-Mare, on the 17th inst., was a time of great interest. Charles F. and Rhoda Coffin, of Chicago, were present, and preached the glorious Gospel with power. The subject of Peace took hold of the meeting, and foreign mission work received earnest consideration, and is to have special attention next quarterly meeting. Sidcot School report gave much satisfaction. A scheme for establishing scholarships there has been sanctioned.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. James Hunter, of Stornoway, United Presbyterian minister, has received a letter from a lady in New South Wales offering to take a thousand crofter families from Lewis to that colony.

A Sabbath Evening Guild Service has been established this summer in connection with the Free Church at Cruden, N.B. Papers of fifteen minutes' length are read, one by a lady and one by a gentleman at each meeting, on suitable subjects.

It is hoped that £10,000 or £12,000 will be raised for the proposed tabernacle for Rev. John McNeill's ministry in Edinburgh. If the scheme should be sucessful, the present M'Crie-Roxburgh Church will probably be converted into a mission-hall.

Rev. Dr. Peters, who is sent out by the American Presbyterian Society to undertake the work of excavation around Babylon and the Valley of the Euphrates, has started on his journey. He was in London during the sittings of the Pan-Presbyterian Council.

Sir George Bruee went to Windsor the other day and received the honour of Knighthood. Sir George is one of the most devoted elders in the English Synod, while, as convener of the Church Extension Committee, he has done more than any other man to further the spread of Presbyterianism in London.

The Australian delegates at the Pan-Presbyterian Council asked that Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser should take part in the Presbyterian Jubilee at Melbourne in November as the representative of the Council. The application was well received, and the necessary power to authenticate such a mission was presented to the executive. If Dr. Fraser can arrange for an absence of four or five months, he will probably sail at the end of September.

BAPTIST.

Rev. George Wainwright is removing from Manchester to Westbourne, Bournemouth, and commences his ministry on August 19.

In Norway, Baptists are being constantly fined and imprisoned for administering the ordinance of baptism; and an ex-member of Parliament has been heavily fined for celebrating the ordinance of the Lord's Supper in his own house.

The friends who have been worshipping at Rotherhithe New-road, S.E., for a number of years have now resolved to form themselves into a regularly constituted church. Mr. W. Walker of the Pastors' College, who has been conducting the services for about fifteen months, has accepted the pastorate.

There has been published a memorial volume, containing poems and addresses, with an introductory notice and portrait, of Mr. Joseph Tritton, the late respected treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society. The book has been issued by Mrs. Tritton for the benefit of the Society, and copies can be had on application to Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn, price 2s. 3d. post free.

The Association of Baptist Churches in Victoria, in view especially of the large fund which is now being raised throughout the denomination, has resolved to draw up a declaration of faith. It is declared that, were the fund to be made available to further the establishment of churches without respect to their evangelical character, "many would sooner have suffered fine and imprisonment than have given a sixpence."

A meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle branch of the Baptist Zenana Mission was held a few days ago. Mr. Spurgeon, who presided, introduced Miss Thorn, of Delhi, who gave a deeply interesting account of her work among the women and girls of that city. At the subsequent prayer-meeting in the Tabernacle Mr. Romanath Ray Chowdery, of Allahabad, also delivered a stirring address. Over £160 has been raised by the Tabernacle Auxiliary towards the funds during the past year.

At the autumnal meetings of the Baptist Union at Huddersfield, in October next, Rev. T. Vincent Tymms is expected to read a paper on "The Perils of Young Men"; Rev. F. B. Meyer, one on "The Cultivation of the Devout Life: its Hindrances and Helps"; and Rev. W. Cuff, one on "Family Religion." It is also expected that Rev. Richard Glover will speak on "1588 and 1888: True Protestantism, and Christian Life independent of Priestly Domination"; and Rev. Dr. Landels on "1688 and 1888: the Bi-Centenary of Bunyan, and the Rights and Responsibility of Individual Conscience."

SALVATION ARMY.

The House of Commons has passed a Bill embodying a clause which will prevent the further imprisonment of members of the Army in Torquay for taking part in street processions on Sundays, accompanied by instrumental music.

A series of missionary meetings in connection with the Army have been held in the Ulster Hall, Belfast. Addresses were delivered by Musa Bhai, a converted Tamil, and by two other native Hindoos. The party is about to visit the United States and Canada.

Writing of the twenty-third anniversary, recently held in Alexandra Palace and Park, The War Cry says: "The earnestness, zeal, discipline, and decorum of the immense body of troops who marched past the General and Mrs. Booth, won the approval and the respect of the thousands of onlookers. We are confident many strangers who came that day to have a peep at the Army had their eyes opened, and went away with quite a changed opinion of us and our work."

METHODIST.

About 1100 adults and children connected with the East London Wesleyan Mission, which is under the care of Rev. Peter Thompson, had their annual outing a few days ago at Redhill.

At the Assembly of the Methodist Free Churches at Manchester the numerical returns were presented, showing a membership of 76,775, an increase on the year of 175 full members, with 7087 on trial.

It is stated that, providing the condition of his health will permit, Rev. Dr. Kilner, Senior Secretary of Wesleyan Foreign Missions, will shortly make an extended tour of inspection in Ceylon and Continental India, he having already laboured twenty-seven years in Eastern lands.

Wesleyan ministers from all parts of the country were on Monday en route for Camborne, in Cornwall. The "Conference special," with 400 or 500 Wesleyan ministers, left Paddington before noon. Those from the North joined the train at Bristol, when the ministers alone numbered some 600 or 700.

The Leeds Circuits of Primitive Methodists have resolved on vigorous aggressive measures in evangelistic work during the connexional year on which they have just entered. The Fifth Station, from which a new circuit has been formed, has decided to engage a special evangelist to labour amongst the dense population around Armley Gaol.

Rev. Thomas Champness is to have an assistant in his work. In addition to the care of a circuit, he has to superintend nearly seventy evangelists. Add to this the management of a publishing house, and the editing of a weekly newspaper, and it will be seen that if any minister in the body deserves help, it is he who is at the head of The Joyful News Mission.

Another step towards Methodist reunion has been taken. At the Annual Assembly of the United Free Churches a sympathetic resolution was passed. Some members of the Assembly expressed a strong desire for speedy amalgamation with the Methodist New Connexion, with whom a strong party in the old Wesleyan body are also seeking a basis of reunion.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The seventh Congregational Union Lecture is in the press. The subject is "The Inspiration of the Old Testament inductively considered," and the lecturer, Rev. Principal Cave, B.A.

Rev. J. H. Stimpson has been at Darnall fourteen years. At the anniversary of settlement a few days ago, a purse of money was presented to Mr. Stimpson, as a token of the love and esteem of the church, which has made remarkable progress during the happy pastorate.

A few days ago a new mission hall was opened in connection with the New Kent-road Congregational Church. The Earl of Aberdeen presided, and in a genial speech spoke of what he owed to Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson, the pastor, who, since he was a lad of thirteen, had been his friend in every sense of the word.

The memorial stones of a new school chapel were laid at Grangetown, Cardiff, on the 18th inst. For nearly three years past services have been held by Rev. C. Ambrose in a small loft, where a church of over forty members have been gathered together, and a Sunday-school of 140, with fifteen teachers. The room having been too small from the beginning, a site has been secured on which to build a chapel and school.

Sunday last was observed as a "Murphy Memorial Sunday" at the Congregational Church, Borough-road, Southwark, the scene of the religious, philanthropic, and social labours of the late Rev. G. M. Murphy for over a quarter of a century. Several services were held during the day, which marked the first anniversary of Mr. Murphy's death. Among the most interesting engagements was the "experience" meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. Dr. Parker writes with regard to his impending rural mission in Scotland: "I want to avoid all large towns. I look to Scotland as the centre of a really healthy and useful revival of true Christianity. Scotland is full of excellent educational and religious fuel, which only awaits the application of heaven's torch; then will come an all-warming fire and an all-enlightening glory. In the application of that torch I pray God to give me some humble share."

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Donor Powell, vice-president of the Irish Methodist Conference, for many years in the front rank of Methodist ministers, and a man whose nobility of character enabled him to bear a painful illness with perfect resignation.—Rev. J. R. Parker, pastor of Salem Chapel, Longford, near Coventry, for nearly thirty years a minister of the Baptist denomination.—Mr. Alfred Shrimpton, member of the Committee of the Sunday School Union, a lover of children and a faithful Christian worker.—Rev. George Jones, for nearly forty years minister of the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, at Tunbridge Wells.—Rev. Wm. Nairn, of Hutchestown Church, Glasgow.—Rev. John Hudston, a venerable and beloved minister of the Methodist New Connexion, at Liverpool.—Rev. G. W. Darby, rector of St. Lawrence's, North Wingfield, a J.P. for Norfolk, and held in high esteem as a clergyman of evangelical views.—Rev. Wm. Hamilton, for twenty-five years Baptist minister at Carrickfergus.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Opie Rodway has experienced much blessing in Gospel work at Cardiff, Pontymoile, and Birdlip. At each place there have been many anxious souls.

Swindon.—Mr. G. Norrish, from the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a very successful tent mission. The meetings during the five weeks were well attended, those on the Sunday afternoons and evenings being crowded with attentive and earnest congregations. A touching proof of the work done by Mr. Norrish was witnessed on the last evening of the mission, when about fifty friends, of all denominations, testified of blessings received from the faithful preaching of the Gospel.

Mr. John McAuliffe, who is assisted by two brethren, has held a Bible-carriage mission in the district of Whaley Bridge, near Manchester. In addition to deeply interesting meetings held during ten days at Furnis Vale, New Mills, Disley, and villages around. There has been diligent visitation from house to house. Definite confessions of the Lord Jesus have been made by some who heard the glad tidings in the open air. In some of the villages the people besought that the carriage should visit them again.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the London Evangelisation Society, commenced a series of successful tent services in the village district near Andover, on May 20, to continue till September 23. Missions have already been held at Ludgershall, Ham, Shipton, Upper Clatford, and Abbotts Aim. People who are usually beyond the reach of ordinary evangelising agencies have been attracted in large numbers. Many, as far as can be judged, have yielded themselves to God, and are adorning their profession by consistent Christian lives. Four other villages have still to be visited, and the prayers of God's people are specially asked for blessing to rest on this good work.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost preached a powerful discourse last Sunday evening in Pastor F. White's beautiful new Tabernacle at Powis-square, W. The subject was "Jesus the Light of the World," and the preacher eloquently showed how it is in Jesus Christ that the great problems of God, of man, of sin, and of the future are alone solved. Dr. Pentecost also preached in the same place on Monday evening. As we stated last week, he hopes to commence Gospel work in Dublin in the autumn. Afterwards he goes to evangelise in the West End of Glasgow. He will be glad to hear from any friends desiring to have united special missions in their localities. Letters may be addressed to him at Sunnyside, Kingswood-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

"TEMPTED LONDON."—M. J. B. Wookey lectured on this subject a few evenings ago, at the Edinburgh Castle, Stepney, Dr. Barnardo in the chair. Having spoken at length of temptations to drink, the curse of betting, and the evils of the music-hall and dancing saloon, he urged his hearers to beware of the beginnings of wickedness. He depicted the miseries to which the paths of transgression inevitably lead, and affectionately and earnestly warned young men and young women against the many wiles of the devil in the Metropolis. In conclusion, he counselled whole-hearted surrender to God, and a seeking of his glory.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The North Sea Fisheries Bill, dealing with the Dutch "coper" traffic, has passed both Houses of Parliament.

The St. James's Gazette says, "The temperance movement promises to become the great party cry at the next general election."

It is understood that the temperance people are preparing a list of the clergymen and ministers who hold shares in brewery companies.

The School Board for Reading has given permission to Mr. J. L. Fenn (National Temperance League) to deliver temperance lectures in the schools under its care.

A Working-men's Sanitary Commission for Manchester and district has been formed. A local writer says: "Most schemes will fail till the habits of working people undergo a change," and the drinking facilities are reduced.

Canon Fleming's temperance work is beyond praise, much more beyond price. One of his Yorkshire admirers has presented him with 1000 guineas to purchase an organ for a district church in his large parish of St. Michael, Chester-square.

A Lincolnshire publican writes earnestly hoping for Sunday closing to become law. He speaks of the "utter weariness of not having one day to rest." He hopes "the law will be made compulsory"; if so, "publicans all over the land will rejoice." Prayer is earnestly asked that Sunday closing may speedily become law.

The Bishop of Central Africa, speaking at Grosvenor House, London, said it was due to the conscientiousness of the African Lakes Company that no liquor traffic is carried on in those parts of the African continent where the missions with which he is connected are placed.

A test ballot on the liquor question has been taken in Arthur's Hill district of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Thorough-going temperance principles were shown to have the support (in round numbers) of four thousand people, as against one thousand, who either voted against the propositions, or remained neutral.

A team of abstaining football players will shortly visit England to challenge all and sundry. They are bound by a contract with their conductor not to take strong drink under any circumstances during their visit to this country. A gentleman in New Zealand begs Mr John Hilton, through the Press, to ask the English people not to place any temptation to drink before them.

FOREIGN.

In March the drink imports at Lagos were 99,623 gallons of alcoholic liquor, and 153 dozen of ale and porter.

About three-fourths of the saloons in Philadelphia have been refused licences owing to breaches of the law.

The American brewers and distillers have decided not to vote for any man or party not pledged in their interest.

In Ceylon the Government farms out the liquor traffic, and with very disastrous results. There is practically no control.

In Canada, the teacher is as much bound to teach scientific temperance as to teach reading, writing, and arithmetic.

The New Zealand Alliance has prepared a local option resolution, to be moved in the House during the present session.

Absinthe is becoming a popular drink in New York. It is said to be more injurious to the nerves than either whisky or opium.

The last brewery in Sioux City, Iowa, has been ordered by the District Court to be closed absolutely. Mr. Haddock's murder has been nobly avenged.

The Voice, New York, reckons that 2,000,000 boys are required from each generation to keep the liquor traffic going, and asks "Which of your boys will it be?"

The Canadian Presbyterian Assembly, by 149 to 10, has declared the liquor traffic contrary to the Word of God, and has pronounced in favour of prohibition.

Seventy native chiefs in South Africa have testified that rum is ruining their subjects, and many have asked Government to annul the Acts which legalise the traffic.

In one of the churches in Wellington, Australia, lately a Sunday night's collection was devoted towards the cost of a local option ballot for the prevention of the issue of any new licences.

The students at Princeton took the lead in getting the saloons closed in that town. They knew well the evils that had arisen from some of their members being allured into places of temptation.

The President of the United States, who has been accustomed to use a glass of wine at dinner, and occasionally at other times, is said to have yielded to a request of Mrs. Cleveland to totally abandon the use of intoxicating liquors

Several temperance workers in this country have received invitations to attend an International Temperance Convention, to be held at Melbourne, commencing November 19, in connection with the International Exhibition, to celebrate the centenary of the foundation of the Australian colony.

The Mary Wardell Scarlet Fever Convalescent Home (Brockley-hill, Stanmore).—Miss Wardell has completed nine years of really hard work, in order to establish and carry on a Home for convalescents from an infectious malady. She is very anxious that during the tenth year of her labours the Home should be completed and the debt paid off. Donations towards the expense of cleaning the premises are also greatly needed. Miss WARDELL's address is 55, Stanley-gardens, Belsize, N.W.

Appeals.

Spain.—The chapel in course of construction at Campo de Criptana, La Mancha, is roofed in and nearly finished. It will seat 200, and is in a district without any place of meeting, and where several have been converted. £40 is still wanted.—WILLIAM GREENE, Oriolet, Loughton, Essex.

Stratford Gospel Mission (Portway, West Ham, E.).—The "Amity Hall" Mission is still in debt, and the agencies of which it is the centre are burdened in consequence. The district is poor, and help is greatly needed. The treasurer is Mr. F. MOORCROFT, Annie Villa, Ham Park-road, West Ham.

"Neglected South London."—The Committee of the Southwark Y.M.C.A. are making a special effort to secure funds in order that they may enlarge the premises. Well-wishers are appealed to for gifts in the shape of pictures, furniture, and other articles that will enable the Committee to increase the attractions of the Association. Mr. G. F. ASSITER is the secretary of the Institute, 26 and 28, Newington Causeway.

Ragged School and Mission at Spitalfields.—Mrs. E. E. SOWERBUTTS, writes from 125, Wilmot-street, Bethnal-green, E.: "Five weeks ago we commenced a fresh effort by renting two large rooms at 26, Gun-street, Spitalfields Market, at 7s. a week. We have a promise of this month's rent, but beyond this the premises will be supported by voluntary contributions. The rooms are to be used for ragged-school and mission work. The seats are borrowed, and we may be deprived of them at any time. We shall, therefore, be grateful to anyone who will give us secondhand chairs or forms, and a table.

SAVE THE CHILDREN!

Protestant Children under Romish Influence.

THE REV. G. WILLIAM SALL, THE RECTORY, LORRHA, ROSCREA, IRELAND.

THE Committee acknowledge most gratefully the following contributions; and, with renewed assurance that the work is of God, again appeal to those who hold this world's treasure in trust for Him that the balance needed—£560—may be quickly furnished. Thirty-seven Children, whose influence will soon be felt over a very large district, have been rescued; and are now under daily religious instruction from the Rector, as well as the secular training of an earnest and competent Teacher.

Without the amount indicated, this glorious work must fall to the ground, and the little ones again be consigned to the dangerous influence from which they have been rescued.

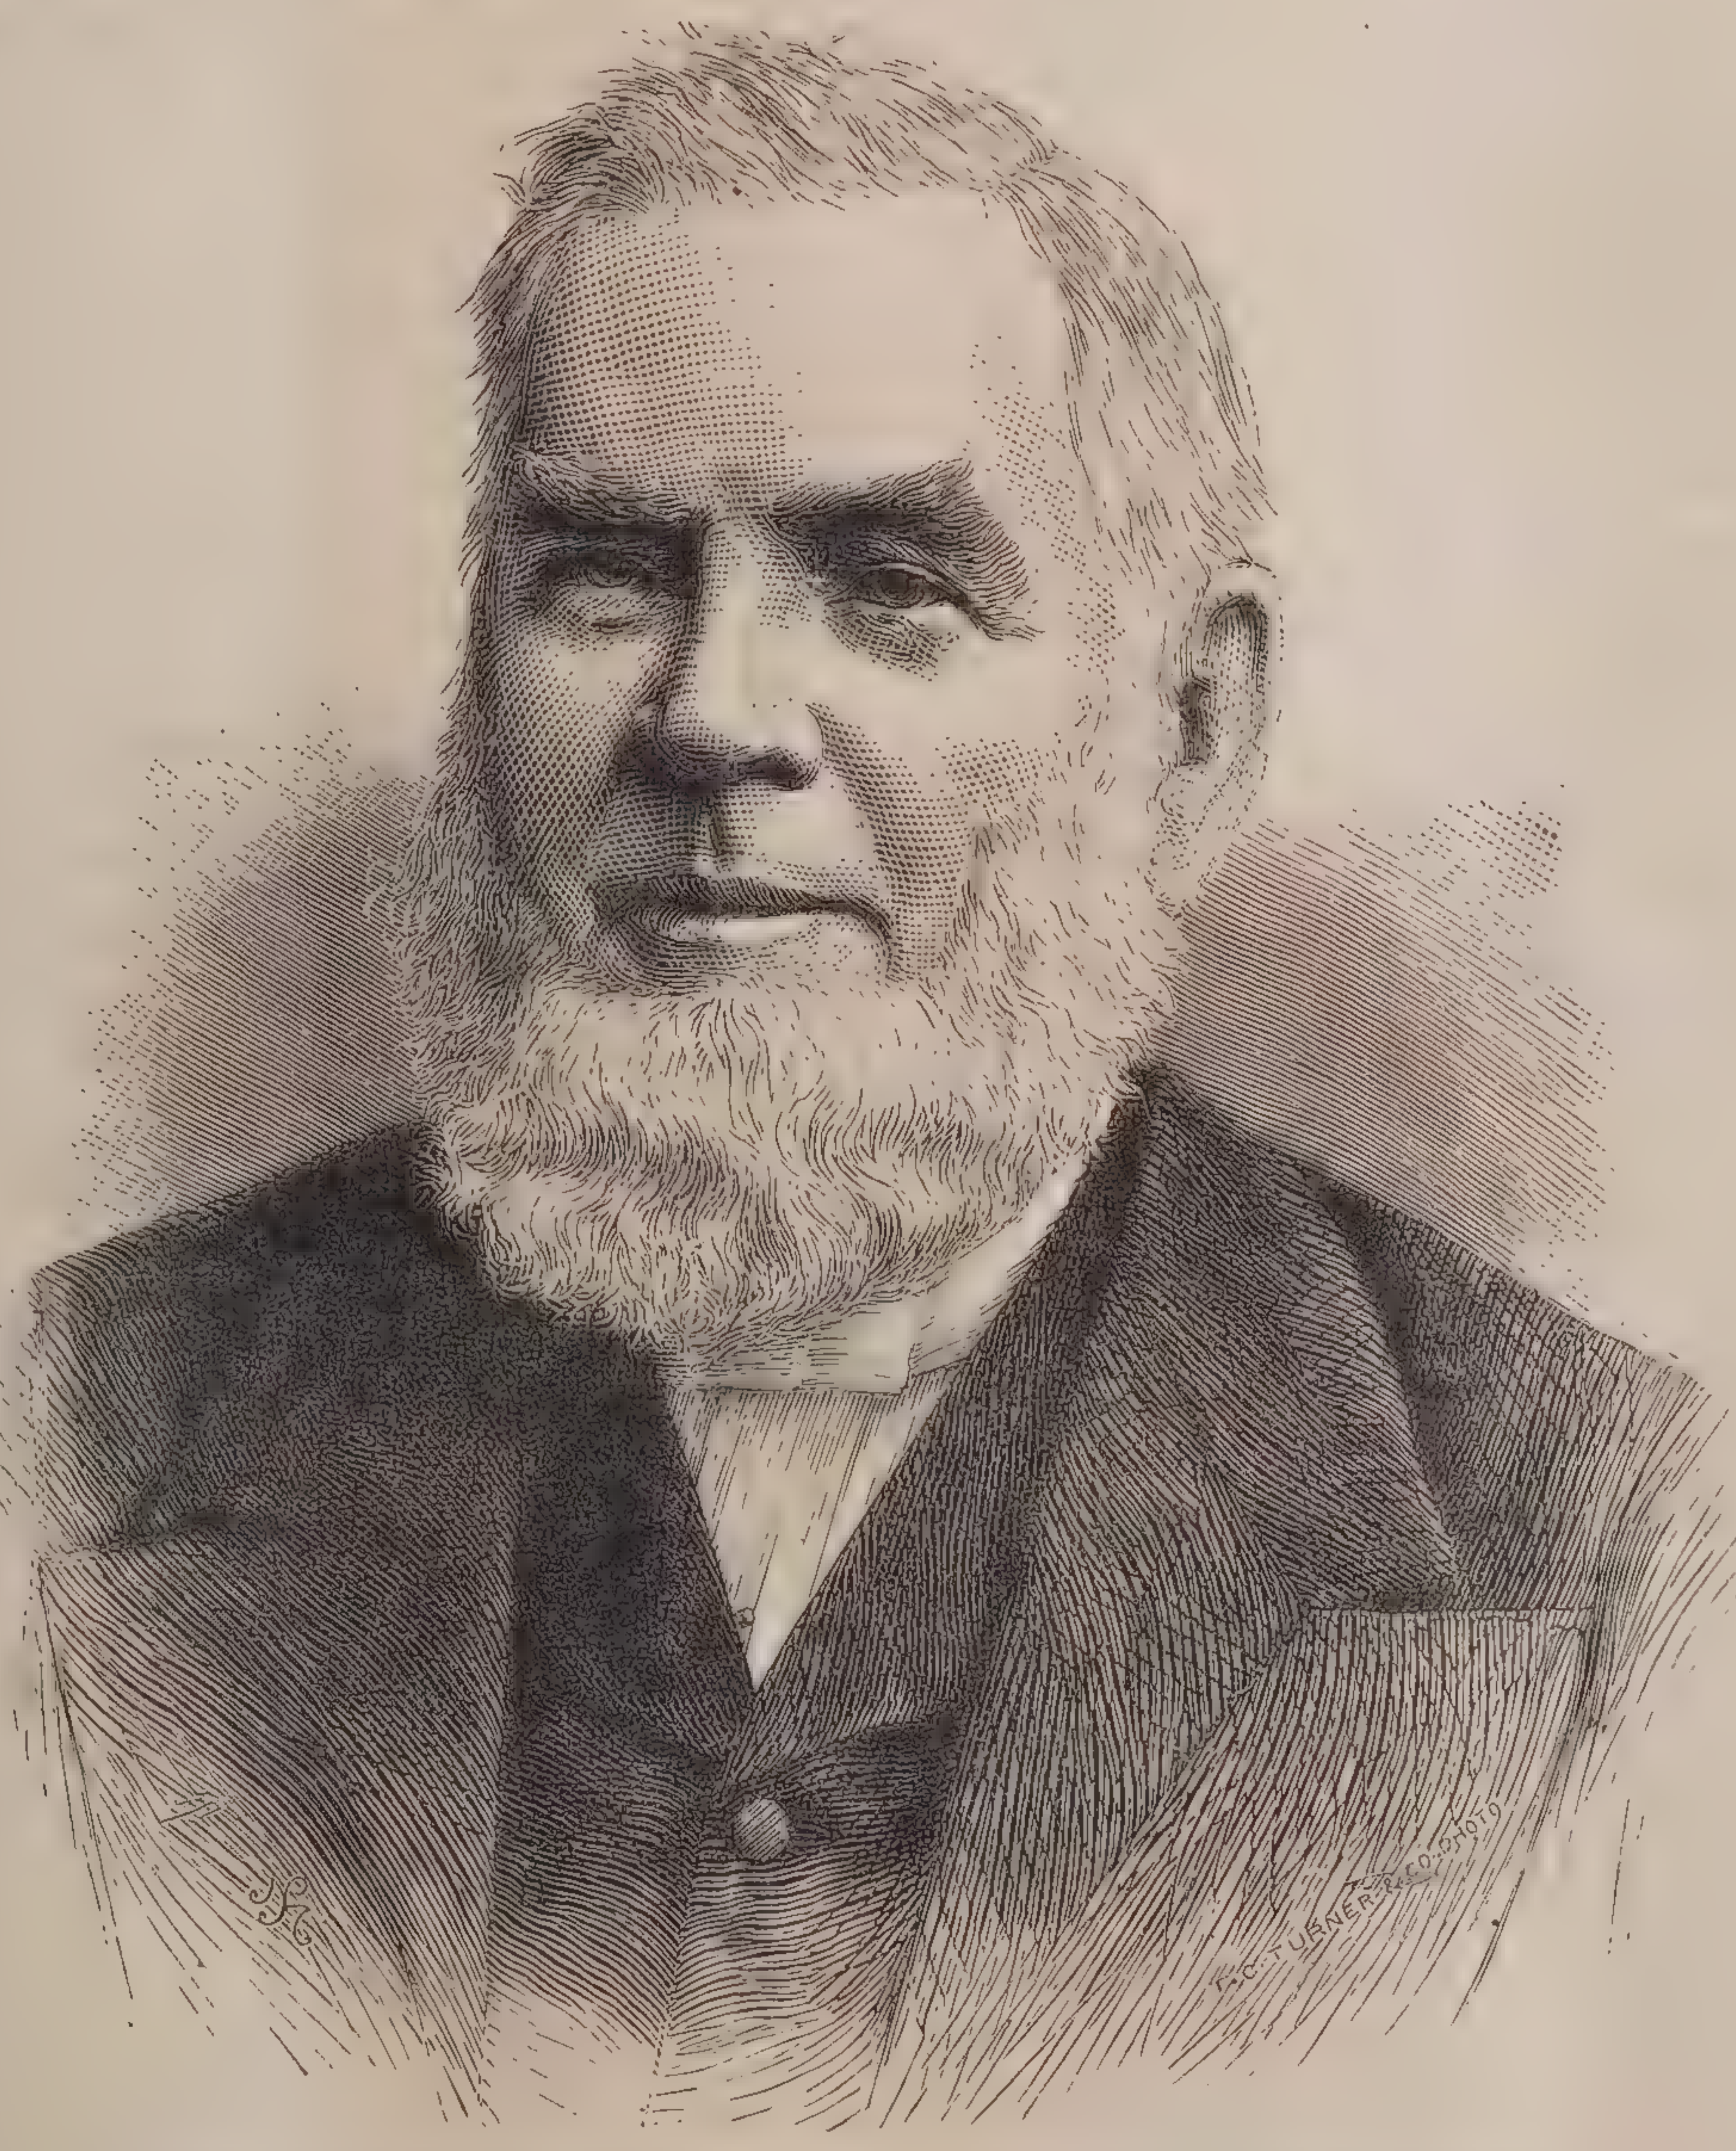
REV. JAMES CALVERT,

Missionary to the Fijians.



(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs. T. C. Turner & Co., 10, Barnsbury Park, N.)

IN the early part of 1838 three young missionaries and their wives embarked on a voyage to the Antipodes, their destination being the islands of Fiji in the South Pacific. One of these was James Calvert, going with his companions to reinforce the newly formed mission in the Fiji group.

Four years before, the Wesleyan Mission in the Friendly Islands—some two hundred and fifty miles eastward of Fiji—had been blessed with remarkable success, and multitudes of the people had been converted. In the joy of this harvest the hearts of the missionaries were much drawn towards the other group, between which and the scene of their own labours there was frequent intercourse for purposes of trade. Thus they learned that the Fijians were a numerous people, inhabiting many islands; and that they were savages notorious for their ferocity, embroiled in frequent wars, addicted to all manner of unnatural cruelties, and practising cannibalism as an established custom, especially on festal occasions. Amongst these people two of the Friendly Islands missionaries landed towards the end of 1835; and, in answer to a powerful appeal for help, the little band of earnest young men and women was now being sent out.

Mr. Calvert was from the North Riding of Yorkshire, born at Pickering in 1813. His school-days and apprenticeship were spent at Malton, where, in learning the trade of a printer, he was unconsciously qualifying himself for service of which he then never dreamed. But here in Malton he gained a still higher qualification. Those who, for many years now, have heard Mr. Calvert tell of his life's work, have grown familiar with his almost invariable preface, stating in a few confident, thankful words the fact of his own conversion. Every part of his subsequent career not only looks back to that starting-point, but to his own mind is in immediate and necessary connection with it. Without this key his story is unintelligible, crowded with facts which refuse to be accounted for. It was while he was yet a youth of eighteen that he penitently sought salvation, and, through faith in Christ, found peace with God. The change in him was so great, and the joy of God's favour so clear, that he looked out thenceforth upon all things with an unwavering faith in the Divine love and truth and power. Before this eventful year was ended he received a yet fuller baptism of saving grace, strengthening all his motives of Christian service. Thus, when he dwelt, following his craft, in Beverley, Chelmsford, Colchester, and London, he gladly availed himself of all opportunities of Church work, having begun in Malton to preach the Gospel of the grace of God. The year 1837 found him an accepted candidate for the Christian ministry, studying at the Wesleyan Theological Institution at Hoxton. His college course was very brief; for it was in the following year that, having been, according to his own strong desire, designated for foreign service, he was sent out, as we have seen, to the mission in Fiji.

His first station was in the island of Lakemba, where he lived, wrought, and suffered, and gained blessed success for nearly ten years. The printer's and bookbinder's plant which had come out with him was soon in active use; and about two months afterwards portions of the New Testament, vocabularies, catechisms, and school books were produced in the language of the people under the direction of the two missionaries, who had been three years in the group, and had now three hundred converts under instruction.

The early years of the mission were years of hard toil, many difficulties, and sometimes of much peril; but the work steadily advanced, and Christianity was firmly established in Lakemba and its dependent islands, its progress being frequently attended by incidents of as thrilling interest as are to be found in the most daring romance. When Mr. Calvert left Lakemba in 1848, there were in this portion of the group more than one thousand church members, all of whom, after prolonged probation, gave good evidence of saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; and from amongst the people themselves fifty men had been raised up who were now faithfully preaching the word of life. From Lakemba Mr. Calvert was removed to Viwa, a small island lying off the coast of the great island of Viti Levu, and near to Mbau, the seat of the dominant power in Fiji, and a stronghold of cannibalism and all heathen customs. During his residence here, the old king, Tanoa, died, and five of his wives were strangled that he might be honourably accompanied into the world of spirits. He was succeeded by his son, Thakombau, who eventually became supreme chief in Fiji. For a long time he resisted the truth, but at last, in 1854, he yielded, invited the missionaries to hold public services in Mbau, which he himself attended, and openly renounced the old heathenism. Three years later he showed such evidence of genuine conversion that he was publicly baptized. He lived for many years a consistent Christian life, and his last act as king was the cession of Fiji to Great Britain. During his stay at Viwa, Mr. Calvert witnessed many horrible scenes, and on one occasion, during a time of war, when wading across a reef on an errand of mercy, was surrounded by armed savages, from whose hands he was marvellously delivered. In 1855, after seventeen years' service, he and his noble wife returned to England that he might superintend the printing of an edition of the Scriptures in Fijian for the British and Foreign Bible Society.

There can be no sufficient record of his life which does not tell of Mrs. Calvert, whose devoted piety, joyous Christian testimony, abounding charity, cheerful self-sacrifice, shrewd common sense, and heroic bravery made her a model missionary's wife, and caused her name to be had in loving remembrance in Fiji, and wherever she was known, to this day.

An admirable translation of the New Testament had been made, and two editions of it printed at the mission press; and in 1854 a large edition had been received from the Bible Society, and a great part of the cost of it defrayed by the willing purchases of the people. The translation of the whole Bible was now complete, and it was to revise and carry this through the press that Mr. Calvert returned home, where he remained until 1860. This important part of his life's service was not fully completed when, to meet special requirements which had arisen, five young missionaries were despatched to Fiji; and Mr. and Mrs. Calvert, breaking up their home, and leaving their children in England, accompanied the new mission band to the scene of their own former work and success. The change they found on their second arrival in the islands was indeed marvellous as contrasted with the state of things at their first landing. From many parts of the group the old heathenism with its horrible customs had wholly disappeared, and into every part there was free access for Christian teaching. Four hundred chapels had been built, and, in addition to the European staff, there were eleven ordained native ministers, some of them men of marked ability and great spiritual power. Besides these there were 250 local preachers, and more than 13,000 church members, with nearly 67,000 persons attending public worship. The special objects of his coming again to Fiji having been accomplished, Mr. Calvert left in 1865, and, having spent six months in Australia, where he rendered great service as a missionary advocate, he once more settled in England. His settling, however, by no means meant resting. His services were everywhere in demand on behalf of Missions and of the Bible Society; and in all parts of the country his genial presence, and warm advocacy, and wonderful story of Gospel triumphs became familiar. In the midst of almost incessant travelling he continued to do much invaluable work for the Fijian Mission, in the preparation of books, school appliances, and many other things of great importance.

So things went on for six years, when circumstances in connection with South Africa led him to accept an appointment at Bloemfontein, in the Orange Free State. After a short stay here, he took charge of the work at Kimberley, where things were then in a very rough and primitive condition, making the residence there by no means attractive. The missionary's long and various experience, his warm kindliness of heart, joined with unyielding firmness of principle, and his well-trained sagacity in dealing with men of all kinds, enabled him to deal successfully with grave difficulties, and, in two years' time, to leave the Diamond Fields, having gained the general esteem of its strangely mingled population, and with the thankful joy of seeing the Wesleyan Church there in good order and prosperity. After this, he took charge of the work for a time at Potchefstroom, in the Transvaal, and at Pietermaritzburg, and Durban, in Natal, and once more at Kimberley, where peculiar embarrassments, demanding much administrative judgment and tact, were troubling the church. Again his personal influence and counsels were blessed to the accomplishment of the special work committed to him, and of very much more than had been anticipated.

He was now sixty-seven, and began to feel that the period of his active service was drawing to a close; and the failing health of his devoted wife called, with painful urgency, for a speedy retirement. So, early in 1881, he prepared to return once more to England. The announcement of his intended departure called forth many expressions of grateful esteem and affection. Two natives came to see him, and astonished him by giving to him £33, which their people had raised among themselves as a token of their gratitude for his services on their behalf. The white folks invited him and Mrs. Calvert to a farewell meeting, at which they presented to him a handsome address, and a sum of 250 guineas. In the following year, when a determined and successful effort was made to remove the debt on the Wesleyan Missionary Society, Mr. Calvert handed over the whole of this gift as his contribution, "in memory of a devoted wife." For, in less than twelve months after their arrival in England, the beautiful life of the companion of his wide travel, and the active sharer of all his labours in the work of the Gospel, had closed in great peace.

Since then, in a hale old age, which shows no sign of the many vicissitudes, the frequent sufferings, and the exacting toil of his long career, he has been doing much valuable work in pressing the claims of foreign missionary work, in obedience to the Lord's original mandate given to his Church, and in promoting the interests of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which, with thousands of other missionaries, he has learned to regard with loving and thankful admiration. But his heart's warmest affection is still given to Fiji, and he has superintended an enormous amount of printing for the use of the mission there, in which he has received most generous aid from the Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society.

In 1885 there was celebrated in Fiji the jubilee of Christianity in the group; and the heart of the veteran missionary could not rest by reason of its strong yearnings to see once more the people he loved so well, and to look for himself upon the holy work, the good tidings concerning which had gladdened him again and again; and, with as joyous a spirit as in the days of his youth, the old man of seventy-two set out alone on a voyage round the world, and spent two happy months in Tonga and Fiji, taking part in the jubilee rejoicings, to which his very presence lent more fervent life, as his memory, going back to "the beginning of the Gospel" in the islands, bridged the wonderful history of those fifty years of progress and victory.

None who heard Mr. Calvert in the late Missionary Conference, as he gave his short, compressed, simple statement of the results of Christianity in Fiji, but must have been profoundly impressed thereby. In a population of 118,000 there are, according to still later returns, 31,590 church members, and 102,000 persons attending public worship. Cannibalism, and strangling of widows have long since disappeared, and a generation has grown up who never knew the horrible cruelties which were once the marked features of Fijian life. That the work has in itself a Divine vitality is shown by the fact that in the ministry of these churches there are but nine white men, working side by side with sixty ordained ministers raised up from among the people, and assisted by a great host of lay preachers and workers in the manifold activities of the Gospel. Again and again have the Fijian churches sent out native missionaries to other and distant islands, where, in other tongues, they have successfully preached Christ; and some of them have, in his holy service, won the martyr's crown.

This vast change, which no philosophy ignoring the power of the Holy Ghost attending the preached Gospel of Christ can by any means explain, has come to pass within the lifetime, and much of it under the personal observation, of James Calvert, who is still among us, enjoying the reverent love of all who know him, rejoicing to bear daily witness that the grace of God, which, fifty-seven years ago, wrought a new life in him among the Yorkshire Wolds, is still all-sufficient,—and ascribing all power and all praise to Him who then washed him from his sins in his own blood.

PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.—Messrs. Lombardi & Co., of 13, Pall Mall East, were privileged to photograph a group of delegates to this Council, and their friends, on the occasion of the visit to Dollis Hill. The picture presents with great accuracy the features of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, and about sixty ladies and gentlemen of note in Presbyterian circles at home and abroad.

The "Very Words" of Jesus.

While certain aspects of Christ's style of address lie too much upon the surface not to be common property, this cannot be said to apply to every one of them. There are features of Jesus' speech, obvious enough when pointed out, which nevertheless lie, for the most part, on the inspired page, unsuspected and unseen. The common bush is afire with God, but the reader does not perceive the supernatural flame. The memorial stone is there, but as yet its relation to Bethel is not noted. The words are read, but thus far their latent superhuman peculiarity has not dawned upon the mind.

Now, in considering Christ's style of address, it is difficult to say whether its negative or positive aspects are the more rare and marvellous. Both are peerless in these regards, and combine in exhibiting the unique place which the ipsissima verba of Jesus occupy. Viewing our subject then, first of all negatively, how significant in Christ's speech is the absence of all words of formal introduction. He never prefaces his address to any company, after the wonted manner of men in any age and clime. Speakers in these modern times cannot get on without some introductory reference to the constitution or character of the assembly they address. And this feature of our own day was equally existent in Christ's times. Stephen, in addressing his fellow-countrymen, said, "Men, brethren, and fathers"; and so did Paul. But there is nothing like this in Jesus' words of address on any occasion. "He spake as one having authority, and not as the scribes." He began as God gave the Decalogue. He did not introduce Himself as a man would in addressing his fellow-men. No note or utterance falls from his lips which can be so construed. There is a separation from man even when Christ comes nearest to man. The platform He speaks from is unique, and the effect is there. This is not a case of a mere man speaking to men—a fellow addressing fellows. Authority opens her lips when Jesus speaks. The Godhead is behind the words. The platform whereon Christ stands is trodden by no other foot.

Another negative feature in Christ's speech is the absence of any attempt at persuasion or appeal. Christ never trenches on the province of the rhetorician or dialectician. He never once speaks after the Pauline mode: "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye." There is no formal, logical, or rhetorical attempt to convince or to persuade. His speech is oracular, as became his standing; nor does He ever stoop to employ the arts or powers of the mere intellectualist. Herein, too, Christ is seen acting in consonance with his superhuman relation to human kind.

The third negative feature, however, is in our judgment by far the most remarkable of all, to wit, the large class of words in common everyday use which never fell from our Lord's lips at all; of which in none of the biographies is there any recorded case. The list in question is the more surprising on this ground, that the words comprehended in it constitute the staple of ordinary speech. Nothing is more common than for one to say, "I mean," or "I intend," or "I admit," yet the Lord Jesus never makes use of these expressions. He does not even say, "I promise." Rather, He says, "I give"; "I give unto my sheep eternal life."

Again, what so natural to man, as man, as processes of thought? and into what form of words do we more naturally fall than into the phrase, "I think"? Howbeit, our Lord never says it. He does not even say, "I hope," an expression for which humanity finds an almost daily need from infancy to old age. Moreover, the Son of Man never taxes his memory with remembering or forgetting. How significant is this! Who else can fill out his experience without any need to say, "I remember," or "I forget." The same significant silence rests upon all words of calculation. Jesus never says "I suppose," or "I allow," or "I reckon," or "I calculate." There is nothing in the ipsissima verba of the Lord Jesus answering to the Americanism "I guess." You search for any equivalent of it in vain in the Evangelistic records. The like thing relates to words of determination. Jesus never says, "I determine"; nor, speaking of Himself, does He say, "I am resolved." He never speaks like one who has just made up his mind, and thereby formed a decision. He simply says, "I will." With Him there is no casting about for data wherewith to form a conclusion. No. He is one of us, and yet how unlike us. The words which naturally spring out of the limitations and imperfections of our finite being do not break from his lips. His silence, at least, is golden, for it is vocal with a Divine significance.

We need but add a word or two on the entire absence of the anecdotal in the words of Jesus. Nothing in the form of personal reminiscence escapes Him. He makes no allusion to his boyhood or private life. The nearest approach to reminiscence occurs in his prayer: "Father, glorify Thou Me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was"; where the subject concerns the grand secret of his pre-existence alone and with the Father The reserve in this connection is mysterious, and serves to show that indeed his name is Wonderful.

It is in harmony with this sacred silence that our Lord ignores all books save those written by God Himself—the Book of Nature and the Book of Holy Scripture. It would not have befitted Him who "spake as never man spake," by whom the Father uttered his voice, to have cited any inferior authority to that of the Divine originals themselves.

The positive aspects of our Lord's speech we reserve for future consideration.

James Douglas.

THE DRINK CURSE AT CAPE TOWN.

A lady writing from the Cape says:—The drink curse is fearful here. In Parliament it was proposed to reduce the cost of licences, the object being to do away with licences in the end, as the excise is already abolished. When this proposal was opposed, a Dutch member (a wine grower doubtless) actually said that they were despising God's good gift—brandy! Another member, a godly Methodist, was brave enough to stand up and utter these words:—"The attitude of the House towards the drinking customs of the country is positively alarming. The drinking which is going on is something appalling, but public opinon is being educated in this direction, and the things which have been done here in the face of high heaven, will no longer be allowed." Cape brandy may be bought at 4d. a bottle! Wine—half brandy—at 2d. They are ordinary quart bottles.

The Wesleyan minister in Cape Town has told me that the native churches want waking up, and one who could do this would effectually help on missionary work, as the natives are very ready speakers, and, when on fire, are splendid evangelists.

The Keswick Convention.

Another Convention has come and gone, and, though it is early to attempt to measure its results, which, indeed, can only be estimated from the standpoint of eternity, yet it is not too much to say that the gatherings of last week will rank amongst the very best in spiritual power and efficiency. Hundreds will ever look back on them with thankfulness, dating from them a new era in their experience.

The teaching at Keswick is based on a constant reference to the Word of God. Every speaker refers to the passages which he quotes, and as each reference is given there is a simultaneous marking of it in the almost universal note-books, or an immediate turning to the passage in the Bible. Surely Christian teachers would do well to imitate this valuable practice. Why should not every sermon be distinctly built up from the Word of God, the passages quoted, and the congregation encouraged to turn to their Bibles, so that each statement may be tested and verified by the supreme standard of appeal given to men? Our congregations are too little familiarised with the use of the Bible. We seldom hear the rustle of leaves in the course of a sermon, which would indicate that the Word of God is regarded as the only authority on which the statements of men can be accepted. And it is to this that we attribute much of the laxity in the teaching and the hearing of the present day. Error must creep in where the Word of God is not kept well to the front.

It would be difficult for the most captious to take exception to the general teaching given from the Keswick platform. The tendency of the heart to go astray unless restrained by the grace of God, constantly needed and as constantly applied; the wiles of the tempter; the denial of any complicity with sinless perfection; the sufficiency of the keeping power of Jesus; the necessity for the surrender of any and every thing which is indicated as questionable and wrong, by the Spirit speaking through the Word; the nature of sanctification, as consisting in the indwelling of God by the Holy Ghost; the constant need of the precious blood to cleanse from sin; the righteous demand of God for the consecration of the entire nature to Himself; all these truths are insisted upon with many variations of illustration and detail, but with a beautiful harmony of purpose, by all the speakers.

The first few meetings were marked by a growing seriousness, as hearts were searched beneath the speakers' words, and especially during the Bible-readings of Rev. Hubert Brooke. This deeply experimental teacher was warmly welcomed back, after his three years' enforced absence from illness; and traces of the benefit derived from his prolonged study of the Scriptures were abundantly manifest in his utterances. His Bible-readings each morning were of the utmost value.

Separate meetings were held for ministers, for young men, for ladies, and for young ladies, at which definite objections were raised and met, difficulties stated and dealt with, and addresses given, urging consecration and faith. These were of an intensely interesting character, and some will ever look upon the drill-hall as a sacred place, because of the blessings received within its walls. Thus, as the days went on, faces, which had borne evidence of the conflict proceeding within, became brighter, the hymns gladder, and the tone of the meetings more hopeful and buoyant. Nor does it seem unwarrantable to believe that very few of the vast crowd, which had gathered from all parts to the meetings, went away without a blessing.

No one can charge Keswick teaching as inducing anything approaching quietism. The streets of the town are filled with the sound of hymns proceeding from little gatherings of Christians in hotels and private lodgings; great open-air meetings are held in the streets and market-place, and testimony is given on all sides to the grace of God. The past week has been a very wet one, but the floods of rain have not succeeded in lessening the number at the meetings, or in staying the glad enthusiasm of the testimony to the Gospel given throughout the little town and the neighbourhood, from which many excursion trains came in day by day.

The missionary cause has had a more prominent position given to it than ever before. Not only on the Saturday morning, as in former years, but this time on the Wednesday also, were meetings held to further the evangelisation of the world. In the morning there was a special prayer-meeting, and in the afternoon a deeply interesting meeting, admirably presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock, who undertook the position generally occupied on such an occasion by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who is now in America, but from whom a telegram was received. Interesting figures and details were given of those who volunteered for missionary work at the Conference a year ago, many of whom are now in heathen lands; and at the close of the meeting about 120 signified their desire, in one way or another, to be identified with the work on the foreign field.

It has been necessary to enlarge the place of meeting. A new tent has been secured, capable of accommodating 2000 people, and an adjoining house has been purchased, which is admirably fitted up with reading and writing rooms, lavatories, &c., the cost of the whole being about £1200, subscriptions to which will be gladly received by the veteran chairman, Mr. H. F. Bowker.

It is easy to raise objections against such a convention, arising from its abuse on the part of those who seek a spasmodic galvanism into an experience from which they may afterwards recede. But these cases are surely minimised by the stress laid on Bible-study, and on direct efforts for the conversion of men. And so long as these salient characteristics abide in force, we cannot but augur the continuance of blessed results in this and similar conventions, where believers are brought into heart-searching contact with the truth, and in which all sectarian and denominational distinctions are forgotten in common worship and instruction in the deep things of God, observing the motto placed over the entrance to the Keswick Tent: "All one in Christ Jesus."

Y.M.C.A.—At the twenty-second annual conference of the North-Eastern District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations, held a few days ago at Sunderland, Mr. W. S. Wilkinson, of Morpeth, in the chair, it was reported that the members in the district numbered 1890, and the associates 1943, total 3833. Several delegates complained of clergymen holding aloof, and in some cases exerting themselves in direct opposition to the Association. In an address on agencies whereby the interests of associations may best be promoted, Mr. W. Hind Smith, of London, recommended, among other things, the establishment of junior sections, where feasible.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXI.—A Quiet Resting Place.

Gen. xxi.

When a river is approaching its plunge into the yawning gulf, its waters flow with placid stillness; every ripple is smoothed out of the peaceful surface, and the great volume of water is hushed and quieted. There could hardly be a greater contrast than that which exists between the restfulness of the river before it is torn by the ragged rocks in its downward rush, and its excitement and foam at the foot of the falls. In the one case you can discern, through the translucent waters, the stones and rocks that line its bed; in the other you are blinded by the spray and deafened by the noise.

Is not this an emblem of our lives?—Our Father often inserts in them a parenthesis of rest and peace, to prepare us for some coming trial. It is not invariably so. We need not always temper our enjoyment of some precious gift with a foreboding dread of its afterward. But this, at least, is largely true: that if every season of clear-shining is not followed by a time of cloud, yet seasons of sorrow and trial are almost always preceded by hours or days or years of sunny experience, which lie in the retrospect of life, as a bright and comforting memory, where the soul was able to gather the strength it was to expend, and to prepare itself for its supreme effort.

Thus it happened to Abraham.—We have already seen how wisely and tenderly his Almighty Friend had been preparing him for his approaching trial; first, in searching out his hidden compact with Sarah; and then in ridding him of the presence of Hagar and her son. And now some further preparation was to be wrought in his spirit, through this period of peaceful rest beside the well of the oath. Leaving Gerar, the patriarch travelled with his slow-moving flocks along the fertile valley, which extends from the sea into the country. The whole district was admirably suited for the maintenance of a vast pastoral clan. In the winter the valley contains a running stream, and at any time water may be obtained by digging at a greater or less depth. Having reached a suitable camping-ground, Abraham digged a well, which is probably one of those which remain to this day; and of which the water, lying some forty-feet below the surface is pure and sweet. Drinking troughs for the use of cattle are scattered around in close proximity to the mouth, the kerbstones of which are deeply worn by the friction of the ropes used in drawing up the water by hand. It is not improbable that these very stones were originally hewn under the patriarch's direction, even though their position may have been somewhat altered by the Arab workmen of a later date.

Shortly after Abraham had settled there, Abimelech, the king, accompanied by Phichol, the chief captain of his host, came to his encampment, intent on entering into a treaty which should be binding, not only on themselves, but on their children: "Swear unto me here by God, that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son." Before formally binding himself under these solemn sanctions, Abraham brought up a matter which is still a fruitful subject of dispute in Eastern lands. The herdsmen of Abimelech had violently taken away the well of water which the servants of Abraham had dug. But the king immediately repudiated all knowledge of their action. It had been done without his cognisance and sanction. And in the treaty into which the two chieftains entered there was, so to speak, a special clause inserted, with reference to this well, destined in after years to be so famous. Writing materials were not then in use, but the seven ewe lambs, which Abraham gave Abimelech, were the visible and lasting memorial that the well was his recognised property. Thus it happened that as the solemnly-sworn covenant was made beside the well, so its name became for ever associated with it, and it was called "Beer-sheba," the well of the oath, or "the well of the seven," with reference to the seven gifts, or victims, on which the oath was taken.

In a further commemoration of this treaty, Abraham planted a tamarisk tree, which, as a hardy evergreen, would long perpetuate the memory of the transaction in those lands, where the mind of man eagerly catches at anything that will break on the monotony of the landscape. There also he erected an altar, or shrine, and called on the name of the Lord, the Everlasting God. "And Abraham sojourned in the land of the Philistines many days." Ah! those long, happy days! Their course was only marked by the growing years of Isaac, who passed on through the natural stages of human growth—from boyhood to youth, and from youth to opening manhood; the object of Abraham's tender, clinging love. No words can tell the joy of Abraham over this beloved child of his old age. "Thine only Isaac, whom thou lovest." It seemed as if perpetual laughter had come to take up its abode in that home, and to brighten the declining years of that aged pair. Who could have foretold that the greatest trial of all his life had yet to come, and that from that clear sky a thunderbolt was about to fall, threatening to destroy all his happiness at a single stroke?

We none of us know what awaits us.—This at least is clear, that our life is being portioned out by the tender love of God, who spared not his own Son, and has pledged Himself, with Him, also freely to give us all things. Here is one of the unanswerable questions of Scripture: What will not God do for them that love Him? No love, no care, no wisdom, shall be spared which they need. And yet, with all this, there may be suffering keen to bear. We seem sometimes to forget that what God takes He takes in fire; that nothing less than the discipline of pain can ever disintegrate the clinging dross of our natures; and that the only way to the resurrection life and the ascension mount is the way of the garden, the cross, and the grave. Nothing will dare to inflict so much pain as the love, which desires the richest and sweetest life of the object of its affection. "Whom the Lord loves He chastens; and scourges every son whom He receives." Let us prepare then for coming hours of trial by doing as Abraham did.

(1.) Let us live by the Well.—There is a great tendency among Christians to-day to magnify special places and scenes which have been associated with times of blessing; and to obtain from them a supply which they store up for their maintenance in after days. But so many of these, and of others, are in danger of forgetting that instead of making an annual pilgrimage to the well, they might take up their abode beside it, and live there.

The water of that well speaks of the life of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord, and is stored up for us in the fathomless depths of the Word of God. The well is deep; yet can faith's bucket reach its precious contents, and bring them to the thirsty lip and yearning heart.

One of the greatest blessings that can come to the soul is to acquire the habit of sinking wells into the depth that lieth under, and to draw water for itself. We are too much in the habit of drinking water which others have drawn; and too little initiated into the sacred science of drawing for ourselves.

It is my growing conviction that if Christians would not attempt to read so many chapters of the Bible daily, but would study what they do read more carefully, turning to the marginal references, reading the context, comparing Scripture with Scripture, endeavouring to get one or more complete thoughts of the mind of God, there would be a greater richness in their experience, more freshness in their interest in Scripture, more independence of men and means, and more real enjoyment of the Word of the living God. Oh for a practical realisation of what Jesus meant when He said: "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into eternal life!"

Open your hearts to the teaching of the Holy Ghost. Rest content with nothing short of a deep and loving knowledge of the Bible. Ask that within you there may be a repetition of the old miracle, "when Israel sang this song: Spring up, O well; sing ye unto it." "Then in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water."

II. Let us shelter beneath the Covenant.—Abraham was quiet from the fear of evil, because of Abimelech's oath. How much more sure and restful is the believing soul, which shelters beneath that everlasting covenant which is ordered in all things and sure. There are some Christians doubtful of their eternal salvation, and fearful lest they should ultimately fall away from grace and be lost, to whom this advice is peculiarly appropriate: "Live by the well of the oath."

In the eternity of the past, the Eternal Father entered into covenant with his Son, the terms of which seem to have been on this wise. On the one hand our Lord pledged his complete obedience and his atoning death on behalf of all who should believe. And, on the other hand, the Father promised that all who should believe in Him should be delivered from the penalty of a broken law; should be forgiven; adopted into his family; and saved with an eternal salvation. This is but a rude and inadequate statement of mysteries so fathomless that the loftiest seraphs peer into them in vain. And yet it sets forth, in the babblings of human language, a truth of the utmost importance, behind which the weakest believer may securely shelter.

The one question is, Do you believe in Jesus Christ? Or, to put it still more simply, Are you willing that the Holy Ghost should create in you a living faith in the Saviour of men? Would you believe if you could? Is your will on God's side in this matter of faith? Are you prepared to surrender any and everything that would hinder your simple-hearted faith in Jesus? If so, you may appropriate to yourself the blessings of the Covenant confirmed by the counsel and oath of God. Your faith may be weak, but it is faith in the embryo and germ. And as the Ark saved the squirrel as well as the elephant, so does the Covenant shelter the weakest and feeblest believer equally with the giant in faith.

This, then, is true of you. You are forgiven; your name is inscribed on the roll of the saved; you are adopted into the family of God; you have within you the beginning of a life which is eternal as the life of God. "The mountains may depart and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." And will not this comfort you amid many a heartbreaking sorrow? Nothing can break the bonds by which your soul is knit with the eternal God. "Although my house be not so with God; yet He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although He make it not to grow."

Rejoice in all the good things which the Lord thy God giveth thee. Plant thy trees, be comforted by their shade, and fed by their fruit. Listen to the ringing laughter of thine Isaac. Dread not the future, but trust the great love of God. Live by the well, and shelter beneath the covenant. So, if trial is approaching, thou shalt be the better able to meet it with a calm and strong heart.

AMONG FRENCH SOLDIERS.

Mr. W. J. Hosking reports a recent visit paid to Cherbourg by Mr. Cook's Herald of Mercy, with Mr. Brown, of the McAll Mission, on board. He says:—

"Night after night there were crowded audiences—soldiers, sailors, and civilians. All the services were marked by a reverent feeling; especially was this noticeable among the young soldiers and sailors, many of whom are leaving shortly for Tonkin and other French colonies. It has been a precious time of seed-sowing. Some have confessed faith in Christ, one a young naval officer; and yesterday a young man came on board to say that he, too, had found salvation and life in Christ. More than a hundred Bibles and New Testaments have been sold on board, and last Lord's Day we gave away three hundred Testaments to the soldiers and sailors."

In further remarks Mr. Hosking asks for prayer that the word which has been spoken may remain in the memory of the young soldiers and sailors to comfort and bless them in the quiet of the Tonkin barracks; also that the efforts of Mr. Sinel, who purposes to continue what has thus been begun in Cherbourg, may be greatly owned of God.

Mr. Henry Cook himself writes with regard to this good work. He says:—"During our stay at Havre, Trouville, and Cherbourg, we distributed over £30 worth of Bibles and Testaments, besides Scripture portions and thousands of illustrated papers and letters, books, tracts, and cards." He adds:—"For the work at home we need this coming autumn 10,000 bags, 8 in. by 7 in. Will your readers kindly help us in providing these useful necessaries, in which to put Testaments, Gospel books, &c., for the soldiers and sailors going out to foreign stations? Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, and illustrated papers are also much needed, as well as practical help for the repairs of the Mystery, now in the shipwright's yard at Bursledon."

SUNSET.

'Tis eventide, and in the far-off West
The sun is sinking fast;
Telling its tale abroad to high and low,
"Another day is past."

Another day, with all its joys and cares,
And anxious toil and strife;
Steps were they in the broad and flowery way?
Or that which leads to life?

This solemn thought comes o'er me as I stand
Beside the tiny stream;
And, pausing there, I muse till village chimes
Arouse me from my dream.

And as I wander home across the fields,
I register a vow
That if my steps have not been in the way
Of life, they shall be now.

That when the sunset of my life draws near,
I then may wend my way
Unto the realms where sunset is no more,
And shadows flee away.

FROM WEST AFRICA.

Miss Sharp, an American Methodist missionary in Monrovia, Liberia, West Africa, in a letter dated June 6, says:—

I mentioned in my last letter that English steamers had been paying the Kroo labourers in rum. Soon afterwards this practice was stopped. The Kroo men, in their imperfect way, had this version of the matter:—Some American missionaries went to the Queen, and told her, "Kroo men had to take rum for pay for him work"; and the Queen said, "No more rum; Kroo men must have money pay, so we have money pay." I am told that the steamers are again trying to make their payments in rum.

Not long since a Spanish steamer stopped, and, as Kroo men and even small boys are in the habit of darting out over the waves in very small dug-out canoes, and going on board to get employment, on this occasion two small boys, who had learnt to read in my mission school, went on board, and were made stupidly drunk. One of them on being carried home, was affected as if in delirium tremens. He shook violently, and was sick for several days. The only way to stop this terrible death-dealing traffic is to agitate, keep reiterating the evils of it into the ears of the people till a strong sentiment is formed against it.

My first convert, who became an excellent interpreter, went to his native town down the coast 250 miles, and came back after the lapse of a year and a half. I asked him if there was as much rum and gin used at Krootown as there was before he left, and he said there was not, although their material prosperity was much greater, and the population more than doubled. So you see there is cause of hope. None of the Liberian merchants buy or sell liquor, and the American vessels trading on the Liberian coast, do not carry liquors, nor even allow passengers to have any, unless medically prescribed. German and Dutch firms deal in rum and gin.

The Holy Scriptures are used every day in the day school in the native town; in the men's class no other book is cared for. If I begin with the school readers, they adroitly turn attention to the New Testament.

So few can endure the strain of the African climate, and many are alarmed at the death of missionaries. Two very sudden deaths have taken place near Cape Palmas among Bishop Taylor's missionaries — Mrs. Meeker and Mr. Gortner. I have good health. This is my tenth year, with but one short vacation. How blest of the Lord I am! It is a long time since I saw a white woman; there is one, a missionary, forty miles from here, but we have only seen each other once since the early part of 1884.

MISSIONARY ECONOMICS.

We are passing through a most solemn and important, yet at the same time a most joyous, crisis in the history of missionary progress. We must gratefully acknowledge that the Lord has caused a breath of life to pass over his Church, and many dear brethren thus quickened have gone to and fro through our provincial towns—in full sympathy with Himself as yearning over a lost world—to waken up amongst young believers a response to his yearning heart. Hundreds have responded to it, and have consecrated themselves to the Lord for his service in the foreign mission field, and are waiting to know his will respecting them.

Volunteers have been called for, and a little army has started up, but who is to send them? The societies cannot do it; all are needing funds to sustain their present staff, and are not prepared to launch out into new undertakings. Some require years of study for those they take up. I was myself ready to go to India fifty years ago, and took steps to accomplish my desire. My health would have permitted me to go straight into the field, but not for such a long period of study. Sir Arthur Cotton told me that one of the ablest linguists in India went out from his manual labour in Devonshire not long since without any preparatory study.

As sure as the Lord has put this desire into their hearts, He will open the way and give directions, as He did at Antioch when the Holy Ghost said, "Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Is there nothing then approaching to this in the present day? I think there may be through the operation of the grace and power of the same Divine Spirit. It is true the Church is split up into fragments, but this need not be an insuperable objection to a measure of united action. The divine life newly kindled in the hearts of believers may melt the fractions so far into unity as to bring them together with the desire to promote the great and common cause of foreign missionary effort.

I would then indicate what has been long passing through my mind, and propose a mode of united action in towns and villages which would fill up the great hiatus, i.e., the fitted instruments on one hand waiting for their sphere of labour; and on the other the needy fields abroad, crying out for help. Some little organisation or arrangement is desirable to meet the need of the situation; energetic individual action brought to bear on the various congregations of believers, and so uniting them in concerted action as to promote unity and love to an unprecedented extent.

In each town or village, where there are several bodies of believers, let each body select one or two of its members to act for it in the capacity of "missionary deacons"; it may be that one or more would be well known for his thorough interest in missions, and would volunteer to act in their behalf.

The work of the missionary deacon would be reading missionary biography, making himself acquainted with missionary enterprise generally, correspondence with missionaries in the field, to prepare and deliver missionary lectures—illustrated if possible—to be himself thoroughly embued with the missionary spirit, so as to be able to call out an interest—a heartfelt interest in the body with which he is connected.

If a Y.M.C.A. exists in the same town, one or two of its members might be called out to act in a similar capacity. The same with Y.W.C.As. for the need of women's work among women is great indeed.

It would be of immense advantage to the missionary cause if these missionary deacons, the representatives of the various congregations with that of the Y.M.C.A., should form a "Missionary Union," and meet at stated times, say, fortnightly, for united prayer, and to concert measures for awakening interest in the congregations. For this end it would be desirable to arrange a united monthly missionary meeting at each chapel by rotation, when the missionary deacons should be prepared to address the people, enlisting such other aid as returned missionaries, or missionary deputations, as may be practicable.

The practical end to aim at would be:—

(1) To study the case of and help out into the mission field those who have consecrated themselves to it, after coming to the conclusion by much prayer that the Lord has called them into this service.

(2) To sustain them by systematic collections.

(3) Surely it would not be too much to expect that each body of Christians should have its own representative in the mission field, whether associated with an existing missionary society or not. At all events no village in the country should be without its missionary, and this proposed missionary union would work in order to secure such an object.

(4) As to the denomination of the individual sent out—the catholic principle has been extensively acted on in our days, and most successfully. It was the flag hung out originally by the London Missionary Society, and is still maintained by it, that its object is not to send "isms," but to leave the natives to assume that form of church government they think most conformable (in their circumstances) to the Word of God.

If this prayerful spiritual concern for the spread of the Gospel to the dark and neglected parts of the earth were thus perpetuated and extended by this united and systematic effort, it would have for its effect to unite Christians together in love, deepen the tone of the Church's piety, and be a witness to the world around that the great truths in which all are agreed are above all denominationalism; and would thus present a powerful witness for Christ.

The missionary societies have their representatives in most towns, and, whilst necessarily this organisation we now propose applies to the case of so many who are waiting to go forth into the field, the warmest welcome should be given to deputations from these societies, as the cause is but one. The missionary deacons should see that their operations in no wise interfere with the sources whence the missionary societies draw their funds, should but take every means to increase these.

It may be that there are many young persons in a town prepared to embrace the missionary career, but the resources in that town to assist them are not forthcoming. How happy it would be if the missionary union in another more favoured town should step in and meet this deficiency, if it should be without candidates.

It would be well also to keep in mind the desirableness of promoting Christian emigration.

Whilst candidates are waiting for the direction of the Lord, how important they should begin to study some foreign language, such as Arabic, French, Spanish; and learn carpentering, masonry work, to play some musical instrument, the use of simple remedies for common ailments, &c.

Algiers, North Africa. GEORGE PEARSE.

JEWISH ANTIQUITIES.—A very instructive exhibition was held a few days ago at Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, the headquarters of the London Jews' Society. It was got up by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, the Society's chaplain, and consisted of objects illustrating Jewish life, customs, and history. Several friends lent articles of interest and value. Among the most important were Mr. Tenz's beautiful models of ancient Jerusalem and Solomon's Temple, in explanation of which Mr. Tenz delivered lectures, which were highly appreciated.

ROYALTY AND THE GOSPEL.

The following letter, addressed by the present Empress of Germany (then Crown Princess) to Herr von Levetzow, is of national Christian interest, breathing, as it does, a spirit of earnest desire for the glory of God:—

TRANSLATION.

I request you, in the name of the Crown Prince and myself, to inaugurate the first General Assembly of the Evangelical Church Auxiliary Society, and to welcome the assembled members with our united cordial sympathy.

For several years we have been appealed to from various parts of the country for Christian assistance, in order to meet the ever-increasing religious and moral need, more particularly in the over-populated parishes of the larger towns.

Fully realising that the available forces of the Established Church alone did not suffice to supply all over the country this much-felt want, we believed that a united effort of labour of love should be stimulated throughout the country by those have at heart the spiritual needs of the masses, and who desire the welfare of the Evangelical Church.

The severe trials and sorrows which we, individually and collectively, have undergone during the last few months, call in a special manner for united faithful labour in the propagation of the blessed truth which alone brings help, comfort, and salvation.

It is to me a deep-felt joy that H.I.M. the Emperor, my dearly beloved father-in-law, has graciously sanctioned my acceptance of the Protectorate of the assembled Society, which is to-day being constituted, as also that H.I.M. the Empress, together with H.I.M. the Dowager Empress, have likewise expressed their sanction.

The Society is "called" to co-operate on the firm basis of the Gospel in union with the Church for a grand, noble, and responsible object. It will recognise, and assist to develop the already existing similar efforts at work, to endeavour to take the initiative in engaging in new works which may be deemed necessary, as well as to help to eliminate, by means of a well-founded organisation, the disadvantages arising from disunion in the field of home mission.

I address to you, dear Mr. von Levetzow, and all who are desirous of helping the people by the propagation of the Gospel among them, the request, which is my sincere heartfelt wish, that the peace and salvation brought by the Saviour into the world, and left by Him, may be our guiding star in everything connected with this work which we commence in the name of God, and with the prayer for God's blessing. Let us commit our desires, cares, and hopes more to the Father-heart of God than rely on human wisdom and power.

Only by unity in the Spirit shall we be able to bring back into the fold and to keep those that have wandered and become estranged from the Church.

Let us build on the true foundation, as it is said, "For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

(Signed) Victoria, Crown Princess.

Berlin, May 26.

THE PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION, in Chicago, continues its good work, and Colonel and Mrs. Clarke are as devoted and indefatigable in their labours as ever. The work this year past has been more than usually prosperous. Every night there are from eight to fifteen seekers, and many go away rejoicing.

MR. G. CLARKE IN VICTORIA.—Many cases, some of them very striking, of known good have resulted from the visit of Mr. George Clarke to Melbourne and towns around it. Christian people have been greatly blessed, and sinners have been converted to God. Extensive preparations are being made at South Melbourne, Kew, Hawthorn, and at Richmond, and elsewhere, for missions, popularly known as "Centennial Missions." Mr. Clarke's visit, therefore, at this particular time, has seemed quite providential. "For what our eyes already see," writes a minister who has followed the work, "we thank God and take courage."

Leaves from my Note-Book.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

"YES, TO-NIGHT."

THE first time I preached at Liverpool I took for my subject the necessity of accepting salvation at once. Like the man we read of in St. Luke's Gospel (see Luke xiv. 16), too many persons dream of the blessedness of eating bread in the kingdom of God hereafter.

This man was evidently thinking of a blessedness in the future, either in this world or the next. The Lord's answer, however, set the matter more clearly before him. He said, "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many; and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready" (vv. 17, 18). These persons bidden had already heard of the supper, and had been previously invited. No doubt it was their intention to accept the invitation too, at some convenient season. But when at last it was definitely given for a set time, "they all with one consent began to make excuse."

Whatever these excuses were, whether good, bad, or indifferent, they amounted to a present refusal, and those who made them incured the anger of the master. So much so, that he said to his servant, "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. For I say unto you, that none of those which were bidden shall taste of my supper" (vv. 21—24).

This is a common danger, and it is a solemn one. I felt it, and therefore could not help lifting up my voice upon the subject.

In all our evangelistic services, there are persons who have heard the Gospel over and over again, and sometimes they have felt its power; but they have not yielded themselves. This is a very bad habit to get into, and one not easily relinquished.

I had been pointing out not only the danger of excusing one's self, but also urging the great advantage of closing at once with so desirable an invitation.

After the address, a good number of the congregation waited behind for an after-meeting; and some were persuaded to fall in with God's plan of salvation.

We had a happy closing, and were just on the point of leaving the hall, when my attention was directed to a gentleman sitting in the gallery.

Observing that I was looking towards him, he beckoned me to come up. I immediately made my way to the place where he was, and asked what I could do for him.

He said, "Sir, I have been under conviction several times before to-night; but it has always passed off. Now I am under conviction again. You said, sir, that I need not leave this hall until I was saved—I am determined this shall be done—I will yield myself to God to-night, yes, to-night."

"That is well," I replied. "I am thankful to hear that you have come to this decision. You know there is a great difference between a promise, and an offer. If God promised to save you, it would be his fault if He did not do so; but if He offers to save you, as He does now, then it is your fault if you are not saved."

He said, "I do not quite understand you."

I explained, "Suppose I promise to give you this book, and that I fail to do so, either from forgetfulness or any other cause, it would be my fault if you did not have it. But if I offer it to you now, and you do not take it, the fault is yours.

"When we preach the Gospel, we are sent by God to offer you salvation at once. We bring you a gift from God for your acceptance—we do not preach (or rather should not) merely to indoctrinate you, or to inform you merely of the way of salvation; but we urge upon you to close with a present offer."

"Yes, yes, I see," exclaimed the gentleman. "I have never thought of it like that. I have often heard the Gospel, and desires have sprung up in my heart; but it may be from not bringing my mind to bear upon the subject, the impressions have all passed off. I am determined, sir, it shall not be so now, if I stay here all night."

"Very good," I said, "and I will stay with you." So saying, I sat down by his side.

After a short pause, I inquired, "What shall we do now?"

"Indeed, sir," he replied, "I do not know."

"Oh then, if that is the case, we may be here for six months, instead of all night. Shall we pray?"

"Yes, sir, do."

"What shall we pray for?"

This he did not know, for he had not yet thought about it.

I said, "You ought to know what you want. If God is offering you salvation, if I were you, I would acknowledge his undeserved kindness, and accept it."

"Yes," he said, "that seems clear enough; but how can I?"

I replied, "Would you have Christ come down from heaven, and die all over again for you?"

"Oh, dear no; certainly not."

"What then? Do you believe that He did come and die for you?"

"Yes, certainly I believe that," he answered, "but somehow I do not feel any the better for it."

"You know," I said, "there are many people who profess to believe that God has given them a gift, and yet they go on asking for it, as if it had not been given!"

"That is just like myself, that is what I do."

"Well," I replied, "I think that you should ask God to enable you to believe in Him, and at least in the meantime you ought to thank Him for what He has done for you. While you are asking for a thing, you cannot feel you have it; but when you are thanking, it may be possible for you to realise that it is yours. Let us thank God for sending his Son to die for you, and sending the Holy Spirit to strive with you. You have much reason for thankfulness, and thanksgiving too."

"I am willing," said the gentleman, "to do all you tell me."

"Willingness will not do," I answered, "if you do not do the thing."

He did so, and the usual result followed, to his surprise and great joy.

Now we were ready to come down from the gallery, and in doing so we met the man who was putting out the gas.

"Here, here," said my friend to the man, "come here. I will pay for the gas, and the hall too. How much will it be?"

He gladly gave the money, and went away with many expressions of gratitude.

Presently he came running back to ask whether there would be a service next day. On being answered in the affirmative, he said, "I claim the privilege of paying the expense of the hall. I will come, and bring some friends with me."

This was the beginning of a useful life of service for the Lord. Henceforth, instead of wasting his time in wishing and intending, here was a man pouring out himself for the glory of God, and the good of souls.

This is the great banqueting feast to which we are invited. It is not only to receive salvation ourselves; but to be the channels of blessing to others.

MR. E. C. NEWBERY has been holding evangelistic meetings at Bordighera, and has been greatly cheered. The novelty of Gospel appeals in the Italian language not only excited great interest in the place, but quite aroused the devotees of Rome. The parish priest, and the monks and nuns all engaged in active opposition, but, nevertheless, crowds flocked round the preacher every night for nearly a month in the open air, and the name of Christ was glorified by many souls confessing him.

LAMBETH RAGGED SCHOOL.

FROM a small beginning in 1845, this work has now some twenty-five agencies in operation, benefiting about 1500 persons weekly. Perhaps the evening school is most interesting to a visitor, for then the place is literally thronged, week after week, with nearly a thousand young roughs. The work is difficult, especially in the boys' school, but Christian love and sanctified tact work wonders; and though immediate results are not always seen, it is encouraging to know that some of the most zealous present workers are "old scholars," who praise the Lord for lasting blessing received at the Ragged School. During the week a mothers' meeting, Gospel and mission services, prayer-meetings, &c., are held and greatly blessed. It is good to hear some of those who have been gathered in bravely testify to their fellows in the open-air and other meetings.

Besides distinctly evangelistic efforts, the school provides many aids to right living, The Infants' Playroom (described in a recent "Page for the Young") keeps the little ones, for one evening at least from the dangers of the streets. Sewing classes usefully employ the elder girls, who made 438 garments last winter; while their teachers found many opportunities for wise counsel and helpful guidance. A Young Men's Institute attracts the older lads, and occupies them with writing and drawing lessons, a very popular bootmending class, &c. A good library carries healthful influences into the scholars' homes; a Band of Hope and Temperance Society also flourish, some of the money saved by their means from the public-house being placed in the school Penny Bank.

During the recent winter nourishing dinners were provided for nearly 5500 children, of whom a large proportion received free meals, the remainder paying one halfpenny each. Through Rev. A. Mearns' Fund some 7700 free breakfasts have been distributed since Christmas, in nearly all cases to children whose parents were out of work. Clothing and other additional help was given, as funds allowed, to the saddest cases. Although the breakfasts and dinners are now discontinued for the summer, the teachers are anxious to help many pitiable cases, and help is much needed for every part of the institution. The hon. secretary is Mr. E. Nicholls, 106, Leathwaite-road, Clapham, S.W. M. JENNIE STREET.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOLS AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell-green.—The forty-first annual report is brief, but it is, nevertheless, to a great extent, sad reading. It shows that the distress which has been prevailing so long among the inhabitants of the Cow Cross district has been hardly touched by the relief which the Mission has been enabled to dispense through the generosity of its supporters. The children, however, have been fed as well as instructed; a goodly number have also enjoyed a day in the country, and others have been sent into the country for a fortnight. Moreover, the Gospel has been preached, and in other ways Christ has been commended to the poor and needy. Copies of the report may be had from Mr. J. C. Sherrard, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park, W.

For the Young.

A BEAR STORY.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond.

We are now away up on the top of the Rocky Mountains eight thousand feet above the sea in the Yellowstone National Park. It is May 15, but we see snow all around us.

We are the first tourists in the Park this year. We were told it was too early in the season and the roads too full of snow to get in; but as we were returning from California to our home in the East we determined to try it.

The Park is about sixty miles square, covered with dark forests and open parks, over which roam elk, deer, cinnamon and black bear, buffaloes, mountain lions, lynx, wolves, foxes, wild geese, ducks, swans, cranes, and eagles. In places it is filled with geysers which throw water from twenty-five to two hundred and fifty feet in the air.

Yesterday we saw the Excelsior Geyser, which throws up a stream of water thirty or forty feet in diameter two hundred feet high.

In this volume of water were many stones and rocks, some of them weighing fifty pounds.

We ran for our lives.

It was a sight we can never forget. It has not erupted till two weeks ago for six years. I am not surprised that people come from all over the world to see the sights in this wonderland.

I am told the Government of the United States has spent one hundred thousand dollars in making roads and taking care of the Park.

But I did not take my pen to give you a description of the Park; you can find that in other places; but I want to tell you

A BEAR STORY.

At each of the four hotels in the Park, during the winter, a man remains for eight months to take care of them. At the Norris Geyser Basin House we found Mr. Lapham, who has been in this hotel alone seven months. We thought he must have been very lonely; he had not even a dog to keep him company. He met us with a smiling face, and was the very picture of contentment.

We found one of the secrets was that he loved the Bible. He was once a Sunday-school superintendent. Until my wife came into the Hotel, he had not seen a lady for seven months. When he had taken a walk it had been on snow-shoes twelve feet long.

Could you, my young friend, be happy shut up in a building on the top of the Rocky Mountains eight months in the year. Fifteen feet of snow have fallen here during the winter, and it is snowing to-day, May 16.

Mr. Lapham has been telling us about a bear that seemed ready to devour him.

Before he came to this hotel he was one night alone in a tent, ten miles from here, when he heard as he awoke a bear eating bones outside the tent. He sprang out of his bunk, and seizing an axe jumped upon a table in the centre of the tent, expecting every moment the bear would come plunging through—but Bruin did not seem inclined to do this.

He then got down and built a fire, intending to heat water with which to scald him, if he attempted to come in. Finally, he thought the safest way would be to make his way to a tall tree hanging over the tent. He climbed quickly to the top of the pole, and then with his knife cut his way through, and seized hold of a limb, intending to swing himself into the tree; but the limb broke, and he rolled down the outside of the tent, and fell across the stove-pipe, which came down at the same time he did with a crash upon the bear. This was too much for Bruin, and he was more frightened than Lapham.

He ran off as if a big geyser had erupted near him.

Mr. Lapham then brought all his wood from the tent and built as big a fire as possible, knowing that all wild animals are afraid of a fire.

Here is a lesson for you, my young reader. If you keep the fire of truth and love burning in your heart, you will find it the best way to keep Satan from tempting you into sins that will destroy you.

To do this you must read God's Word and pray every day.

Mr. Lapham saw no more of the bear that night. The next night he piled lumber around his tent and put up before the door a rubber blanket, but the bear came back and thrust in his paw and tore it off. He threw a dishpan that he had in his hand at him, sprang up the tent pole as quickly as possible, and then out into the tree, where he remained until morning.

He had placed the axe there during the day as he had no firearms, hoping the bear would come up there after him, but as he found enough to eat below he did not venture. The same thing was repeated the third night. At last Mr. Lapham managed to send for a rifle, and the fourth night the bear was shot.

You see the bear was determined to kill this young man, but by vigilance and boldness he saved his life, and killed the bear.

We are told in God's Word that Satan as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom He may devour, and we are commanded to resist him. We must not yield.

When our Lord was upon earth Satan was not afraid to tempt Him, as you will see by reading Matt. iv. 1—12. Each time when He was tempted He defended Himself with a text of Scripture.

You must imitate his example and obey the words in Eph. vi.: "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; and put on the breastplate of righteousness, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one. And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God."

A PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS.—A Protestant Committee is appealing for funds in aid of the sufferers by the plague of locusts, by which one-third of the department of Constantine in Algeria has been practically laid waste. Planters and natives alike have been reduced to want and misery, and the outlook is quite appalling. It is feared that famine and fever will ravage the country during the coming winter, as in 1867, when about 50,000 Arabs alone succumbed. M. A. Gory, pastor at Sétif, Constantine, Algeria, is president of the Committee. In Paris, contributions will be received by M. Rossignol, 16, Rue de Londres.

"TELL JESUS."

Having read in The Christian an account given of the power of those two words, "Tell Jesus," as experienced by a Russian lady, I venture to give you another instance of what those words proved to be in time of temptation. It may be a help to some tried one.

I had a Bible-class for men some time ago in Surrey, and amongst those who attended it was one known as the "bad man" of the place; he came regularly. After about two months' attendance he stopped me one evening to tell me he could no longer bear the misery of his life. He now saw what a sinner he was, and God graciously revealed Jesus to him as his Saviour.

After a short time I saw he looked unhappy, and at last he came to tell me there was no use in his trying to be a Christian. His temper, violent at all times, had now become more so, making his profession as a Christian appear only a sham. I said to him, "Before you give up trying to be a Christian, promise me you will try the power of two little words when your temper is rising." He smiled at the idea, but he promised. The words are, "Tell Jesus." Some weeks passed, and I saw such a change in him. He said to me, "Oh, I want to tell you what a help and comfort those two words, 'Tell Jesus,' have been to me. I tried them, and had not repeated them half a dozen times when my evil temper was so subdued that I could not get angry if I tried."

One result of this man's conversion was that his son came to me, and said, "I want to be a Christian. Father is so happy, and home is so happy. Father never rows us now; there must be something good and real in religion."

This little account may be a means of blessing to others. A. B.

TENT WORK.

I have had four tents at work every night since May. Two of them have been out eight or ten summers respectively, so that they are no longer new. These last severe gales, and heavy rains, have damaged them so severely that I am told it will cost £40 to repair them. God has been pleased to bless the preaching of the Gospel in these tents in a remarkable manner. Any contributions, however small, will be gratefully received, and may be forwarded to the Hon. Lady Sebright, Fakenham, Norfolk. S. Hamond.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch writes: "Our tent work is being much blessed by the Lord, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather."

THE PRINCE OF WALES, says The British Weekly, has given fifty guineas towards the new Roman Catholic Church at Lynn.

REV. DR. KING, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, delivered the address on Thursday, last week, at the noonday prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. He incidentally remarked upon the important evidential value of such meetings, and said that it gave him great delight, whenever possible, to attend the one in Fulton-street, New York, the records of which, he said, contain answers to prayer as remarkable as any in the entire range of history. Alluding to the case of a young man who was reported to have just begun to witness for the Lord in a large business establishment in London, he said: "I have been in the army, and have been wounded fighting for the nation, but I say that it takes more pluck and genuine courage for that young man to kneel down at night in the presence of his godless companions, than it requires to walk up to a cannon, or to face an enemy on the field." The theme of Dr. King's address was the condescending love of Christ, as implied in the statement that "a bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall He not quench," and in the fact that the blind, the lame, the lepers, the deaf, and the poor were the objects of his merciful attention. It was forcibly pointed out that on these beneficent relationships Jesus founded the great argument of his divinity, when responding to the question of John's disciples, "Art Thou He that should come?"

The Scottish Missionary Crusade.

In continuation of the deeply interesting letter by Mr. Armstrong, given in our last issue, we are glad to furnish the following particulars:—

A meeting was held again in the Synod Hall, on Sunday evening, July 22, when at least 2000 people were present. Sir William Muir, who presided, said the object of the meeting was to commend to God in prayer the brethren from America for work to which God was calling them in Scotland, and to awaken a prayerful activity among the people of Edinburgh, and connected with it.

Dr. Thompson, of Boston, a delegate to the recent Conference, made a stirring appeal to all present to give themselves for service anywhere, in seeking to rescue the lost individuals and lost nations from heathen darkness. Dr. Lowe, Convener of the Committee, read the following LETTER OF INVITATION.

To Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D. and Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D.

Beloved Brethren,

With feelings of devout thankfulness to God we welcome you amongst us. Not a few present at this meeting enjoyed the privilege of forming your acquaintance in London, and of listening to your heart-stirring addresses at the great Missionary Conference recently held there, and they ventured to invite you to visit Edinburgh, that their fellow-Christians here might have the opportunity of participating in the privilege they had enjoyed, and in the blessing God so graciously bestowed upon that remarkable Missionary Convention.

Without consulting your own convenience, and denying yourselves the pleasure of an extended tour on the Continent of Europe, which you had contemplated previous to your return to America, you responded most kindly to their request. The "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" we have enjoyed; the inspiring missionary meetings that have been held; the quickening of missionary zeal which so many of us have experienced; the spirit of unity which prevails and which so signally marks this movement; above all, the spirit of grace and supplication which has been poured out, are indications that God has been leading us. We believe this movement is in his hands; that a new era in the history of the missionary enterprise is about to be inaugurated—an era which shall be signalised by a holy alliance for the world's evangelisation, by more self-sacrificing consecration to the work—by greatly increased liberality for its support, and by more fervent, united, expectant prayer for a Pentecostal effusion of God's Holy Spirit the wide world over.

We are longing and praying for such a new departure, for a revival of missionary zeal in the churches throughout our land; and we gratefully acknowledge that your presence amongst us, and the solemn appeals which you have made to us in your public addresses, have kindled our missionary enthusiasm, and revived our drooping faith.

This great united missionary meeting—representative not only of the various churches in our city, but of the friends of missions throughout our land—most earnestly and solemnly invites you to prolong for a season your visit to Scotland. We ask that you, along with other delegates to the great Missionary Conference, would kindly consent to place your services at the disposal of a Central Committee, representative of all denominations, in order that missionary meetings such as have been held in Edinburgh may be arranged for in as many towns throughout the country as possible, with the object of the deepening and extension of the missionary spirit among the churches.

We are led to understand that you are both pastors of large and flourishing congregations in America, and your anxiety regarding your work there must be great; but we believe that whatever the friends to whom the arrangements will be committed can do to lessen your solicitude, and to provide what may be needful for the efficient carrying on of your respective congregational work in your absence, will gladly be done by them.

Engaged, as you will be, in such blessed work for the Master, you and we may rest assured that the great Head of the Church will not permit your self-denying service to go unrewarded; but that, while we are enjoying your ministrations here, and the fire is being kindled throughout our land, as we pray it may, your beloved people in America will doubtless receive a double portion of the blessing, and you, and we, and they, will rejoice together.

The Chairman asked the vast audience, if they approved of the foregoing letter, to signify the same by rising to their feet, whereupon the meeting rose en masse, and the cordial invitation was thus given to the two friends from America.

DR. GORDON'S REPLY.

Dr. Gordon was first called on to reply. All my time and strength, he said, are laid out for your service. I cannot tell how long I can remain in Scotland. It would be a great thing to see all Britain moved on the subject, and, maybe, all America would be moved likewise. I thank you most heartily for your letter, and feel most unworthy to put my hand to such service, but will go forward, looking to the Lord to guide at each step of the way.

And now, what can each one of you do to help on this mighty impulse? There must be personal consecration, and consecration of means. Personal consecration comes before purse consecration. It is not the gold that sanctifies the Temple, but the Temple that sanctifies the gold. A truly consecrated man may give a pound, which may be worth millions, an unconsecrated man give millions, and yet they may not be worth a pound. He can't sanctify himself by his gold.

We are not past the days of heroism and martyrdom in the cause of Christ. A factory girl in America could not go herself to the mission field, but she was so imbued with the greatness of the work of the Lord abroad that, working with her own hands, and denying herself, she supported a missionary, built a chapel for him, and these were mighty in results for good. Some Moravian brethren proposed to sell themselves, and become slaves that they might become missionaries to slaves. A Chinaman in San Francisco, converted in one of the mission schools there, sold himself as a coolie, to be transported to New Guinea, that he might work amongst his fellow-countrymen, and saw two hundred of them converted to God before he died.

Let us give what we have. Let me urge you to return at least to the primitive plan of giving one-tenth of all to the Lord's work abroad. A large band of Christians in America determined to do this, and entered into a union for the purpose. They all corresponded with a secretary, whom they appointed, and, after some time of thus giving, they reported that, with the exception of two or three, not only had they obtained vast increased spiritual blessing, but also great increase of financial prosperity. Is one-tenth of our means too much to give? The advantage of this, if carried out, would be that the Lord would not be in the attitude of a pauper, but as a lord. Give Him the first and the best. It is his by right; for He is our Lord. It is better to have gifts from the hands of the living, instead of from the hands of the dead. There was one who said, "I don't like long-tailed benevolence." Touch the people now, while you are living. We want a new sense of responsibility. People are dying by millions without the Gospel. May the waves of enthusiasm so chastened, deep, pure, and solemn, encompass the whole kingdom and the whole globe, till reaching the furthermost bound of the furthermost end, a shout of Hallelujah may be heard in the presence of the King above.

DR. PIERSON'S RESPONSE.

The hymn, "Take my life," having been sung solemnly and heartily by the large audience, Dr. Pierson rose and said:—

Before replying to the kind letter of invitation just read, and entering on personal matters, I would like to make some general remarks. I am impressed with the thought that there is a lack of business enterprise with respect to the Master's kingdom. We are living in days of colossal and gigantic schemes of all kinds. Why does not the Church of Christ, embracing as it does so large a number of business men, take up the Master's enterprise as a business matter. The King's business is the evangelisation of the world. God makes it his business, for He planned the redemption of the race. Christ made it his business, for He came as the Son of God to die for the redemption of man. The Holy Ghost makes it his business. Never was such business done. What does the Son say when yet a child in the Temple, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" What was his business? In Acts x. we have it, if we had it nowhere else, summed up in a few words, "He went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." Good to the bodies as well as the souls; to the bodies on the way to the souls, that the souls might not be embarrassed by the sick bodies, but be free to serve and follow and believe in Him.

"The things which He began to do and teach." Three years and a half of public ministry, then gave Himself a sacrifice for sin, died, was buried, raised, and ascended; and the Holy Ghost continued to do by the Church; He the Head, we the members, what Christ began to do. In Col. i. 24 we have those marvellous words that the Apostle used, that "he filled up that which was behind of the sufferings of Christ." What He left unfinished, we are to fill up and complete. He completed the atonement on the cross, when He said, "It is finished"; but the work of redemption is not complete until the last soul is gathered in; and we have to fill up that work of redemption by gathering in the lost.

The King can no longer do without the obedience of his subjects. Nothing else should be your business but the King's business. "But we must follow our callings." True, but make that the King's business. Remember one business, that is the King's business—the proclamation of the Gospel—in whatever calling you are. Seek souls, and glorify God.

The King's business requires haste, urgency, and prompt obedience, because it is a King's command, and more especially because it is a King's last command. In fifty years' time the great bulk of the adults now living will be no more on this planet. The issues are of so tremendous a nature that the soul shrinks back bewildered as it contemplates the boundless ages of eternity. A thousand million of souls going down to eternity. Let us take it to heart.

Dr. Pierson went on to enforce the importance of consecrating self and means to God's service. He mentioned the case of a poor woman in America, who lived in an attic, toiled hard all day on a mere pittance, but was able to give fifty dollars towards the support of a native evangelist in Nestoria. She continued to save up, denying herself many things, until, when she came to die, she had started six native agents in that land, who were carrying on the work through the self-denial and devotion of that lonely woman.

He spoke of the power of money. Things could be done, even by one man with money, which could never be accomplished by men alone. It is impossible to record on paper the power of this address, which must have gone home to the hearts and consciences of all.

In conclusion, Dr. Pierson intimated that he was willing to go with Dr. Gordon wherever the Lord should guide. He considered it a high privilege to be associated with his beloved brother Adoniram Judson Gordon in this blessed work, and there was no one with whom he would more enjoy working. They could make no plans for the future, but wait upon God step by step, being willing to proceed to the work at once for a few weeks, and then to see how God would guide. So long as God gave him strength and vigour he would go forward. He begged the daily prayers of each one for a blessing on this work.

Sir William Muir assured the two delegates of the very cordial appreciation by the meeting of the kindness they were doing in consenting to help in this important work, and that they would all remember them and the work at the throne of grace.

In pursuance of the programme of the Edinburgh Committee, the American brethren addressed a meeting at Oban, on the Western Coast, on Thursday evening. The claims of the heathen world were impressively laid before a goodly company, gathered at short notice. Much interest was awakened, and it may well be hoped that a holy enthusiasm was kindled in the hearts of some which will burn like a fire in their bones, and send them forth as consecrated messengers of the Cross, among those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

MEETINGS AT INVERNESS.

(From our Special Commissioner.)

Leaving Oban, the delegates proceeded by the Caledonian Canal to Inverness, where a series of meetings had been arranged by Mr. Henry Soltau for Sunday and Monday. The local ministers of the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Churches entered cordially into the matter, and readily placed their pulpits for the Lord's day at the disposal of the delegation. With Drs. Pierson and Gordon there were associated Mr. Soltau, who for years laboured in Burmah, Rev. James Scott, Free Church missionary in Natal, and Mr. and Mrs. Stott, of the China Inland Mission. Thus it came to pass that in almost every church building in Inverness there rang out, on Sunday, a human echo of the Divine call to the Christian Church to Gospelise the whole world. Dr. Pierson spoke thrice during the day, Dr. Gordon spoke twice, as also did Mr. Soltau, and Mr. Scott. We cannot give details of each service, but furnish some notes of those we were able to attend.

DR. PIERSON

discoursed with very telling force before a large congregation in the Free North Church, in the afternoon, on the dark places of the earth, which are full of the habitations of cruelty. As a presentation of the corrupt state of heathenism without the regenerating influence of the Gospel, and of the vast fields that await the advent of the missionary, it was overwhelming in its cumulative array of facts. In taking his survey of the spiritual condition of the world, he said, we talk of a thousand millions of the human race, but how difficult it is to form any real conception of what those figures mean? If those who are without a saving knowledge of Christ were to pass in procession before us day and night, that procession would be a never-ending one; before the present generation of them could go by, another and more numerous generation would have grown to adult estate, and be ready to continue the march past; to be followed in turn by other and successive generations. Some statistics were given to show the inconceivable vastness of the population of the Continents of Africa and Asia. Siam has its eight millions, and only thirteen missionaries, all belonging to one denomination. There are far-stretching spaces of territory in China, not to speak of other lands, where the voice of no Gospel messenger is ever heard. There is Japan with its thirty millions, India with 250 millions, China with 300 millions, and Africa with 250 millions—all of them lying in the darkness of error, superstition, idolatry, and cruelty, unrelieved by scarcely a ray of life-giving and life-sustaining Gospel light. For we must remember that where there is no light there can be no true life either in the natural or in the spiritual world.

Having sketched the superstitious and degrading idolatries of the heathen world, Dr. Pierson passed on to consider the cruelties and wrong-doing that exist where the message of God's love and grace has not been known and received. Think of the fearful infanticide that has long prevailed in China. We are told that more children in that land have been murdered by their parents than there are now surviving. What cruelties and oppression are involved in the system of child marriage, and of child widows in India. Think of the condition of woman, and the cruelty with which she is oppressed in lands where the Gospel does not hold sway. She is bought and sold, and bartered, and treated like a beast of burden. Think, too, of the oppressive action of the systems of caste in India. The idea is that no one can rise out of the social condition in which they are born; if by some trifling act they lose caste, they are supposed to sink down irretrievably, and become a pariah, and an outcast. Look, again, at the awful cruelties that have been done by cannibalism; one native of the Fiji Islands boasted that he had during his life devoured more than eight hundred human beings! Then there are the despotic cruelty and the tyranny that still prevail in many lands.

Ought not Christians to know and to consider these horrible facts? Should not some response be awakened in our hearts at the thought of the fearful condition of so many millions of our fellow beings, while we meet in the house of prayer, and worship the God of our salvation? Should we not take refuge in the plea of the Psalmist: "Have respect unto thy covenant, O Lord"? This dense darkness can never be reached or dissipated without the power and blessing of our covenant-keeping God. To Him we must appeal. Perhaps one of the greatest hindrances to the evangelisation of the world to-day is the lack of earnest, united, and importunate prayer on the part of the Church. God's covenant is first with Christ. Our Lord has been waiting for more than 1800 years, and He has yet to see of the travail of his soul, and to be satisfied with the fruit of the pangs of that travail. But God's covenant is also with his Church, and in proportion to our obedience to his command will be the fulfilment of his promise. He has now opened to us the door of the nations: Japan in 1853, Turkey in 1856, China in 1858, Africa in 1877, Corea in 1884; and even now we begin to see a movement by which Thibet, the home of the Grand Llama worship, will be thrown open to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, before we take possession of those other lands. Dr. Pierson proceeded to refer to some of the wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in recent times, making special mention of the wonderful success given to the McAll Mission in France.. God is mightily moving, and is having respect to his covenant. It is time that we should bestir ourselves to take hold of Him, and to consecrate ourselves to his service. Oh that the Church of Christ would give her members, her children, her substance, to the glorious work of taking to the nations of the earth the message of the Gospel. She only sends some 6000 Protestant missionaries into the heathendom and the spiritual destitution of the wide world. What a call there is to our young men and young women to go to lands afar, as light bearers for God and his Christ. "I delight," said Dr. Pierson, "that my eldest daughter is now in Japan with her husband, and that my other six children are all hoping to go to the foreign mission field." Can Christian parents make any more precious offering to their Lord than to lay their children on the altar of his service, and ask Him to make of them missionaries to the ignorant and degraded heathen in the far-off lands of the earth?

Should we not reconstruct our system of giving to the Lord's cause, and acknowledge our stewardship of the property that God has given us? Instead of the few pence or the few pounds that we have been accustomed to devote to missions, should we not give our money in large quantities—in a measure that will do honour to our Lord, and in a sense do honour to ourselves, as an expression of our gratitude to Him for what He has bestowed upon us? Scotland is the land of the martyrs for the cause of Christ. Here the Gospel has been preserved to us by the heroic fidelity of our forefathers. Shall there not go forth from Scotland a multitude of missionaries to the uttermost parts of the earth, who shall penetrate the darkness, and, with the light of the Gospel in their hands, like the fiery torch of the ancient days, illumine these vast territories where the shadow of death now prevails?

Mr. Mackenzie, the much-respected pastor of the church, added some sympathetic words, backing up the preacher's eloquent appeal for consecrated men and money, and the congregation were deeply impressed by the solemn words spoken in their hearing.

DIVINE HURT AND DIVINE HEALING.

This was the theme, handled with great earnestness by Dr. Gordon in the evening, in the West Parish Church, from Jer. viii. 21, 22. Jesus Christ, he said, can no longer be hurt, except through his people; the soldier's spear and the executioner's nail cannot touch Him now. The nerve centre of the Church is on the throne in the person of Jesus Christ, and because we are members of his body, whatever injures us injures Him, and causes Him to cry out, "Why persecutest thou Me?" In enumerating the ways in which Christ can be hurt through the action of his people, the preacher spoke first of the slight that many put on the doctrine of his atoning sacrifice. We injure Christ, too, by leading lives of luxury and self-gratification. We forget that without the bearing of the cross we cannot be his disciples. In the form of a parable, Dr. Gordon described in glowing speech the career of one who at first carried the cross for Christ, and whose life was the daily song—

> Jesus, I my cross have taken,
> All to leave and follow Thee.

By and by the man lost his erect carriage and tuneful life. The secret of it was that he had yielded to the greed of gold, to the fascinations of worldly pleasure and indulgence. If we know nothing of being crucified with Christ, we cannot sing of a Christ crucified for us. Let us lay aside every weight and all that hinders us in the Christian race, everything that wounds Christ and that weakens ourselves. Why is it that we see so few preaching Christ in heathen lands? Experience answers that it is because so few are living Christ in Christian lands. And yet it is not now so much a question of men as of money. There are in America to-day more than 2000 young men and women who have avowed their desire to go out as missionaries to the heathen, but our missionary societies could not send a quarter of them if they asked to be sent immediately. Yet it is stated with authority that among the professing Christians of America there are more than seven billion dollars of hoarded wealth. Making due allowance for the necessary maintenance of life and provision for old age, must we not conclude that the great bulk of this money is simply a talent laid up in a napkin? If the Lord were to come to-day, would He not shake out the napkin, and say to the Church, "Wicked and slothful servant, thou shouldest have put my money to usury." Surely there never was a time when the claims of foreign missions pressed so heavily on us as now. Are we wasting the Lord's money by adorning our persons with it? The other day I sat at table opposite a young lady whose fingers were covered with jewellery enough, in my estimation, to have supported a missionary for five years among the heathen. Bring out your hidden and unneeded treasure, ye sons and daughters of God, and remember Him who, though He was rich, became poor that we through his poverty might be rich. A minister in England lately told of visiting one of his congregation on his death-bed. He asked the dying man to take his hand as he commended him to God in prayer in the hour of life's extremity. The man did not respond to the request, and it was discovered afterwards that he died with his hands grasping the key of his safe. And so the world continues to lie in the wicked one, because the Church of Christ will hug its useless wealth. Will a man rob God? Nay; and God will not rob a man. He will not take a penny out of our pockets without our consent, or make of us a missionary by compulsion. Our freedom of will is the most precious gift with which He has endowed us. Young man, young woman, the best gift you can present to God is yourself. Old man, old woman, to whom God has given abundance of means, the next best thing you can give is your wealth; the world is perishing because you withhold it.

Under the second head of the discourse, Dr. Gordon dwelt very clearly and impressively on the method of Divine healing through the finished atoning work of Christ. Before He could preach peace, He had to make peace by the blood of his cross. Before we exalt the Fatherhood of God, we need to recognise the natural orphanage of man. What shall we do to give the Gospel of Christ to those who know it not? Let us see to it that the blood of souls is not upon our garments; but let us do what we can to declare to the dying world that peace and pardon that Jesus Christ has purchased by his blood.

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Stott addressed the children of the Free High Sunday-school. Mrs. Gordon, of Boston, also spoke at a mission meeting in the evening. With so much sowing of the good seed throughout the day, Inverness ought soon to yield a golden harvest of consecrated workers for the lighting up of the dark places of the earth.

A crowded meeting of women was held on Monday afternoon, in the rooms of Young Men's Christian Association, under the presidency of Mrs. Lang. Mrs. Gordon, of Boston, spoke on the importance of using every talent for God, and putting ourselves entirely at his disposal. Mr. Stott told some missionary experiences in China. Much interest was awakened among the ladies present.

In the evening there was a united meeting in Free High Church, with a full platform, comprising ministers of different denominations. Rev. G. Robson, who presided, said the Church is at last awaking to realise her obligation to carry out the great commission. In a very stirring address, Dr. Pierson laid down the philosophic basis of missions, that God works through the human medium. We are inspired and encouraged to go forward by the infallible promises of his Word. Dr. Pierson made a spirited reply to the recent criticism of The Times newspaper, and showed the remarkable triumphs of missions in modern times. Rev. James Scott, of Natal Mission, described Gospel successes among the Zulus. Mrs. Stott told pathetically of missionary difficulties and encouragements in China.

Dr. Gordon was deeply impressive in setting forth the great responsibility on the Church of Christ to take the Gospel quickly to every creature under heaven. The church that is not a missionary church will decline. If we give not the light to others, our lamp will go out: this is the voice of history. God is in haste about saving his world, and He will take all sorts of labourers. Dr. Gordon proceeded to recount the Gospel triumphs among Telegus in India, and Karens in Burmah, and cited Darwin's remarkable testimony as to the power of the Gospel to transform such men as the savage tribes of Patagonia. He closed with a very strong and weighty appeal for systematic and generous giving of worldly substance for the support of foreign missions.

From Inverness the delegation proceed to Strathpeffer, Nairn, Elgin, Aberdeen, &c. Earnest and united prayer is desired that a rich blessing may rest on this effort.

George-street Mission, Lambeth-walk, S.E.—Dr. J. W. J. OSWALD, 245, Kennington-road, asks for assistance to enable Mr. Goodman, the missionary, to take some very old people into the country for a day. The district is extremely poor. Mr. GOODMAN's address is 29, Prince's-square, Kennington-road, S.E.

KABYLIA.—Mrs. Th. Hocart in a private letter says:—"It is astonishing how much more free the women are with their own sex than with men. On Sunday we, Mr. Lamb, my husband and I, went into the court of a house (by permission). As long as the gentlemen were there the women scarcely opened their mouths, but when the gentlemen left, and I prepared to follow, they made a sign for me to remain, and I assure you they found no difficulty in talking then. To be sure their conversation is not very elevated, but with the life they lead, and their abject position for generations, that is not to be wondered at. I lately invited a Kabyle woman to come and keep me company. Although she was the sister-in-law of our boy, he took care to warn me that she must be watched for fear she should 'hide' something (he never says 'steal'). Hitherto we have found him honest; indeed, the men are less inclined to steal in the house than the women. Little things have less temptation for them than for women."—Evangéliste.

Religious Tract Society.

THIS house has sent out two well-written narratives bearing on the history of the Spanish Armada and its defeat, which England is this year celebrating. DRAKE AND THE DONS (3s. 6d.), edited by Rev. Richard Lovett, is a handsome presentation of the career of the famous Admiral, whose skill helped to overthrow the plans of the Spanish invaders. It is an excellent book on the subject for boys. On the same plane of history is THE HEROINE OF HAARLEM (3s. 6d.), by Harriette E. Burch, a graphic story of staunch fidelity to truth in the Netherlands, under Spanish Romanising persecution. The story is almost entirely true to fact, and in it, as the preface says, England's daughters may see what would have been their fate in Queen Elizabeth's day if the Spaniards had had their way. The lessons of that time need to be remembered now, and we thank the author for this medium of conveying them. THE ARMADA PACKET (1s.) is a collection of historical and narrative tracts relating to the controversy with Rome, and is well suited for wide distribution at the present time.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Two admirable gift books for the young are: ONLY A GIPSY (Holmes), and BOYS AND GIRLS WHO HAVE RISEN (Passmore & Alabaster).

The last twenty-six numbers of FRIENDLY GREETINGS make a beautiful illustrated volume of temperance, Gospel, and other religious narratives. A splendid book for the village library. (2s. 6d. Tract Society.)

The latest issue of the New Biographical Series of Tracts issued by the Religious Tract Society is John Bunyan. It comes from the capable pen of Dr. Samuel G. Green, and gives a concise but comprehensive view of the remarkable career of the Bedford tinker.

CHRISTIAN LIVING. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. This neat little book contains the substance of addresses delivered at conferences and missions, and recently published in our columns. Experimental truth is therein set forth with much force and freshness of expression. When originally delivered, the addresses were much blessed to the quickening of believers, and it is hoped that they will be widely circulated in this permanent form, and that the Holy Spirit will use them to the instruction and edification of many readers.

FORESHADOWINGS OF CHRISTIANITY. By E. Josephine Peckover. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The purpose of this well-written work is to indicate those features of heathen religions which correspond more or less with the great truths of the Christian faith. Many will read the book to profit. Though recognising the gleams of truth which shine through the gloom of other religions, the author very properly says that it is a matter for extreme regret that any who are living in days and lands illumined by the brightness of Christianity should go back into the semi-darkness of Platonism and Buddhism. The arrangement is good, and the treatment unpretentious and reverent.

STRANGE SCENES. By Rev. James Neil. Woodford Fawcett & Co., Salisbury-square. This is the second volume of the Penny Library which is now being edited by the well-known author of "Palestine Explored." Well printed, on good paper, and profusely illustrated, this promises to be a very useful series. "Strange Scenes," unpretending though it is, gives the cream of Mr. Neil's important Oriental discoveries which throw new light on the Sacred Scriptures. We sincerely hope it will have a large circulation. Nothing short of a godly zeal could have produced the book in this form, evidently designed for world-wide distribution. Let the first edition of sixty thousand copies be speedily exhausted, so that Mr. Neil may be encouraged to put other equally valuable works to press.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Longmans, Green & Co.:—The Son of Man in his relation to the Race.

Wells, Gardner & Co.:—Bridewell Royal Hospital: Past and Present, by A. J. Copeland; St. Augustine's, Canterbury, by Rev. G. F. Maclear, D.D.; The Basis of True Christian Unity, by Rev. S. Kettlewell.

CRUSADE AGAINST SLAVERY.

CARDINAL LAVIGERIE has visited England, in order to appeal for sympathy in his crusade against the Arab slave traders, whose cruelty and wicked operations threaten to exterminate the natives of Africa. The Cardinal is Roman Catholic Primate of the Dark Continent, and for well-nigh half a century has been consecrated to the service of his Church. The Pope has ordered him to preach a crusade against the slave trade. The Cardinal has been interviewed by a representative of The Echo. In answer to questions, he said:—

"I headed a band of Pilgrims who went to Rome to offer to his Holiness the Pope our respectful homage on his Jubilee, and to express our gratitude for his splendid resolve to deal with the awful subject of slavery. I took with me twelve slaves, bought in the market, as simply unexaggerated specimens of the misery and suffering produced of the system. Could I have brought them here, and shown them as they were when I first saw them, such a thrill of horror would have run through London as this generation has not known. Let me ask you to consider how Mohamedanism has restlessly and irresistibly crept over half of Africa. I have lived among these Mussulmans, and I would not say one word against them, for undoubtedly Mohamedanism is an advance upon heathenism. But the saddest feature of their creed is that they regard humanity as being divided into two races, one of which is inferior, and destined to serve. Thus they look upon the negro as a mere animal, or as Leo XIII. remarked, 'A bullock destined to bear the yoke.' They have put their doctrines into effect, and bands of slave hunters have pushed on further and further, from Morocco and Tunis, past Timbuctoo and the countries along the Niger, from Egypt and Zanzibar, the Lake districts, and to-day are on the banks of the Higher Congo, and even to the confines of the British possessions at the Cape and in Zululand.

"These slave hunters," continued the Cardinal, "carry off by violence any isolated woman or child they can find, and, to quote Père Moinet, one of my missionaries, 'a woman or child who goes ten minutes' distance from the village, has no certainty of returning.' But that is not all. They organise their expeditions with as much care as a war. Sometimes in the extreme refinement of their brutality, they induce neighbouring tribes to join them, by an offer of a share in the pillage, and contrive, later on, to capture them into the bargain. The slaves are on foot in the caravan march, and they tie the hands and feet of all the men who appear strong enough to offer any resistance or flight, in such a manner that every step is painful. For the whole day they drag along their wretched way, and at night a handful of raw grain is given them as food. In a few days, grief, pain, fatigue, and privation have broken numbers down. Then the brutal captors pass down the lines, and to save gunpowder in shooting them, deal a heavy blow, with a bar of wood carried for the purpose, on the back of the unhappy victim's neck, who, with one piercing cry, rolls on the sand in the agonised convulsions of death. In the slave market, decency is ignored, and blood ties go for nothing; husband and wife, parents and children, are ruthlessly separated.

"Now," added the Cardinal, "my mission is to declare in all Christian lands these horrible facts, which I have seen and know to exist. It is a great opportunity for international coalition, and all may unite in a work that appeals to the common moral sense of men, apart even from religious grounds."

BENEVOLENT CHRISTIANS who are willing to adopt or provide for two winning and interesting little orphans, a boy and girl, aged respectively two years and six months, are invited to communicate with Miss Dill, Birch Wood, Burgess Hill, Sussex.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken.

☞ A correspondent from India writes in a somewhat disappointed and despondent tone to inquire what has been done by the recent Missionary Conference. He seems to think that it evaporated in encouraging words and hearty hand-shakings. Not so. The burning words spoken in London have set Scotland on fire; and as we have sent Hudson Taylor and Reginald Radcliffe to America, so from America we have Dr. Gordon and Dr. Pierson, who have consented not only to sacrifice their vacation, but to remain in this country so long as needful to stir up the churches to fulfil the Lord's command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Certainly the movement in North Britain has many very hopeful indications. We most sincerely trust that Drs. Gordon and Pierson will be helped of God and his people, according to their great needs, as they continue to go through the land urging upon the Christian community a more correct appreciation of the duties and privileges of those who have themselves been saved. Earnest prayer should ascend to God abundantly to prosper the preachers, and to give wings to their words, so that all the world may soon hear the call to repent and turn to the God of our salvation. We direct special attention to the reports elsewhere, in which our special commissioner describes the progress of the movement.

At the meeting for "Gospel Work on the Continent," at the Mildmay Conference, as reported in our issue of July 13, Dr. Prochet asked the meeting whether he should undertake the training of an ex-priest, who, he had reason to think, was a genuine believer. £50 would enable him to undertake the training. He has got their reply, by the receipt of the exact sum, and 5s. over. On leaving for Italy he had £30 5s. in hand, and the next day one who had heard of the appeal, but knew nothing of the amount received, sent to the treasurer of the fund a cheque for £20. This answered prayer should encourage us to follow up the case with prayer, that the ex-priest may become a faithful preacher of the Gospel.

It is intended, God willing, to hold a three days' convention concerning the Personal and Pre-Millennial Coming of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on October 9, 10, and 11. Amongst others, the following are expected to take part:—Rev. Canon Fausset, Dr. Andrew Bonar, Dr. Elder Cumming, Rev. J. Riddell, Dr. Donald Fraser, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Dr. Black, of Inverness, Revs. John Wilkinson, Thomas Grant, of Tain, James Smith, of Dufftown, Mr. G. H. Pember, and Dr. Robert Anderson. The prayers of God's people are asked for guidance and blessing in connection with the convention. Communications may be addressed to Mr. James E. Mathieson, Gauldwell, Craigellachie, N.B.

"An Enquirer" (a B.A.) asks whether we maintain that if a man cannot accept many of the "doctrines about Christ," and yet accepts Christ's own words, as recorded in the Gospels, as his creed, he cannot be a Christian. We reply that every man who accepts all Christ's own words, as recorded in the Gospels, is a Christian. We think that every doctrine about Christ stated in the Acts and the Epistles is either stated or implied by Christ Himself in the Gospels.

We beg our readers' attention to the remarkable series of illustrated books entitled, "The Penny Library," by Rev. James Neil, of which the second volume is noticed at p. 15.

The new President of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. Joseph Bush, who owes his position in Methodism to his love of duty rather than to eloquence or scholarship, gave an admirable watchword for his presidential year, "Conversions in every congregation." Methodism, he remarked, was nothing unless converting. The same is true of a stated ministry everywhere, and it is well to put clearly this definite issue. He who gave the ordination charge to Paul was the Lord Himself; and the commission was "to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." The loss is incalculable to congregations who week by week listen to sermons, but never hear converting sermons. There is much, moreover, that passes as evangelical preaching, which is merely theoretically such, and which has not in it that saving reality which the Spirit uses for the "new life" of the hearers.

Rev. C. H. Kelly, in giving in his report to the Conference, after an official visit to the American Episcopal Methodists, said that the class meeting was still prized by devout Methodists in the United States, but attendance had ceased to be a test of membership. Imitation of this in British Methodism would, according to the speaker, be suicidal. Without expressing an opinion upon this, we would emphasise Mr. Kelly's words that a pure church is better than a big one. No greater or more disastrous mistake has been committed of late years than that of making figures and numbers a prime consideration in church membership, rather than quality and holy character.

In a book on the Jews, by Dr. Kellogg, of America, it is stated that there is at Cairo the largest college in the world. There are 300 professors who teach Mohammedanism, and 10,000 students. At the head of this university is a Jewish pervert to Islam. Surely this suggests the amazing energy of the Jewish nature, and that the recovering of Israel to Christ would be "life from the dead." The Mohammedan propagandist goes out from this institution with this only as his outfit—a turban, a cloth round his loins, and a Koran. There has been a tendency of late, through recent discussions, to disparage missionary zeal among Mohammedans. But have we not, as followers of our crucified Lord, something to learn from them?

The Editor of Good Words cannot have been very discriminating in his attendance at what, in the number for July, page 501, he describes as "Revivals." At such services, he says, the eye is turned inward on the search for feelings, and the attention is turned away from the objects to be believed to a morbid self-scrutiny which issues in gushing self-satisfaction, or in religious melancholy. It is very singular that the impression of multitudes who have attended such services, and of those who continue to attend them, is exactly the reverse. In the preaching of Mr. Moody and other speakers at revival services, no feature is more marked or unmistakable than the turning away of the hearers from their feelings, and the setting forth of Christ as the one object of belief and trust.

At the recent assizes at Durham, out of a total of thirty-three prisoners, no fewer than fifteen were tried for offences against women and children. Case after case was heard of outrage on children of tender years; but, through the blundering sometimes of magistrates' clerks, the criminals escaped with only a few months' imprisonment. Mr. Justice Cave not only pointed to the calendar as sad evidence of immorality and brutality, but very properly, by disallowing costs, showed his disapproval of the negligence of the prosecuting authorities, who had committed prisoners for a less heinous offence than that of which they had actually been guilty. We are glad to observe that the jury, of which Sir J. W. Pease was foreman, made a presentment in favour of Mr. Milvain's Whipping Bill, and that Mr. Justice Cave agreed that it is highly desirable that corporal punishment should be administered in such shameful cases as these.

Our contemporary The Lancet has recently given some most excellent papers with reference to the Sweating System, and in a recent issue has embodied in five suggestions its proposals in regard to the mitigation of the cruel evils. One of these, the extension of the Factory Act to all private rooms and dwellings where work is done, seems to us a little too drastic for public opinion; but the compulsory registration of all places where anything sold to the public is made seems less open to objection. The remaining three suggestions are admirable, including as they do the appointment of inspectors qualified to deal with questions of ventilation, drainage, &c.; the building of "municipal workshops on model principles" to be let out to tailors and others; and last, but perhaps most important of all, "the refusal of Government and municipal contracts to all who sub-contract, who do not possess wholesome workshops, and who pay an inhuman rate of wages." With regard to the concluding recommendation it is possible for almost all of our readers to do something in the way of influencing Parliamentary opinion, and we trust that the matter may not be lost sight of by any of those who have it in their power to help in the removal of a crying evil.

In the evidence recently given before the Select Committee on "Sweating," instances were cited of women "finishing" trousers for Her Majesty's Customs at seven shillings a dozen, each pair involving five hours' work. Government trousers were stated to be made at eleven shillings a dozen. Women who worked fourteen hours a day, and found their own thread, were paid three halfpence for finishing a jacket; and juveniles were paid three shillings a dozen for finishing suits, each dozen representing a week's work. The price of Post Office coats was stated to have been reduced from two shillings and ninepence to one shilling and eightpence each. That this heartless system should be fostered by private firms and individuals is deplorable enough; but it is disgraceful that a Government whose first duty is to govern for the welfare of the people, whilst annually wasting thousands of pounds on experiments with weapons of war, should "grind the faces of the poor" by countenancing this cruel cheapness. The sub-letting and re-letting of Government contracts ought to be summarily stopped.

We were conversing the other day with a Manchester clergyman, who found that one of his chief difficulties was to combat the present passion for betting on race horses, a passion which, we are sorry to observe, appears to be obtaining a great hold upon thousands of our working men. One of these, when spoken to on the subject recently, referred his pastor not only to the Stock Exchange, but to several developments of modern trade; and, unfortunately, the satire was not unjust or uncalled for. At the same time, two wrongs do not make a right; and the atmosphere of the turf is so essentially dishonest, that perhaps of all modern forms of gambling that of betting upon race horses is most immoral and dangerous, and is the one of all others to be carefully avoided.

The Lord's Day Observance Society has recently addressed a very earnest appeal to the members of the London clubs, protesting against the increasing desecration of the Day of Rest by the higher classes of society, who in their absorbing chase of amusement are becoming absolutely indifferent to the physical and spiritual needs of their own servants and of the multitudes of their poorer neighbours whom they compel to minister to their whims, and are losing all consideration for their fellows "whose quiet they invade, and whose worship they disturb." This appeal makes special reference to the many evils involved in the now fashionable practice of "Sunday up the river," which is stated to be participated in by many who have attended public worship and even partaken of Holy Communion in the morning, and it expresses the earnest hope—in which all God-fearing people will unite—that a stop may be put to conduct "which is an offence to God, an injury to society, and a blot on our Christian civilisation."

"Let there be light!" was God's first command, the first step in transfiguring chaos into kosmos—confusion into order. From darkness to light is God's way of reformation in everything. We are having some interesting and valuable illustrations of this. The British Weekly is discussing the relation between mistresses and servants, and wise housewives will diligently ponder the statements made. If they read them over with their servants, noting both what is true and what is exaggerated, and if mistress and servant each sought to be and do right, a great increase of domestic happiness would result.

The light also is cleansing the Metropolitan Board of Works, the School Board, Bryant & May's factory, and, we trust, will do much more beneficent work. We live under very complex and complicated conditions, and nothing can do us all more good than to let the light shine in, that whatever is wrong in our lives, whether from ignorance, or carelessness, or selfishness, may be judged and put away.

In the present agitation against the liquor traffic, we are losing sight of a great and rising curse in our midst—"the drinking clubs," a terrible scourge; they will appear presently worse than public-houses. The drinking is unseen by the outward world, but the wives and the children suffer much through the drinking of the men. A woman said the other day that when her husband used the public-house, she could go in and fetch him out. But now her husband has joined a drinking club, and she has "to wait for three long hours outside the club door, she cannot obtain admission." We hope that proper restrictions may eventually be placed upon the sale of drink in these places.

In the future licensing of public houses, the side doors opening into our courtways and back streets must not be lost sight of. They are doing great mischief. Why should not public-houses with side doors pay double licence? But we confess we are rapidly being converted to the advocacy of prohibition as the only effectual remedy.

The Keswick Convention.

TUESDAY, JULY 24.

IN continuance of our report of this Convention, begun last week, we have to say that, as the days passed, the interest increased remarkably. Notwithstanding the pelting rain, crowds of people might be seen flocking in the early morn to the tent with Bibles, hymn-books, and note-books.

The first of the early morning addresses given was by Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING, of Glasgow, and was a very edifying exposition of the Lord's Prayer. He said: People sometimes ask, How far do you go in your teaching of holiness? My answer is, just as far as the Lord's Prayer goes—nothing less than that, and nothing beyond. This is the universal prayer—that used by the child, the Christian infant, or the infant Christian—one of the first things he learns, and the highest saint can ask no more. The prayer has two parts: the first concerns God, and the second the need of man.

The first part has three divisions, answering to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. The first desire that the prayer presents is for God's glory—"hallowed be thy name"—that for which Jesus was living. The first thought in Christ's heart is naturally the first desire that He puts into the lips of his people. Now, no one but a consecrated man knows anything or cares anything about the glory of God. Can you honestly make that your prayer? Is it so uppermost in our heart that it naturally occurs to us first? The second petition "thy kingdom come," I believe to be the expression of the yearning longing of the whole Church of Christ for the return of the Lord Jesus. The third petition "thy will be done"—the will of the Holy Ghost, as now working on earth—is marvellous in its comprehensiveness. It has two branches: the first is the sanctification of the Church of Christ. Let the Church become wholly under the influence and power of the Holy Ghost. The whole teaching of holiness is embraced in the first aspect of that third petition—that the whole Church become holy, as God is holy. That every Christian should be holy is the first aspect of the petition; and, as to the second, is it possible that our Lord Jesus should have taught his people a prayer in which the condition of the world, the heathen world, the perishing world, has no place? Impossible. The second part of that petition embraces the whole evangelisation of the world. How few realise the wonderfully deep and blessed meaning embraced in that aspect of the petition! As it were, we lay the world at the feet of God every time we present it.

CHRIST THE FOOD OF THE SOUL.

We come to the second part of the prayer, which concerns the needs of man. It is only now that we have time to think of ourselves—leisure to think about man at all. The second division of the prayer consists also of three petitions. The first concerns our daily bread. The child who presents the Lord's prayer, lisping it at a mother's knee, thinks only of his daily food. Are there not some Christian people who have never got higher than that, who think only of their bodily needs? Can that exhaust the Lord's meaning? Does not the soul occupy the greater and more important part in our Lord's eye? Surely it is the provision for the soul that the Lord has chiefly in mind. And what does it mean? The food of the soul, it is Christ; the food that it must partake of, if it would not perish from famine. Give me new views of Christ to-day—that is the thought uppermost in that petition. "Give"; it must be a gift. You cannot get it by your own striving. No struggling, no efforts, no attempts of man can get the food of the soul—as much a gift as the manna was. It is not on thoughts of Christ that we feed; it is on Christ. "Give us this day"—every day we must have new thoughts about Christ. Yesterday's manna became stale, to-day's manna will be stale before to-morrow; we must get manna for to-day. Have you got something of Christ to-day? "O Lord, give us this day our daily bread. O Lord, I hunger for Thee." The second petition, "Forgive us," shows that forgiveness has a place in the Lord's prayer. You never have a child of God who gets beyond this mark. Whenever you cease to ask forgiveness, you have got out of the region of the teaching of Jesus; you have got beyond the prayer of the Lord, which is the measure of the teaching of holiness. Forgive us—what? Most of us will say, "our trespasses." I don't find it so. The word trespasses is not in the Lord's Prayer as it is given us in the Word of God, according to our common version. It is in the Prayer-book version. It is in one of the old versions, I believe, of the Reformation. Tyndale was the first that changed the old English translation of debts into trespasses; but it was restored again. The word in the Greek unmistakably means "debts." The English word trespasses refers to outward transgressions, and generally transgressions against man. The Greek has also the thought of transgression in it; but the word of the Lord is "debts"—a much wider word—the debts that we owe to God, most of all that debt of love, the first and chief of all, and the debt that we can never pay. We are bankrupt; and the Lord Jesus teaches us to go to God, our great Creditor, whom we can never possibly pay, to ask Him—not to have patience till we may pay, not to remit a portion of the debt, but to forgive us all our debts against Him. Remember the condition. We are forgiven "as we forgive." Do you forgive everyone with all your heart? Can you lay your hands on your heart; can your lift your hearts to the Lord and say, "Lord, Thou knowest I forgive all. I harbour no evil, no grudge, against any one soul in all this world"? Who can say the Lord's Prayer as Jesus gave it?

TEMPTATION AND TRIAL.

The third petition is, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." In the Greek there is one word for temptation and trial, but the distinction between these is clear in thought—temptation from the devil to lead us into sin, trial from the Lord to lead us into further fulness. It is all but impossible for us in daily life to discern between the trial and temptation. I believe the word, as found here, implies both. What does it mean? Is it not the Gethsemane prayer over again—applied to man? We know that the temptation and the trial came together to Him, which made that hour one of awful and unspeakable agony. Gethsemane lies more or less in the life of every Christian, and the Gethsemane prayer is given at its lowest level here. "But deliver us from the evil." That means, deliverance from sin and Satan—present deliverance. Who but a consecrated man believes that to be possible? In that prayer, which we say daily, we are taught to ask that God should free us from sin—blessed freedom from the habits of sin—to obtain present deliverance, and to live in freedom from the power of sin and Satan.

Then the prayer ends where it began. For it has a third division consisting in a single word—the doxology. It goes back to the glory of God. It began in petition, and it ends in song. It began with asking that the name of God be hallowed, and now it sings "glory to God." And here too you have three things—the kingdom of the Son, the power of the Spirit, and the glory of the Father. The Christian heart, as the Lord looks upon it, fulfilling the ideal of Christ, is just this, that it is in love with the glory of God—that it can neither begin nor end its prayer without being full of that. I say, Christian friends, which of us can present the Lord's prayer, weighing each word as it goes out before God? When you can, then you shall have learned all that can be taught you here; and then be truly holy persons, the saints of God walking in the light even as He is in the light!

Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke on "The Preparation for Blessing." The Lord is saying to each one "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" Preparation is from the Lord, but there is also our side of this truth. May God first bring us to his feet to ask Him to prepare us to put ourselves into his hands. Ezra had the good hand of the Lord his God upon him, for he "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." Mark the order of the three things. If you want to teach: first, seek the law of the Lord, and then do it; then you will be able to teach.

There are two kinds of preparation—first preparation for blessing, and second preparation for service. We have come here to be so fitted and filled that we may go forth from Keswick prepared unto every good work. In what then does this preparation consist? In a readiness to hearken unto the voice of the Lord. We have come here to listen and to learn, "Blessed is the man that heareth Me" (Prov. viii. 34).

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Bible-reading by Rev. Hubert Brooke was most solemn and searching. Starting from the thought of the Family Life of God's children, he urged the need of reconciliation before offering our gifts. The gift, it was to be noticed, must be laid down before the altar whilst the reconciliation was being made, and that being done, God would accept our gift. The address was felt by many to be deeply solemn, and some sought practically to carry it out by writing letters to friends and in various ways effecting reconciliation, in one case at least of twelve years', and in another of nineteen years' standing.

Then followed a paper by the honoured President, Mr. Bowker, in which a most important definition of "the things commonly believed" by those associated together in holiness work was given.

"On what conditions will God answer our questions?" was the subject of an address by Rev. Geo. C. Grubb at the close of the question meeting. "When Herod saw Jesus he was glad, . . . but He answered him nothing" (Luke xxiii. 8, 9). The Lord Jesus remains eternally silent to the spirit of carnal curiosity. Herod wanted to turn the Lord Jesus into a kind of theatrical show. But when certain Greeks wanted to see Jesus how different! It is a good thing to desire to see Jesus if nothing of carnal curiosity is in your desire. Herod, from being a great questioner, became a great mocker. Then, again, take Matt. xxvi. 62. Our Lord is always silent before the spirit of prejudice. Caiaphas and others had judged Jesus already, and had determined to get rid of Him. The Lord never gives an answer to hastiness of spirit (John xix. 9), or to that worldliness which is determined to keep on good terms with the world.

But see when He does answer. Let me introduce you to a lady of title, to the Queen of Sheba (2 Chron. 9). She came to prove Solomon with hard questions. And Solomon told her all her questions, and there was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not. Someone has come 9000 miles, from Ceylon, to this Convention! The Lord bless and fill them with his own presence and power. The Queen of Sheba came with her heart full; some of you have only your heads full. And then she could say, "The one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me," and gave Solomon out of a full heart the best of all she had. Neither was there any such spice as the Queen of Sheba gave to Solomon. Oh! may we have that odour of sanctity! I often hear of the odour of sanctity, but I seldom smell it. Lay your best at the feet of Jesus, and you will then say, "Behold the half was not told."

MAN'S GREAT DUTY.

On Tuesday evening the tent was so crowded that an overflow meeting had to be held in the Drill Hall. In the tent the first speaker was Rev. W. Haslam, who said that we were not created to be saved, but to glorify God. We make a great mistake, and lower the standard of our lives very much when we spend all our thoughts about getting salvation and blessing for ourselves. When you look upon the world, you find there are people doing their best—they are like the heathen; there are people doing their best, and asking God to help them—they are like the Pharisees; there are people throwing themselves upon God. That is what it ought to be—presenting themselves unto God, which is their reasonable service—not in order to obtain blessing, but in order to be made a blessing. What blessing did the Apostle refer to? We find it in Rom. v.—the great blessing of justification, of being brought as near to God as his own beloved Son, who was made to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. Other blessings are described in the same chapter: peace, joy, hope, deliverance, keeping! Though sin reigns, we are told that grace also reigns. One of the most wonderful things the Apostle says in that Epistle is that grace is stronger than sin, however strong sin is; as Christ is stronger than Satan, however strong Satan is. We get such a blessing as that in the very first stage of our Christian course—in pardon and justification. A good many people have come up here for sanctification who have not got the full knowledge of justification. Now, the next chapter brings us to another stage, that is, the new life, the resurrection life—Christ living in you by the power of the Holy Ghost, to make you do God's will. When you have given your will to God, then you are filled with the Holy Ghost for service. There must be a definite surrender in each stage. If you want to be a consecrated soul, offer and present yourself as a living sacrifice; and the fire will descend upon and sanctify you for God's glory and praise.

There are three stages definitely marked out that come to us: (1) From the death of Christ, who shed his blood for us: (2) from the ressurrection of Christ; (3) from the ascension of Christ—the death of Christ for salvation; the resurrection of Christ for the newness of life; the ascension of Christ for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost to sanctify to God's service. Beloved, take care that your religion is the religion of the Holy Ghost. There are a great many religions in the world, and yet there is only one; and if your religion is not that of the Holy Ghost it will be of no avail. It is the mighty power of the Holy Ghost that can wake you up, fill you, penetrate you, enable you to work, work through you, the weak instrument, for the salvation of souls, as well as for your own sanctification.

Rev. Charles Fox followed with some forcible and practical exhortations.

WEDNESDAY.

The seven o'clock meeting this morning was devoted to prayer for missions. A strong missionary spirit has pervaded the meetings, manifested not only in the prayers but in the addresses. One outstanding feature of the convention has been the Bible-readings given by Rev. Hubert Brooke—each of which was very striking, full of Scriptural instruction, and pregnant with important applications to every-day Christian life. One of these Bible-readings was given on Wednesday at the forenoon meeting. He took as the basis of his reading Psalm cxxxi. 1, "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty," and the other two verses of the Psalm.

He remarked at the outset: You must go through Psalm cxxx. before you can understand Psalm cxxxi. Let us make sure of taking God's order. These Psalms are among the songs of degrees. Psalm cxxxi. is one of those songs of deliverance with which the Lord compasses about his saints. There are plenty of them for God's people. There is a song of deliverence after and before every battle—a song before you fight, then after God has fought for you. Jehoshaphat praised God before the battle, the enemy fell down before them, and they had only to take the spoil. It is a song of degrees, or of goings-up, or of steps. There are steps indicated in the three verses of the Psalm, and we must take the one step before we can take the other, and observe God's order. It is the song of degrees of David, the man after God's own heart. If any man wants to know how to be a man after God's own heart, let him learn here the steps. The first thing to learn is that it is the man who can say, "Lord, my heart is not haughty." Lord—it is not something we say to ourselves and lay sweet unction to ourselves, it is not a blowing of our own trumpet to the Church at large, or a friend about us, but it is what we say to the Lord, and Him alone, "Lord."

It comes about by a change in the soul, indicated in verse 2: "Surely I have behaved and quieted myself, as a weaned child." In the margin it is "my soul." The soul must get right before the walk or behaviour gets right. Now, let us consider what it is that David has got rid of in his soul. It is pride. Pride is the first of the seven things that God hates. He abominates pride. Remember what He says about pride in his Word. Mr. Brooke went over a great number of these in a striking way. Summing up, he said there are four things of which people are proud. There is the pride of race, the pride of place, the pride of face, the pride of grace. As to pride of race, there is not an old Jewish pedlar in the streets that has not got a longer ancestry than any of you can boast, and he bears it in his face, too. It is better to take God's place in the matter. All spring from Adam, and your neighbour has as much right to be proud of his blood as you have of yours. As to pride of place. Some think they have more right to that as partly due to their own toils and labours; they have made themselves. An American said to one who said he was a self-made man, "When you were about it, why did you not make yourself prettier?" All you made of yourself you are dependent on God for. "What hast thou that thou hast not received; wherefore dost thou boast?" Pride of place—it is a ridiculous thing! Then as to pride of face, any face is good enough to go to heaven with. It is not in your looks, we are told that God delighteth Himself. Here is a vain thing. God looketh not on the appearance, and He wants to keep his people from these things of pride. Then as to pride of grace, the worst of all. There are plenty of horrible stories about that. Let us get rid of that in all its forms. You cannot be proud of anything God gave you, without that moment coming under condemnation. It is an abomination to God.

LIFE AND GROWTH.

At 11.30, in the tent, addresses were given by Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, F. B. Meyer, and J. A. Jacobs.

"Life Working from the Centre" was the subject of the address by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who read Lev. xix. 1, 2, and xx. 24. The life of things natural must start at the heart or centre, and work outwards. And yet when we try to bring this universal law to bear on things spiritual, very few are inclined to recognise it as the teaching of God. All life starts at the centre, and works outward to expend its power. We may, of course, encourage life from the outside, but cannot create it by any external action whatever. It needs the life power to be within, and then it will work out. Before conversion a man strives to work from the outside; but having at length received Christ into his heart, he settles down with joy in the fact that God has forgiven him, and that, by the operation of God the Holy Ghost, he is alive for evermore. It is impossible for the Church of the living God to fructify as a Church simply by outside effort; in vain is it to call on the Church for missionary labour, and equally impossible is it for the individual soul ever to have life by attention to externals. How many pass through sad and weary efforts after holiness, struggling and trying to be good because they do good, instead of learning what God is ever teaching, that in order to do holy things, we must be holy. Growing is not in, from without; but out, from within. And what man in his individual life is, so the whole Church of God should be; and God is charging each one of us to-day to decide solemnly whether we will be what God will have us be, and then by God's grace do what God would have us do.

Can any man account for gatherings like these on any other hypothesis than this, that the Church's life is all wrong; and that men and women are becoming conscious of it. The minds of men are greatly exercised on the subject of holiness. There has been a deep sense of disappointment, more effort and toil, till at length, by the goodness of God, light has been given to one and another who have risen up and said, Cease from toil. The life that God has given us is a life accepted in the heart and worked out from within, and may have gone forth and have lived a life of power and joy; but for one who has so gone forth, tell me how many have gone away with a deep settled conviction that these things cannot be. They have gone back to be still harder, whilst others have relegated the matter to the future, and put the joy and the happiness which may be ours now, beyond the grave. One great obstacle to the living of this victorious life is that men misunderstand God's Word. And, further, men like to put up a human difficulty against God's Word. There are, alas! sins that we love, but then there is a God who can change the man till the evil thing shall be abhorrent, and the whole life shall be changed, and the man shall go out into the life God would have him live, because God has come into his soul in power.

The speaker concluded by asking the great assemblage Where are you in the great matter of holiness? Have you understood you were to do something for God? or have you understood that the redemption of Christ was completed, and that it is sacrilege to touch it? Have you known what separation from the old Egypt life by the Red Sea means, so that you cannot even return to them if you would, for they lay dead on the sea-shore?

WHY GOD IS SILENT.

Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on "The Silence of God," from Ps. xxviii. 1. In this touching petition David prayed, "Be not silent to me: lest, if Thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit." God is sometimes silent to the soul. He may have been silent to you, and not have answered the prayer so persistently offered. For thirteen years he never gave any fresh revelation to Abraham. When God is silent to the heart, it is sometimes an ominous matter. We know from Rev. viii. 1, that silence was followed by a terrific outburst of judgment, and sometimes a sultry stillness is but a foreboding of the anger of God. It is not, however, always so. Zephaniah [iii. 17] shows us that God is sometimes silent in love.

Sometimes God is silent, because we have committed some sin that we have not confessed. I may be speaking as God's messenger to several here to-day, to whom God has not spoken for many a day in any fresh and vivid sense, because in their life there is some unconfessed sin that should have been confessed, judged, and put away. The Holy Spirit does not overwhelm us with the haze of mingled duty, and you will find that it will often be in obedience to distinct commands (trivial it may be) that the conditions of growth and progress are to be found, and God will not give another command until the former is obeyed. Let us, therefore, resolve to do that duty, about which we are uneasy. Let us see that the neglected duty is fulfilled.

Another cause of God's silence is when He would force the soul to heights never hitherto stepped up to. See Matt. xv. 23: "He answered her not a word." Why? Because there were two defects in this woman—the one a defective knowledge of Christ, and the other a defective knowledge of herself. Two things are required. Give your Lord and Master his true place in your life and confess Him; also take your true place and confess the sin, and then will it be said unto thee, "Great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt." The one thing in the Christian life is to put your will on Christ's side, and to leave Him to effect for you what you cannot effect for yourself. Let his will do it, and look to Him moment by moment for that which He by his grace will work. Let us get down to his will that He by his grace may lift us up.

MEETING FOR YOUNG MEN.

At the same hour there was another meeting in the Drill-hall specially for young men, of whom there was a large gathering. Rev. Evan Hopkins presided, and pointed out in opening the meeting that we must be in a right condition in order to have right conduct. Rev. G. C. Grubb gave a short Bible-reading from Ezek. viii., the great moral of which was getting the chambers of our imagery cleansed. There after the meeting was devoted to direct dealing with God in prayer, in which those present were asked to confess individually before God the sins they wanted to be cleansed; and a great many of those present in short prayers acknowledged many different kinds of pride in the heart and life, moral cowardice, selfishness, and spiritual pride. Mr. Hopkins remarked towards the close that the purchase of Christ's death is not only pardon secured, but also deliverance from the power of sin as well. Let us claim it by faith, and step out into the freedom from that sin to which we have been such slaves in the past, and stand fast in the liberty whereto we are called.

In the afternoon at 3.15 there was a meeting in the tent, and the subject again was that of Missions. Short exhortations were given by Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. G. C. Grubb. Dr. Wilson, from China, also spoke on the subject of Missions in China.

In the evening addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Thornton and Rev. C. A. Fox.

[We hope to complete our report of the proceedings next week.]

VILLA HELVETIA, MENTONE.—This Home for invalids accommodated a fair number of ladies last year. Recovered from the damages done by the earthquake, the town is clean and in better order than before. The object of the Home is not to offer a merely temporary alleviation to confirmed invalids, but to be the means, with the blessing of God, of restoring to active life those whose health is beginning to give way. Particulars as to entering the Institution may be obtained from Miss Dudgeon, care of Miss Keith Murray, Ochtertyre, Crieff, N.B.

TREASURES.

Why flit in pleasure's scorching noon?
  Or sigh in sorrow's night?
The Gospel calls, the Spirit pleads
  To lead you to the light.

To rapture with no sting behind,
  To rest from fruitless strife,
To beauty brighter than your dreams,
  In Christ, the Light of life.

And Christ is near, so very near,
  His Spirit touches thine;
His voice, which brings the dead to life,
  Now speaks with power divine.

"Come forth!" the Master calleth thee,
  The Saviour trust to save,
And life's great ocean shall come in,
  And wave shall roll on wave,

And bear your treasures, sought in vain—
  Gold unalloyed with dross,
The matchless jewels of the Crown,
  The merits of the Cross.

MR. SPENCER WALTON.

Those of your readers who have followed Mr. Spencer Walton with their prayers will be glad to hear of his arrival at Cape Town. He was received on the first evening by the Y.M.C.A., who had invited the various ministers and workers to meet him. It was encouraging to see all the evangelical denominations represented by their ministers.

The first public meeting was for prayer and consecration. It was a time of very real blessing to many, idols were broken and wills yielded. The meetings are growing in numbers and interest. In the after-meetings men and women are found broken down under a sense of sin. This is but the third day of the mission, and already there is a deep work of the Spirit, and promise of abundant blessing. Some days before Mr. Walton's coming, half a day was given to prayer, and confession of sin and failure. A large number of Christians assembled at the Y.W.C.A. rooms, for both the afternoon and evening meetings. Many voices were heard in prayer, and it was evident that there was much real heart-searchings.

Thankfulness has been expressed by many for these meetings. Similar meetings were held at the same time at Wellington, by Rev. Andrew Murray, from whom Mr. Walton has received a very warm welcome to South Africa. We shall be grateful for prayer, that much blessing may attend Mr. Walton's work in the colony.—Yours truly, M. S. Osborn.

OUR SAILORS.

Mr. John H. Mitchell writes to us:—Will you kindly permit me to appeal through the columns of The Christian to the friends of Mr. Hastings, and my own, who approve of our humble endeavours throughout the world to crush the power of infidelity, to lend Miss Weston a helping hand in her work among the sailors.

I am sure that any copies of the English, French, Italian, German, or Spanish penny editions of "Inspiration," published at 42s. per 1000 by Messrs. Marshall, 10, Paternoster-row, or any other temperance or Christian literature, would be thankfully and gladly accepted by Miss Weston, for distribution throughout the navies of the world.

This is a glorious opportunity to do noble work for Christ. Who will help?

AN OPEN DOOR.—A correspondent writes that a missioner is much needed at Freshwater Bay, Isle of Wight.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the Congregational Church and school, and the village of Stonehouse, Gloucester.——For much blessing upon tent meetings, to be commenced on Sunday next, at Pontnewydd.

Mr. Moody's Summer School.

We continue our notes of this important gathering for Bible study at Northfield, Massachusetts :—

On Thursday morning, July 5, the subjects of discussion were "Personal Purity," and the work of Bible training classes, which exist in large numbers throughout America, for the purpose of training Christians for personal work in using the sword of the Spirit.

At the general meeting which followed, Mr. James McConaughy, Secretary of the New York Association, spoke of the special opportunities for Christian work in college life, and urged his hearers to throw themselves into the work of the Associations.

Dr. John A. Broadus, President of the Baptist College, Louisville, Kentucky, gave his first address. His great kindliness, his winning Southern accent, and his sharp wit, associated as they were with great expository power, won for him the affection of last year's students, so that this summer his speaking was eagerly looked forward to. The addresses he gave well fulfilled the highest expectations. His subject this morning was the conversion of Nicodemus. The first thing to be noted was that a representative man of the highest and most cultured class acknowledged and came to Jesus. The Gospel of Jesus is not merely for "the masses." Many of earth's foremost men have been simple-hearted Christians. The second noticeable thing is that Nicodemus bore witness to the convincing power of the miracles of Christ, which in these latter days have been much discredited. Again, men of the highest position, cultivation, and refinement need regeneration and atonement. Culture does not take the place of the atonement. A man must be born again, even although he has been born in Boston. "I do not know what this method of regeneration is, but I accept the fact on the transcendent, superlative, satisfying authority of the Word of God, buttressed and reinforced in all manner of ways by overwhelming human experience of regeneration and atonement and inspiration." Jesus laid stress upon belief in his Divine mission. Unbelief is condemnation ; but Nicodemus, the timid disciple, was encouraged by Jesus. Do not, however, let us judge others. Judge yourself as severely as you want, and with a little more to boot. Don't be hard upon those who hang back, help them and encourage them to manifest all the faith they have.

In the afternoon a funeral service for Mr. Griggs, the young student who was drowned, was held in the Congregational Church, at which one of the Cornell men spoke of the life of their late comrade, and short addresses were given by Dr. Broadus, Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. Moody, and others. The church was crowded with students, who had walked in procession from Mr. Moody's house, and the service was most impressive.

In the evening the missionary meeting on the hill was addressed by Mr. Hudson Taylor, who spoke powerfully on the claims of China in connection with mission work. At the eight o'clock meeting, Mr. Sho Nemoto, a Japanese student of the University of Vermont, gave a most amusing Bible lesson, in the course of which he defined Gentiles as "Not only Japanese, Chinese, and Canadians, but everybody." The address was given by Dr. Trumbull, who left next day. He spoke of the privilege and the necessity of personal work, giving many most interesting cases from his own experience. The address was interesting and inspiring, and when it was over the congregation joined heartily in the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again."

On Friday, the subjects of the early morning talks were the General Secretaryship and the College Christian publications. At the ten o'clock meeting, after Mr. E. F. See, of Brooklyn, had spoken shortly of the joy of Christian service, Mr. J. B. Reynolds, of Yale, Mr. J. C. B. Geddes, of Edinburgh, and Mr. E. Fairbanks, of Amherst, dwelt upon the deputation work in the British and American colleges. Thereafter Dr. Broadus gave a full exposition of 1 Cor. xv., going very much on the lines of his other addresses. At the missionary meeting Mr. Wilder delivered an earnest address, and at its conclusion fifty-two students signed a paper, pledging themselves to go as foreign missionaries, if the opportunity should present itself. At the evening meeting Mr. Reginald Radcliffe read the parable of the loaves and fishes, using it as the text of a mission address. If we are to face the problem of missions, there must be an advance all along the line. If every student went to the field, it would be an advance merely of the officers. There is sin in the camp ; men are unconsecrated, and so our missions do not succeed as they ought. Mr. G. B. Studd urged the necessity of giving up our wills entirely to God's will, illustrating his remarks by reference to the mission of Moses to take the children of Israel from Egypt.

Mr. Hudson Taylor then spoke on the subject of the command, "Be ye filled with the Spirit." It was as much an act of disobedience not to be filled with the Holy Ghost as it was to steal another's watch. If we realised rightly the personality of the Holy Spirit, we would see how it was that one could not be consecrated by measure. If the Lord was not Lord of all, He was not Lord at all. Being filled with the Holy Ghost was giving our hearts to Him, being more eager to hear his voice and to do his will than anything else.

Mr. Moody had intended that Saturday should be a complete holiday, but the enthusiasm of the students was so great that at Friday's meetings they unanimously asked him to reconsider his decision, and persuaded him to promise to speak every day during the second week. On Friday night he reluctantly announced that he would spend an hour next evening on a question drawer. "You needn't come if you don't want to, but the few that do come may gather right in front of the platform." Everybody resolved to come and see Mr. Moody addressing empty benches!

On Saturday morning there was held a most interesting and useful meeting for conference regarding means of reaching freshmen in college. One of the most remarkable things about these early meetings is the skill with which they are managed. All that is most useful is said in the shortest possible time. Any speaker who shows a tendency to "enlarge" into a general address is at once pulled up with questions, and presently finds himself seated after having told his audience all they think it necessary to hear.

At the usual forenoon meeting, addresses were delivered by Mr. Hudson Taylor and Bishop Hendrix, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The former expounded a portion of John xv., speaking of the true meaning of abiding in Christ and its relation to Christian fruit-bearing, and strongly impressing upon us the idea of the mutual relationship of union and communion between Christ and the believer. Bishop Hendrix took as his text the mission of the seventy, explaining that the secret of Christ's joy (Luke x. 21) was the vision of a consecrated and aggressive Church. It was the spectacle, not of the twelve, but of the nameless seventy at work that filled Christ's heart with joy. From the ranks of consecrated laymen God calls men to be preachers of his word. Both addresses were deeply interesting, but space limits prevent us from giving a full account of them.

In the afternoon the ground in front of Marquand Hall was bright with gay dresses of ladies, and the motley display of University colours from all parts of the world. The occasion was that of the athletic sports, which Mr. Stages, the great baseball "pitcher," of Yale (the now famous "praying pitcher," as Mr. Sturgis called him), had arranged amongst the students. The men were arranged, for the most part, in college groups, and provided noise in sufficient measure, by means of college yells, degenerating, at times, into good-natured banter and chaff, or rising again into what are called "gass" upon men—jokes which must be heard to be appreciated. The games were all well contested, and the results in most cases excellent. The Yale men carried off the largest number of honours, but were closely pressed by the Mount Hermon boys. The English deputation, as individuals, were beaten all round in the contests, but in the tug-of-war against the Yale men they scored a tie, having pulled their opponents well away during the first few seconds, but losing their advantage immediately afterwards, so that the Yale men got the rope into its original position, and kept it there till time was called.

At the missionary meeting in the evening there was a large gathering, and, after addresses by several students, and by Mr. Hudson Taylor, all adjourned to Stone Hall to see Mr. Moody speak to empty benches. Mr. Moody answered questions of all kinds, brightly, wittily, and sensibly ; but there were no empty seats. His practical advice regarding preaching was very good. "Be yourself, talk in your own natural tone. Don't whine. Don't say, 'I have common sense, and I'm going to preach a practical sermon.' Let the people find that out for themselves." Finally, the bell struck nine o'clock as he was in the middle of a sentence, and, true to his promise, he stopped at once, ending one of the most pleasant meetings of the course.

So has the first week of the Summer School ended. It has been a week full of the richest spiritual good, and its influence must have made itself deeply felt in the lives and thoughts of those who have had the privilege of enjoying it. In another article we hope to give some account of the work during the week in progress at the time of writing.

THE PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.

Last week witnessed the centenary of an institution, which, though its methods have been unobtrusive, and the results of its beneficent operations have not been prominently before the public, has rendered long and valuable service in the cause of social reform. The Philanthropic Society, which has for its object "the promotion of industry and the reform of the criminal poor," had its origin in the movement commenced by John Howard, and from the very smallest beginnings it has grown into the flourishing institution known as Redhill, where, during the last forty years, nearly four thousand boys have been sheltered and trained to earn an honest livelihood. Ninety-one per cent. of those passing through the institution are also stated to justify the advantages which they receive, and ninety-five per cent. of those sent out to the colonies do well. These numbers represent so many children saved from drifting into the unemployed, the mendicant, or the criminal ranks, and it is to the work of such agencies as Redhill that the steady annual decrease in the number of juvenile criminals is to a large extent due. It is hoped, therefore, that the centenary of this Society will be the means of making its undoubted claims to support more widely known, and will be marked by a liberal response to the appeal for funds, of which, owing to agricultural depression and other causes, it is now in urgent need.

HASTINGS.—A good work is being done here by Mr. Stephen Hermitage, who has engaged the Public Hall and the Central Hall for services, surported entirely by voluntary donations. The Public Hall holds nearly nine hundred, and is packed at every service ; men and women are deciding for Christ here, as well as in the open air. The influence is being felt all over Hastings. I am, by the call of God, labouring with them for a time, and am holding services also among the fishermen. Help in the way of tracts, or otherwise, will be gratefully acknowledged.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"
Who may be personally or relatively INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
INTERESTING CASE of a YOUNG LADY at BIRMINGHAM.

In December last I received a letter from Miss Pattle relative to a young lady, Miss E. C., of Moseley Hall. She had been ill for some time. "A severe cold, caught when from home, settled on her chest, then bronchitis and inflammation." There was great wheezing, and all the symptoms were a source of great anxiety.

In a very few days she began to improve, and in less than a fortnight the medical report at home was: "Her chest has wonderfully improved." The next letter says:—"The doctor now allows her to leave her room. We are very grateful for the improvement, and are truly glad we have had your medicine."

On the 24th of April Miss P. writes: "We rejoice to tell you Miss Edith has our family doctor's permission to go to school. He has examined her lungs, and now finds nothing wrong. Truly her improvement has been wonderful. May God make you a blessing to many others."

(Fourteen letters from Coombe Lodge were written relative to this case).

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

REV. H. WARD BEECHER:—"If cleanliness is next to Godliness, Soap must be considered as a means of grace, and a clergyman who recommends moral things should be willing to recommend Soap. I am told that my commendation of Pears' Soap has opened for it a large sale in the United States. I am willing to stand by every word in favour of it that I ever uttered. A man must be fastidious indeed who is not satisfied with it." (Signed) HENRY WARD BEECHER.

SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., late President of the Royal College of Surgeons, England, writes, in the "Journal of Cutaneous Medicine":—"The use of a good Soap is certainly calculated to preserve the skin in health, to maintain its complexion and tone, and prevent its falling into wrinkles . . . . . PEARS is a name engraven on the memory of the oldest inhabitant; and Pears' Transparent Soap is an article of the nicest and most careful manufacture, and one of the most refreshing and agreeable of balms for the skin."

ARE YOU A CHRISTIAN?

BY REV. GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D.D.

"BROTHER, cannot you come and help us in the inquiry-room? We have more inquirers to-night than we have workers."

This request was made by me of a middle-aged gentleman who was seated with a lady, whom I took to be his wife, in the body of the church where the principal service had been held. There were always a good many Christians who remained to the after-services, not to work, but to hear what more might be said, especially the final words addressed to inquirers, in which I endeavoured to make the way of life very plain. I took this man to be one of those Christians who were ever learning, and never fully coming to a knowledge of the truth, yet fearful that something might be said or done that he did not want to miss.

To my request, he replied: "Oh, you must excuse me! I can't do that."

"Why, you are a Christian; are you not?"

"Well, I hope I am; but I could not undertake to talk to anyone about his soul. I would not know what to say."

"Just tell them how they may be saved. Point them to Christ, and explain the way of salvation to them."

"But that would be my trouble. I don't think I could do that."

"Why, my friend, you can at least tell them how you were saved; how you know that you are a Christian. There is no better way to deal with an inquirer than to tell them just how you have come to know that you are a Christian. You can't do that without opening up the way of salvation."

"But, Mr. Pentecost, that is just my trouble. I am not sure that I am a Christian. I do not know certainly that I am saved."

"I am sorry to hear you say that, my brother. Do you not profess to be a child of God?"

"O, yes, I am a professing Christian; but I am not sure that I am a real one. I would give a good deal to be sure on that point. I have been a member of the Church for twenty-five years, but I do not think I have ever had what you call assurance. I have tried to live as nearly right as I know how; and though I have made many failures, still upon the whole I have tried to do about right. Yet I am not sure that I am a Christian."

This was the old story, heard from so many of God's professing children. It is a sad and dreadful thing that so many earnest souls who have confessed Christ and identified themselves with the people of God, go through life anxious as to their real standing with God; not "knowing for sure" whether they are Christians or not. I was interested in the man, and though much troubled for the lack of workers, I decided to spend a few minutes with him, and endeavour to help him to a better apprehension of his salvation in Christ.

The lady at his side, whom I supposed to be his wife, had been a very deeply interested listener to this brief conversation, but had not spoken to me, nor had I to her. I turned now toward her, still addressing the man, and said:

"Is this lady your wife?"

"Yes, sir, this is Mrs. L. Allow me to introduce her. Mrs. L., Mr. Pentecost."

I acknowledged the introduction with the ordinary salutation; and said further to Mr. L., whose name I had just then learned:

"Mr. L., did you say that this lady was your wife?"

"Certainly, sir," he replied, with a rising inflexion in his voice as if he were surprised at my question after what had just passed.

"But, sir, are you sure she is your wife?"

"Certainly, sir; why do you ask such a question?"

"But are you sure she is your wife? Have you no doubt on that point?"

"Of course I have no doubt on that point; but I do not understand you, Mr. Pentecost. Please explain."

"Well," I replied, in a somewhat careless tone of voice, "you have just told me that you have been a professing Christian for twenty-five years, and that you have in all those years tried to live a Christian life, but that you are not sure whether you are a Christian or not, though you have publicly taken upon you the professions and obligations of a Christian life. I did not know but that you might be in the same state of doubt as to whether you were really the husband of this excellent lady, with whom you have no doubt been living for a good many years in this sacred relationship."

The man seemed a little dumbfounded, and a little disposed to be angry with me. He replied:

"I certainly do not understand the drift of your remarks. Will you be kind enough to explain yourself, Mr. Pentecost?"

"I assure you, sir, I mean no offence, either to you or your lady; though I fancy if you should express the same doubt as to your relationship to her that you do concerning your relation to Jesus Christ, whom you profess to have taken as a Saviour, you would feel somewhat hurt."

"I do not understand you. There is no room for any question as to what my relation to my wife is."

"You are sure then that you are this lady's husband, and that she is your wife?"

"Of course I am. I know that I am her husband, and that she is my wife. There is no room for doubt in the matter."

"Would you mind telling me how you come to be so positive about it?"

"Why, it is very simple, but I do not see the relevancy of this to the subject of our conversation concerning my being a Christian. Twenty-five years or more ago, I met my wife and fell in love with her. After a while I told her that I loved her, and asked her to become my wife. She was good enough to accept me, and in course of time I married her." While telling me this little matter-of-fact story, he looked toward his wife, and his face was full of affection, and seemed to light up with pleasing memories, and then he added, as he threw his arm lightly across her shoulder, in a kind of half embrace: "I can assure you, sir, that I have never had any occasion to regret the ceremony that gave her to me, and I trust that she has not, eh, wife? No, sir; there is no doubt about her being my wife."

"But pardon me, Mr. L., how do you know she is your wife?"

"Why, because we are married to each other, and have for twenty-five years lived together, and loved each other as man and wife."

"What do you mean by being married to each other? and how were you married? In other words, how was the relation which now exists between you established?"

"That was very simply done. We went to the minister, and told him that we desired to become man and wife, and he asked me if I loved her, and would take her to be my wife 'for better or worse,' and so forth. You know the way it is done. Then he asked her the same question. We both answered 'Yes'; and he pronounced us man and wife."

"And you have no doubts on the subject? Have never said to yourself since: 'I wish I was sure she was my wife; I love her and desire to be her husband, but still I am not just absolutely sure of it, though I have always tried to treat her as a good husband should,' and so forth."

"Certainly not."

"Now, my friend, do you not see that in this matter you have the key to assurance as to your relation to Christ? Christ loved you, and gave Himself for you, though you were in no wise worthy of his love. He sought you by his Word and Spirit. He asked you to become his in a living relationship, which He likens to that which exists between man and wife (Eph. v. 25, 26, 30, 33),[*] and you considered his proposition of love and salvation, and publicly accepted him as your Saviour and Lord. Now, does not God's Word assure you that, so doing, you are saved?" I read to him Rom. x. 9;[†] John v. 24;[‡] vi. 47;[§] and several other passages of like import, and said to him further:

"If God was sincere in giving his Son to die for you, and Jesus was sincere in saying that whosoever cometh unto Him would in no wise be cast out, and you were sincere in accepting him as your Saviour; then you have the word and oath of God (Heb. vi. 17, 18, 19)[||] that you are accepted of Him and saved by Him. Whether you believe the word of God to be true, and have sincerely and honestly accepted Jesus as Saviour and Lord, is a question which you only can answer. I leave you to think it over. Good-night, sir; good-night, madam."

I left them, and went about my work among other inquirers.

The next evening I saw the same couple sitting about in the same place. Mr. L. called me to him after the sermon, and I was surprised to find him with an eager, happy, almost triumphant, look upon his face, and when he spoke to me it was with a voice full of emotion.

"Mr. Pentecost, I want to thank you for your talk with me last night. It is all plain to me now. I cannot tell you what gladness and peace have come into my heart. I scarcely slept last night for joy. My wife and I went home, and we took the Bible and looked up all the Scriptures you pointed out to us, and found that it was just as you had told us. I do not see why I have never seen this before. It must be true. It is true. I have been very sinful all these years to doubt his word. My difficulty and great mistake have been that I have been trying to find evidences in myself instead of looking simply to the love of God in Christ, to his finished work, and to his sure word. I think I can never doubt any more."

He hesitated a moment, and then said:

"If there is anyone whom you think I can help, I am more than willing to try. I can at least tell them that I know I am a Christian."

His wife testified to the same gladness, and similarly offered to enter into the work of the Lord.

Here were two excellent people who had for a quarter of a century been serving, or trying to serve, the Lord, amid much doubt and fear, who might have been leading joyous, happy, useful, and fruitful lives, had they been more simple-minded and taken God at his word. I fear there are great multitudes in the household of God who, from a like mistake, are in doubt as to whether they are Christians. Would to God they might deal with Him more simply, believe and act upon his word, and not seek to find in themselves witnesses and testimonies which can never give them assurance, even though the inward experience is of the Spirit. Let us remember that it is the finished work of Jesus only that constitutes the ground of our acceptance with God, and that it is the written word, energised by the Spirit, that gives us the warrant or assurance of salvation.

THE TESTIMONY CONCERNING CHRIST.

A BIBLE READING

By Rev. Dr. GORDON, Boston.

How do we know of the great facts pertaining to Christ's ministry? It is a very simple question; yet I question whether all of us have really gone back to inquire into the grounds on which our knowledge of those facts rests. I propose to attempt to answer the question. I want to remind you, first of all, of a fact that held true both under the Law and the Gospel, namely, that God always required two or three witnesses to verify any transaction. Under the law of Moses, you remember, one could not be put to death except on the testimony of two or three witnesses, and this principle is repeated again and again in Scripture. We find that when Jesus Christ comes into the world and begins to speak, He gives it out. The apostles also recognised it.

THE DIVINE SONSHIP.

What, now, is the first doctrine that we reach in reference to Jesus Christ? It is that He is the Son of God. How do we know this? Because the Scriptures declare it; because we believe that the Holy Ghost, through inspired men, bore witness to the fact. True, but someone, anxious to push the matter back to the extremest point, says: "How, in the beginning, do we know it?" That is a question that I propose now to answer. Look at the account of his baptism, in Matt. iii. 16, 17. We have here that which introduces Jesus Christ to his ministry, and that upon which we have need to dwell just for a moment. We read: "Lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son." Now, mark, Jesus does not ask us to receive the statement that He is the Son of God on his own testimony. He does not ask us to receive it on the testimony of any man. Who, then, are the two witnesses necessary to establish this fact? They are two Divine witnesses, because human witness cannot now be taken. First, we have God speaking out of heaven, and saying, "This is my beloved Son." That is one witness. Then the Holy Ghost descends, and rests upon Christ, and He is the second witness. So we have two persons of the Godhead bearing witness to the third, that we may have full confirmation of this fact, on which all rests, and with which everything else has to do, that Jesus is verily the Son of God. Do you not see that it would be impossible for any human witness to bear testimony? He "was in the beginning with God." No man was there, no created being was there in the beginning. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." Who saw Him make all things? Moreover, He "upholds all things by the word of his power"; He is the appointed "heir of all things." By Him God "made the worlds." Who saw Him in the work of creation? No one, except God Himself. And so we have God's testimony of the Sonship of Christ.

Now, I want you to observe a link of testimony in our knowledge and apprehension. Let us ask Simon Peter how he knows that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. He makes his confession, "Thou art the Son of God"; and Jesus answers: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." There Jesus says distinctly that Peter could not have known it except on the testimony of God Himself. The Apostle Paul, too, speaks on this wise, "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me."

I want you, however, just now to observe this fact: No sooner had God said, "This is my beloved Son," than the battle, the great contest, began. In the beginning, when God said to Adam, "If thou eatest thou shalt die," Satan immediately came in to give God the lie. Now the second Adam has come, and God has spoken out of the heavens. How long had the heavens been silent! And only three times is that voice heard—once at Christ's baptism, once at the transfiguration, and once when Christ was entering upon his passion. In every instance God speaks about his Son. After the words, "This is my beloved Son" at the baptism, Jesus is at once led up to be tempted of the devil. Have you ever noticed on what the temptation turned? It was, "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down"; and "If Thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." Satan said in effect: "I have heard what God has said, and don't believe it, and I intend to give the lie to it." And he started a question which was agitated perpetually up to the time when Jesus yielded up his spirit on the cross. Just go through your Bibles, and see how this question was raised. When He wrought miracles, they said, "If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." And when He came to hang upon the cross, they still scoffed and mocked, and the chief priests said: "If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross; let Him come down from the cross, and we will believe Him." That was all along the questioning of the sceptic, and of people of the cultivated sort, and at last even the criminal class took it up, and one of the crucified thieves echoed it, and said, "If Thou be the Christ, save Thyself and us." And so that "if," in which Christ's Sonship and Divinity was brought into question, followed Him, dogging his steps every inch from his baptism to the time when He yielded up his spirit on the cross, in order that, if possible, it might steal away his glory.

CHRIST AND SALVATION.

Now this is decidedly a question that we have to do with; for we are saved on the ground that we believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, or that He is the Christ, which means the same thing; for when the Holy Ghost came upon Him, He was "anointed," and that is what "Christ" signifies. In 1 John v. 1, we read, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." There is, therefore, the test of discipleship. Do you believe on the Son of God—that Jesus is the Son of God? You ask, "How may I know that He is the Son of God?" He does not receive the witness of men, and it does not avail. He does not bear witness of Himself, because that would not do. We only know on the testimony of the two witnesses—God the Father and God the Holy Ghost. On the witness of two, the fact is fully and legally established.

John goes on to say of Jesus in his Epistle, "This is He that came by water and blood. It is the Spirit that beareth witness. There are three that bear witness, the Spirit, the water, and the blood." First, as we have seen, there was the testimony of God the Father, and of the Holy Ghost. Then on earth we have first the blood bearing witness, the blood that was spilled, and by which sin is put away. The earth received it, and it is bearing testimony. He was not crucified in heaven, He was not crucified in hell; but He was crucified on earth, that the earth might drink up his blood, that every tree might be a memorial of his passion, and that every mountain might remind us of Calvary, so that trees and mountains, and the earth itself might plead with us to be reconciled to the Father. So the blood is here bearing testimony to Him. As to the water, I think it is held by general consent on the part of those who have looked most deeply into these things, that the Word is meant thereby. Christ said, "Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." And we also read of "the washing of water by the word." If that be the meaning, it is evident that John took this fact from the water that came from Jesus's side, and made a symbol out of it. We do not hold that anyone is washed from his sins in the literal blood, but rather the blood means the atonement of Jesus Christ, and therefore it is the symbol of the Cross, while the water is the symbol of the Word.

Then, again, the Spirit bears witness; and the Spirit is here, not there. How the Church needs to be taught that simplest of all facts! I hear people pray the Father to send down the Holy Ghost. Why should He? It is the same as if, when Jesus was here exercising his ministry, his disciples should pray: "O Father, send soon Him whom Thou hast promised!" What is the fact? When He was here Jesus said: "If I go away, I will send the Comforter unto you." He was here, and the Spirit was there. When Jesus went there, the Spirit came forth. If you want to speak to Jesus Christ, He is in Heaven, and you may address Him there; if you wish to address the Holy Spirit, then He is here, and the Church is his abode. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God." Just as Jesus was here during the years of his earthly ministry, so the Spirit is here now, and Jesus there. By and by Jesus will come here again, and the dispensational ministry of the Spirit will terminate. We have then, three great witnesses to the Sonship of Christ.

THE CONFESSION OF CHRIST.

When dealing with a sinner, you are to lead him to Christ, and a great thing is to make him confess Jesus as the Son of God. How may sinners know that Jesus is the Son of God, and, afterwards, that they are the sons of God? Here is my passage—1 John v. 9: "If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater." Have you not been puzzled by what follows?—"This is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son." What is the witness? The Revised Version puts it properly: "The witness of God is this, that He hath borne witness concerning his Son." When? At the banks of the Jordan: "This is my beloved Son." Read on a little: "He that believeth on the Son hath the witness in himself." How much about the inward witness have we heard based upon that text? We have been told that you cannot be sure you are saved until you have the witness in yourself. Now we do not receive the witness of men in regard to this fact that Jesus is the Son of God, nor do we in regard to the other fact that we are sons of God if we believe on Jesus Christ. You are ruled out of court, and we do not want your witness that you are a child of God if you believe in Jesus Christ. We are the poorest of all judges with regard to anything that goes on in our own hearts.

Again and again, in dealing with penitents I have noticed how little they knew about themselves. I would not take the testimony of any man's consciousness as to whether he is saved, and I thank God that He does not ask us to. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in Him"—that is, in God Himself, and not in man (see Revised Version). Do not, then, any longer question your own heart for witness; we have something better—we have God's word. He says: "This is my beloved Son"; and the Son says: "He that receiveth Me hath power himself to become a son of God." When one believes on Jesus Christ, and wants to feel that he is a son of God, he has God's own testimony to rely on: "He that believeth hath the witness of God Himself."

You cannot believe, though He has spokon? Well, then, "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar" (ver. 10). That is what Satan has done from the beginning. If any one of you saith that Jesus Christ is not the Son of God, you do not contradict me, or Paul, or Peter, or James, or John, nor do you go in the face of the creeds of the Church and the testimony of Holy Scripture, but you give the lie to God. God says, "This is my Son," and you say, "He is not." You have made Him a liar! "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." We have God's testimony, and that alone on which to rest; and, in order that the law might be fulfilled, and every word be confirmed, we have two persons of the Trinity, the Father and the Spirit, asserting and attesting the Sonship of the third, namely, Jesus Christ.

(To be concluded.)

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

AN APPARENT DISCREPANCY.

Will you please to explain in your columns the apparent discrepancy between Matt. xxviii. 9, and John xx. 17? A satisfactory Scriptural solution will be very acceptable to many who cannot now reconcile the two Scriptures. S.

[There is no absolute explanation of the apparent discrepancy. The Speaker's Commentary says: "Independent accounts of events occurring in a time of exceeding excitement, and related by truthful witnesses, but from different points of view, naturally present difficulties which cannot be cleared up without a thorough knowledge of all particulars...Events might have occurred in such order and form as, if known, would satisfactorily explain all divergencies." It is far better to admit a difficulty than to suggest explanations which often raise more questions than they seek to solve. One thing is clear—that the four Evangelists wrote their narratives from different points of view, and with different purposes; they therefore note different events, and emphasise different features of the same events.]

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

In Rom. iv. 6, we read (R.V.), "God reckoneth righteousness apart from works," and in ver. 11 "That righteousness might be reckoned unto them also."

Two charges are brought against mankind: 1st, all sinned; 2nd, and fall short of the glory of God That we might be saved from the righteous award which must otherwise result to us, both these conditions must be met. This was an impossibility on our part. Therefore God himself, that his loving mercies might flow forth, has provided all that is required.

That both of these conditions would be provided for was shown by typical ordinances. The provision for the second through the sweet savour offerings; and the provision for the first through the offerings relating to sin. The commemorative ordinance of the Lord's Supper has also a two-fold character. There is first the bread, and second the wine. The former sets forth the body given for you—the Word made flesh—what Christ became, and what He therein did. The latter, the blood shed for you—that He suffered for our sins—that his soul was made an offering for sin—that He poured out his soul unto death.

In the Epistles, the provision for our twofold condition—the sin and the coming short of glorifying God—is fully stated. As to the first, we are justified—that is, cleared, absolved from all charge as sinners and enemies, in the efficacy of the blood of Christ, seeing that He died for us; and as to the second, we obtain justification of life, for through the obedience of the one (not through our faith, and not through God's justification, but through Christ's obedience) shall the many be made righteous.

Let us dwell on this. The believer, when in his unconverted state, had led a life of independence of his Creator, of self-will, and not of faith in God. This has showed itself in many an act of disobedience; and a disobedient man is unrighteous. On the other hand, the Lord Jesus led a life of faith. Is this sufficiently seen in modern days? But the Psalms foretold it; the Gospels prove it; and the taunt, "he trusted in God," though the insinuation is that it was hypocritical, yet shows the professed aspect of his course. His faith flowed in the channel of perfect love; and it resulted in a life of unbroken obedience. His whole course, from the beginning of his first coming until his death, was one complete faultless act of obedience; and obedience is righteousness in conduct. He that doeth righteousness is righteous.

If, therefore, it is asked "What is imputed righteousness?" the Scripture shows that Christ has in our nature in all things glorified the Father; and when we believe in Him, the righteousness which resulted from his obedience is reckoned to us. Not indeed in the sense that we have rendered it, for this would be to rob Christ of his glory. No, we are blessed for his sake. His offering of Himself has been accepted, and we are justified by God on account of it.

A word of caution is, I think, important in this matter, for any truth, if isolated, may prove a mere dogma. Whilst holding the truth of righteousness imputed, let us also keep in view that not only is righteousness provided through the obedience of Christ and imputed to those who believe, but righteousness is imparted inwardly, and that it is matured by a practical life of following the Lord. The new life which through the Holy Spirit is communicated to us is the life of the Second Man the Lord from heaven; and this life has inherently the character of righteousness. In the Gospels we see true righteousness in the life of Him who could say, "I do always the things that are pleasing to my Father," and of whom it is written, "He went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." When we thus live, Christ is seen again in some measure through the life of his followers. May it indeed be so! Then "to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Wimbledon. J. van Sommer.

In Paul's Epistle to the Romans (iv. 24) we have Scripture bearing directly on imputed righteousness. The late Dr. Edward Ash, of Bristol, in his "Notes on the New Testament," referring to the above-named Scripture, says:—

> Here, then, we find the Apostle applying to the case of believers in Christ the doctrine of an imputed (as distinguished from either an inherent or an acquired) righteousness, which the Scripture had before applied to that of Abraham. The meaning of this doctrine is, as we have already seen, that God is pleased of his mere favour to account men's faith in the place of perfect obedience; in other words, to regard and treat the believer, though a transgressor, as if he were guiltless. Instead, however, of the Apostle's doctrine and language being simply kept to, another mode of expression, involving a materially different view of the subject, has obtained very wide currency in the Church; one which represents believers as justified by reason of Christ's righteousness being imputed to them; in other words, by his perfect obedience to the Father's will being counted as theirs. Such is not either the language or the doctrine of Scripture; and though it may, at first sight, seem (as it is unquestionably intended) to honour Christ, it will be found, on a closer examination, to have in reality a contrary effect, since it necessarily tends to keep out of view, in the matter of justification, that great and fundamental doctrine of the Gospel, Christ's atonement for sin. This atonement the Apostle uniformly represents as the sole ground of man's justification; in other words, he describes believers in Christ as being justified, or accounted righteous, because their sins are blotted out in virtue of the Atonement which He made for them (see e.g., the next verse, chap. iii. 24, v. 9). It is, then, in the forgiveness of sins for Christ's sake, and not in the imputation of his obedience, that the believer's righteousness or justification consists.

Does not 2 Cor. v. 21 teach us the same precious truth—that we are justified (or made righteous) by his blood?

In the early part of Rom. iv. we learn that where sin is not imputed, righteousness is imputed; and that by faith in Christ. Lastly, in 1 Cor. xv. 1—4, we have the Gospel that the Apostle Paul preached, and we notice that he commences with the death of Christ, then his burial, and, lastly, his resurrection. He says nothing about our being made righteous through the "active" obedience of Christ to his Father's will on earth being imputed to us. Let us cleave closely to that which is written in the oracles of truth, "who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."

Boston, July 16. J.

Dear Sir,—The phrase, "the imputed righteousness of Christ" is nowhere to be found in Scripture; but we may wisely consider what is involved in the idea the phrase covers.

It is said by those who use the phrase that Christ wrought out in this world, before He died for our sins, a righteousness of infinite value, and that God reckons of this righteousness to those who believe, and that such are robed in this righteousness, and so stand accepted before God. Now, Scripture teaches that "Christ died for our sins" (1 Cor. xv. 3), and that in Him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins (Eph. i. 7); but Scripture also teaches that we have "died with Christ" (Col. ii. 20); so that, not only are we forgiven by virtue of Christ's blood shed for us: but we, in the flesh, are condemned on the cross, and have died with Christ. Here is the solemn judgment of ourselves before God, and we are privileged to say, as of ourselves, "I am crucified with Christ" (Gal. ii. 20).

God in his righteousness has dealt with us, root and branch, in the person of Christ; and now, Christ having risen, we are risen with (Col. iii. 1), and complete in Him (ii. 10), in whom also we are accepted (Eph. i. 6).

If Christ's righteousness, as it is asserted, which He wrought out on earth, be put to our credit, how is it put to us? As dead with Christ? That would be impossible; for, according to the righteousness of God, Christ died for our sins, for which we merited judgment; all idea of reckoned merit to us, as dead with Christ, is out of the question. As risen with Christ? But we are complete in Him, and, therefore, what Christ did in his holy life on earth cannot be said to be put to our credit, for we are now in Him.

God pardons us, and He also justifies us; but, beyond this, we are so graciously set by God before Himself in Christ, that we are graced in, or taken into favour, in the Beloved One. This, we affirm, the Scripture teaches, and most glorious and wonderful is the grace. What Christ is as a man we are accepted in; a very different thing from what Christ did being placed to our credit. Is it ever said in Scripture that righteousness is placed to our credit? We are reckoned to be righteous by God when we believe on Him. He does not place anything to our credit, but justifies us by virtue of Christ's death for us; and accepts us, being justified in Christ, who died and rose again for us—yea, who is in heaven at his right hand.

The idea of our being credited with what we cannot produce seems to carry with it the notion that after all we are not, by nature, so bad as God declares; that we did not die with Christ, and that there is something in us that will bear being credited with Christ's righteousness? A man condemned to death would not be credited with the good works of another; he could be in righteousness freed from his judgment only by another dying in his stead. Christ has done this for us, and now God the Father accepts us in the Beloved One, who is made unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption (1 Cor. i. 30).

Yours faithfully, W.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for August 10 (Matt. xi. 28):—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

WORTHY OF IMITATION.—On Wednesday last week, by invitation of the first class of boys, with their teacher, in the Congregational Sunday-school, Hemel Hempstead, 100 of the children of Miss Macpherson's Sunday-school, Bethnal-green, spent a day in the country. Accompanied by some of the workers from the "House of Industry," the children were taken to Chipperfield Common, an exceedingly pleasant place, some five miles from Hemel Hempstead. Though the day was wet, they greatly enjoyed themselves. Dinner and tea were partaken of in the sechoolroom of the Baptist Chapel.

MR. WM. E. BLACKSTONE, of Oak Park, Illinois, U.S.. has made a donation of three thousand dollars (about Rs. 9000) for a Ladies' Mission House to be erected at Muttra, India. His wish is that the rules for a Deaconesses' Home, including the training of workers in the work, be carried out as far as practicable. The hundreds of widows residing at Muttra and Brindabun, and the thousands of female pilgrims that visit these shrines every year, beside the regular city work, make this an admirable place for woman's work for women. As soon as the required buildings can be erected, the work will commence. Mr. Blackstone hopes to visit India during the coming winter.—Indian Witness.

Y.W.C.A. CONVALESCENT HOLIDAY DEPARTMENT.—Should any friends be intending to assist us with contributions this summer, we would earnestly ask them to do so without delay. Over 400 of the poorest and most deserving of our City work-girls have already been assisted in obtaining several weeks' rest and fresh air in our Holiday and Cottage Homes. Two hundred of them joined the Holiday Club, and saved all they could towards their change. We have many more applications from other worn-out workers, but as our fund is fast ebbing away, we must disappoint these cases, unless further help reaches us soon. The hon. secretary is Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow-gardens, London, W.

JESUITISM IN BOSTON.—There has been great excitement in Boston, Mass., owing to the interference of Jesuits in the educational affairs of the city. It seems that an attempt was recently made to remove a teacher, and to displace an elementary history, because the former had boldly stood by and defended the statement of the book with regard to the shameful sale of indulgences in Luther's time. At a large public meeting, it was resolved that no more concessions should be made by Americans to enemies of the Republic: meantime the loyal co-operation of all loyal Catholics was invited. A permanent committee was appointed to see that the public schools are in future protected from all assaults of the Romish hierarchy. An esteemed correspondent writes to us:—"The meeting seems to mark an era in the question of Jesuitism in America; the spirit of the meeting is that of the people at large when aroused on the question."

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, August 12.

The Sorrows of the Cross.—Psalm xxii. 1—21 ; Matt. xxvii. 46—54.

"The references in the New Testament to this Psalm" (Ps. xxii.) says Dr. Perowne, "are many. The first words of it were uttered by Jesus on the cross (Matt. xxvii. 46). The scorn of the passers by, and the shaking of the head, in verse 7, have their counterpart in the story of the crucifixion (Matt. xxvii. 39). The words of verse 8 are found in Matt. xxvii. 43 ; the intense thirst, 'My tongue cleaveth to my jaws,' of verse 15, in John xix. 28 ; the parting of the garments, &c., verse 18, in John xix. 23 ; the piercing (if that is a correct rendering) of the hands and feet in verse 16, in the nailing to the cross." In Psalm xxii. we have the cross, in Psalm xxiii. the crook, and in Psalm xxiv. the crown. It is with the cross and its sorrows that we have now to do. Note here—

(1) The Bitter Cry (Ps. xxii. 1 ; Matt. xxvii. 54).—This cry came at the ninth hour. We have in it: (a) The language of Scripture.—Jesus honoured the Word of God by quoting it at the beginning (Matt. iv. 4), and at the end of his ministry. (b) A revelation of God's hatred of sin.—Jesus was the sinner's substitute, and, as such, "bare our sins" (1 Peter ii. 24). Surely it was for this reason He was forsaken by the Father. (c) An expression of utter desolation.—The most utter desolation possible is that which comes of the withdrawal of the presence of God. It was this that caused the desolation of the Temple (comp. "My house," Matt. xxi. 13, and "Your house—desolate," Matt. xxiii. 38), and that will cause the desolation of lost souls (Luke xiii. 27). (d) A cry of confidence in God.—It is still, "My God." Nothing could separate the Blessed One from the Father's love, or destroy his sense of it. (e) A yearning for the favour of God.—The Blessed One could not be satisfied without the light of the Father's face. The longing of the Redeemer should be realised in a measure by the redeemed (2 Tim. ii. 15).

(2) The Heartless People.—Jesus trod the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with Him (Is. lxiii. 3). Many of the people appear to have been most heartless and indifferent respecting his suffering. This is brought out in our lesson (vv. 47—49). Here we see the Divine sufferer: (a) Misunderstood.—"Calleth for Elias." They sadly erred who thought He looked to a human arm for aid. See in Jer. xvii. 5—7 the contrast between trusting in man and trusting in the Lord. (b) Taunted.—"Let be." A bad motive probably inspired the one who filled the sponge with vinegar (comp. Ps. lxix. 21). Such a drink had already been refused (ver. 34). "The rest" (ver. 49) earned the distinction of having uttered the last taunt that preceded the death of the great Sufferer.

(3) The Loud Voice (ver. 5).—Here was the utterance of a breaking heart. It is believed that the physical cause of our Lord's death was rupture of the heart (comp. Ps. lxix. 20 ; John xix. 34).

(4) The Rent Veil (ver. 51).—This mystic symbol thus became a representation and a memorial of the Saviour's suffering (Heb. x. 20).

(5) The Opened Graves (vv. 52, 53).—By death Jesus triumphed over death, and here are the living witnesses of the reality of his victory. Note that the appearance of these saints was not till after the resurrection of Jesus (comp. 1 Cor. xv. 20).

(6) The Witness of the Centurion (ver. 54).—The watchers were the centurion and his men (comp. vv. 27, 36). These were not likely to share the prejudices of the Scribes and Pharisees, and, therefore, they were more open to conviction. (comp. the confession of Nathanael, John i. 49 ; and of Peter, Matt. xvi. 16).

Y.M.C.A. OUTING.—The members of the Whittington-avenue branch, Leadenhall-street, to the number of 150, met a few days ago at Bromley Hill, Kent, by kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Causton. The occasion was made specially interesting by the presence of Mr. R. C. Morse, secretary of the International Committee of the American Y.M.C.A., who spoke very encouragingly of the work in the United States. An earnest and appropriate address was also delivered by Mr. Theodore Howard.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

Lev. xvi. 1—16 ; Golden Text, Heb. ix. 22.

New Testament Exposition.—Heb. ix. and x.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, after the death of the two sons of Aaron.—See chap. x. 1—3, where God punished the sin of presumption with sudden death. We act with presumption when forgetting what is due to others—to their age, character, or rank—we act accordingly. To presume is to "take liberties" with anyone. This is always offensive ; but when we presume with God, we commit deadly sin. Nadab and Abihu seemed to think themselves, as Aaron's sons, specially privileged. Perhaps, too, they thought that God would be very lenient : He had been so gracious of late. Forgetting their sinfulness and his holiness, they go before Him offering "strange fire." By the example of their awful death, we are taught to pray: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." But this is not all. In the five chapters that follow (x. to xv.) God gave Moses a full account of things clean and unclean, and of the offerings, &c., for the cleansing of the unclean, all to deepen their idea of sin. The Day of Atonement comes as a climax to all this, showing, on the one hand, God's awful holiness, and, on the other, the one and only way by which any man can come to God in peace. Every detail of this lesson reveals the pure holiness of God's presence, and the difficulties in the way of a sinner's approach to Him. No ordinary Israelite could draw near, nor even a consecrated priest; none but the high priest, and he only on this day, and in the manner here appointed. See here God's holiness, the awful reality of sin in his sight, and both the need and the power of Christ's atonement.

The Day of Atonement, though called "a Sabbath of rest," was different from all other Jewish Sabbaths, or sacred days. They were for repose—satisfaction: this was the annual fast, the only day of humiliation—a day when "they should afflict their souls." As the idea of atonement, i.e., of the putting away of sin by sacrifice, was grandly prominent in all the ordinances peculiar to this day, so "the sense of sin was to be deepened to its utmost intensity in the national mind, and exhibited in appropriate forms of penitential grief." On God's side it was a day of atonement, of gracious remission and acceptance : on his people's side there was remembrance of sin, confession, and godly sorrow. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive."

God's pardon inspires us to pardon others. "The Day of Atonement is the time when universal reconciliation takes place—children ask forgiveness of parents ; those who have wronged one another implore pardon ; all differences are healed, and everybody is on good terms with his or her fellow.

It must have been a day of deep peace, and of sober, energising gladness, as well as of sorrow for remembered sin ; for atonement was then made "for sin in all its bearings—for the high priest and his house, for the people in all their families, for the Tabernacle and all its utensils."

Atonement for the High Priest and his House.—The solemn ceremonies began with atonement for the high priest and the entire sacerdotal family. Before he can offer for the people, he must be cleansed himself. In Aaron, the purified high priest, we have a type of Christ, the "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners," "who needed not to offer up sacrifices, first for his own sins," &c. (Heb. vii. 25, 26). Aaron (1) washed himself, and dressed himself in pure white linen—both the washing and the white linen being symbolical of pure heart and character. He laid aside his rich and splendid robes. They were contrary to that humility of contrition which should mark the whole occasion. Hence pure linen only. (2) Next, he must offer for his own sins, and that of his house, a bullock for a sin offering. With the blood of this bullock he passes within the veil, taking also a censer full of burning coals from off the golden altar (which again had been kindled by fire from the brazen altar). Casting incense upon the coals in the censer, he entered the holiest place amid the cloud of odours—the emblem of acceptable prayer—which rose around him. The teaching seems to be that in spite of all he had done to purify himself ; in spite, too, of the blood of atonement in his hand, he must still enter the holy presence of God as a suppliant, as one who had no right of admittance. The blood is sprinkled seven times upon the mercy-seat, and seven times before it (ver. 14), "the seven being the number of the oath or the covenant ; and the double act of atonement, first, apparently, having respect to the persons interested, and then to the apartments and furniture of the sanctuary, as defiled by their uncleanness." (3) He offered "a ram for a burnt offering," in token of entire surrender to God—that he gave himself up to do the will of God as high priest. This burnt offering seems to have been offered after the ceremony of the scape goat.

Atonement for the People.—The two goats. Though there were two goats, the offering was one. "Two kids of the goats for a sin offering" (v. 5). There were two, because each was needed to show its own separate aspect of the same sacrifice. The goats were presented before the Lord ; lots were cast ; and the one on whom the Lord's lot fell was slain as a sin offering for the people. With its blood the high priest entered once more within the veil, and performed again exactly the same ceremonies as before. The object only is changed. Then he made atonement for himself ; now for the people. As he passes again from the holiest into the holy place, he sprinkles the golden altar seven times with the blood both of the bullock and the goat (vv. 18, 19).

This first goat is purely a sin offering, offered to God alone as an atonement for his people's sins. Our sin is against God ; it calls for judgment ; and there is that in God, his justice, which demands the punishment of all sin. The sin offering was a (symbolical) satisfaction of this demand, and so it was called the Lord's offering. The first goat then tells of the atonement of Jesus Christ in its relation to God the righteous and holy One.

But when sin is truly atoned for, and punished, before God, there is an end of it. So something was needed to show how utterly sin is removed from repentant and believing men. Hence the scape goat, which seems to say: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us." The Lord's goat tells of the atonement itself, as an expiation for sin before God ; the scape goat deals with the blessed result of a sin offering already completed. The scape goat stood at the door of the Tabernacle while the atonement was being offered within. Its part did not begin until the actual work of atonement was finished. Then the high priest came forth, confessed the sin of the people as he pressed upon its head, and sent it away into "a land of forgetfulness." Glorious symbol of that land of utter forgetfulness into which God sends the sins of all who trust and love Him who was made sin for us.

LESSON POINTS.

(1) God's holiness. Sin must be purged, or the sinner must be punished. A solemn warning to the presumptuous.

(2) The solemnity of the day of atonement reminds us of the sorrow for sin that becomes the forgiven.

(3) Christ the perfect Sacrifice, once offered for ever.

(4) The perfect separation between the believer and his sins.

GERMANY.—We cannot but feel humiliated by reading so unmannerly and unjust a diatribe as this in the Berlin Evan.-Kirchlicher Anzeiger :—"The Methodists held a show-parade at Zwickau, in June, when Bishop Willard Mallalieu, of America, gave an address in English (which was translated), to all comers. Among other things, the Bishop declared the Methodist Church had the greatest love for Germany. The 'Holy Father,' of course, is in hope that he may be able to shear the Germans like patient sheep. The Bishop is 'wise as the serpent,' and many-sided in his patriotism. He sent a very humble telegram of homage to the Emperor; but his Majesty has already had enough of the English Mackenzie and has as little desire as we have for Methodist help in building up the Kingdom of God in the Fatherland. We would remind the English of the words of their own Minister, Gladstone, 'Hands off,' and say to them, 'You English and Americans look after the Church-life of your own land'; which advice we beg also to offer to the five English Bishops, who in September are to arrive at Heidelberg in order to take part in the manœuvres of those demonstration-loving old Catholics who have been converted to evangelicalism" [Humanly speaking, Sir Morell Mackenzie was instrumental in adding considerably to the life of one of the noblest men that Germany ever possessed, and made it possible for the empire to have him on the throne, if only for a few months.]

Letters to the Editor.

ENGLISH CHURCH AT CAPRI.

Sir,—At a time when the Italian Exhibition is attracting so much notice, many of your readers may be interested in knowing that a small English Church has been commenced in this island, which is not only visited as a health resort, but also on account of its far-famed blue grotto. There is no doubt that many people travelling on the Continent select those places where English Church services are to be found; and until our little church is finished (which, unfortunately, is at a standstill at present for want of funds), a studio has been kindly lent for the purpose. Anyone interested in such a work is requested to write to the Hon. Carlotta Norton, the Deaconess Home, Mildmay-park, London, N.; or to myself, care of the Manager, London and County Bank, High Wycombe, Bucks. Yours faithfully,

Capri, Italy. Wm. Wildes.

THE BAND OF LOVE.

Sir,—As Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, evidently makes a complaint against us in your last issue, will you kindly permit me to make the following explanation? It can scarcely be correct for Mr. Smith to state that "an attempt has been made to draw the George Smith of Coalville Society, and Band of Love, into the region of favouring one particular society," because no member of our committee had ever heard of this special society of Mr. Smith's until our juvenile branch had been established. Of course, therefore, our "Band of Love" has not assumed the slightest connection with the honoured name of "George Smith, of Coalville"; and I am sure Mr. Smith cannot claim seriously a monopoly of the simple title of "Band of Love" only, by which our children's society is known.

Will you kindly permit me to add that with a view to encouraging the use of fruit as food, we have just prepared fresh articles on "Fruit Bottling," so that farmers may be induced to grow it more largely, which can be had with a packet of our literature by sending two stamps, and addressed wrapper to our office.

Yours truly, W. S. Manning.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

A great revival is in progress in Augusta, Ga., and it has moved all the churches except the Romish and Protestant Episcopal. A number of converts were immersed, among whom was Chung Yong, the first Chinese in the State to embrace the Christian religion.

Ben Hogan has been holding services in the N. E. Church, East Syracuse, N. Y. The building has been crowded to excess, and much good has been done. At the first service, after Mr. Hogan's plain, earnest talk, fifty persons rose to ask for prayer.

Major D. W. Whittle held meetings for a week in the new North Side Tabernacle, of the Chicago Evangelisation Society, Chicago, on his return from the South. He goes to the Niagara Conference and then has plans for a Bible Institute for young men, to be held in Chicago during August.

Newbury.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan have lately passed through the neighbourhood with their Bible carriage. They remained a week in Kingsclere Woodlands, taking open-air services nearly all day on Sunday, and two week nights. The meetings were well attended, and some of the hearers thanked God for the help they had received.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Smith, the converted Gipsies, have been working in Norfolk over two and a half years, and during that time have been the means of much blessing in a great many villages. They are now taking up their residence in Cambridge, and are ready for calls to labour. Their address for the future will be Sedgwick-street, Mill-road, Cambridge.

Lavender for our Soldiers.—An earnest appeal is made for lavender, to any friends who can spare some from their gardens. We want lavender to fill little muslin bags to send to our sick soldiers in hospital at home and abroad, who greatly prize and appreciate them. A text card is always attached to each bag, and God has often used these little messengers. Boxes or parcels of lavender addressed to Mrs. Stanley Puckle The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

It is stated that Lord Grimthorpe intends to give £10,000 towards providing a Suffragan Bishop for the Archdiocese of York, of which he is the Chancellor.

The Duke of Newcastle contradicts the report that he is about to join the Church of Rome. He says: "I have no intention of seceding from a Church which has always been a true branch of the One Catholic and Apostolic Church."

It is understood that the Committee of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops which has been considering the question of the relations between Church and Dissent, have reported in favour of recognising the ministry of non-episcopal Dissenting bodies as valid, though irregular.

Rev. Charles Stirling, of New Maldon, having proposed that Protestant evangelical clergymen should secede from the Church, and bear an outside testimony against prevalent Romanising tendencies, several correspondents of The English Churchman have written deprecating his advice. One says: "Does it not indicate cowardice to forsake the Church of our fathers in the hour of her need? And does not such advice fit in with the wishes of my Ritualistic brethren, viz., that the Evangelicals ought to leave the Church of England? Protestant members of the Church should regard it as their duty to cling to their posts, and make their voices heard on behalf of the great and glorious principles of the Reformation."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Should the committee decide to elect the gentleman next in the voting to Rev. Griffith John, as chairman of the Congregational Union, the choice will fall on Rev. Thomas Green, of Ashton-under-Lyne.

The manual of the Edmonton and Tottenham Church states that the past year has been one of real, although not rapid, progress. Rev. S. Bagley, the pastor, speaks hopefully of his nine years' ministry. The membership is 433. Thirty societies are in vigorous operation.

Rev. W. C. Talbot, late of Wimbledon, has commenced his ministry at Buckland Church, Portsmouth. He enters on his work with every encouragement, the church having upwards of 500 members and 900 Sunday scholars, with numerous associations in connection.

The iron building of the Morley Memorial Church, Fishponds, Bristol, erected eighteen months ago, having proved inadequate to meet the needs of the increasing congregation and Sunday-school, it has been decided to build a larger and a permanent church, providing seating accommodation for about 450.

The Committee of Hackney College Convocation, on the suggestion of Professor Cave, is arranging for the alumni of the College to spend five days together in the new building early in September, the time to be wholly devoted to the cultivation of the Spiritual Life, with necessary seasons for social intercourse.

BAPTIST.

The principle of "open communion" seems to be making way among the American Baptists.

A few days ago, Rev. Dr. Clifford laid the foundation stone of a new Baptist Chapel at the corner of Weston-road, Ferme Park-road, Stroud green, N. The chapel, with galleries, will seat 650 persons.

Rev. W. Williams is just completing the eleventh year of his ministry at Upton Chapel, Lambeth, under encouraging circumstances. During his pastorate there have been over 1000 inquirers, and the present membership is upwards of 600. Each department of service reports steady progress and constant blessing.

Highgate-road Church, N.W., is experiencing refreshing times. The pastor, Rev. J. Stephens, is abroad, seeking health of body. When he left, he expressed a hope that the church would have reviving grace during his absence. The desired blessing has been fervently prayed for, and it is hoped that it will come in "showers."

Rev. F. B. Meyer has addressed a letter to the Baptist ministers of London, inviting them to spend a quiet time at Regent's Park Chapel in September next, in order to gain spiritual help for the work of the next autumn and winter. The dates named are the 10th, 11th, and 12th of the month, the evening meetings being devoted to united prayer for a revival of God's work throughout the whole denomination.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, has been staying at Kessingland, Suffolk. He has not been idle during his holiday, however, and his repeated spiritual efforts have greatly endeared him to the people. His birthday coming round, it was most cordially celebrated by the inhabitants, whom he in turn invited to tea in a marquee near the Bethel. Some six hundred sat down, and afterwards Mr. Brown addressed a thousand persons on, "Saved or unsaved, which?"

A blessed work for God, writes a correspondent staying at Dover, is carried on in connection with Salem Baptist Chapel, Bench-street, Dover. Various agencies are employed for the spread of the Gospel, and with encouraging success. Rev. E. J. Edwards is the minister; he is a faithful preacher of Christ's Gospel, his one aim being the extension of the Church of God. Progress in Christian life and work are constantly urged by Mr. Edwards. On Sunday evening last he delivered an address based upon the words "To be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man," fervently appealing to his hearers to fully consecrate themselves to the service of their Redeemer.

SALVATION ARMY.

Miss Swift, who has been spending a well-earned furlough amongst her friends in America, has returned to England, and resumed her important duties as editress of All the World.

The rescue work and inquiry department has undergone reinforcement. A gentleman, who has had twenty-five years' experience in making secret investigations, and in detective work generally, in England, the Continent, and the Colonies, has been appointed to the rescue staff.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Lord Aberdeen recently laid the foundation-stone of College Park Presbyterian Church. After the ceremony, Rev. Principal Dykes, D.D., presided over a public meeting. He said that the population of the neighbourhood had so increased that the church was an absolute necessity. The building is to cost £3000, of which about £2400 has already been raised.

One of the many agencies for good in connection with Regent-square Church is a mission to the blind. Members of this mission, numbering over 300 blind people, each accompanied by a guide, have just been enjoying their annual outing, when they were accompanied and well cared for by ladies and gentlemen connected with Regent-square.

The recent Presbyterian Council, having had its attention called to the destructive effects of the liquor traffic in the Congo State, appointed a deputation to wait upon the King of the Belgians, and thank him for what he had done in opposition to that traffic. The king received them with special interest and pleasure, and expressed his gratitude that the Christian Church was now moving in the matter. He showed himself ahead of the deputation, particularly in his sense of the evil done by the liquor traffic there, and in his anxiety that it be brought to an end.

METHODIST.

Rev. G. Bancroft, of the Calvinistic Methodist Church, Saundersfoot, Tenby, after a quarter of a century's labour, purposes to conduct special services in the neighbourhood extending over three months. He would be glad of any aid in this undertaking.

Rev. J. H. Bateson, writing from Calcutta, reports that there has been a cheering revival among the soldiers in the Indian metropolis, as a result of a week of special services in the Dum Dum chapel. Each evening during the week stalwart soldiers, and some civilians, sought the Saviour; great power attended all the meetings and all felt of a truth God was present.

Last year a movement was set on foot to erect a new chapel at Epworth, the birthplace of the Wesleys, to serve the double purpose of a memorial of the founder of Methodism and a jubilee commemoration of the whole Society. The plans for a handsome chapel and schoolroom have now been completed. The chapel is to seat about 400 people.

The work of the Lord at the Birmingham Central Mission is progressing very favourably. Every succeeding Sabbath affords the joy of pointing sinners to Christ. Every Sunday evening the large hall is crowded to excess, and, in addition to the work done in the hall, there are about four open-air services conducted each week, which are a decided success.

Rev. Dr. Young preaching in King-street Chapel, Plymouth, declared that in no respect is this an age of reverence. In homes the ancient and beautiful relations between parent and child, youth and age, master and servant are with a few gracious exceptions, simply ignored. The honouring of father and mother is in many Christian homes utterly obsolete.

The fourth anniversary of the opening of the Mission, and of Rev. T. Jackson's ministry at Clapton, was held on the 23rd ult. Since the opening of the Mission, 274 adults have been received into church fellowship, 600 have signed the Gospel Temperance pledge, and there are 618 teachers and children in the Sunday-school and Bands of Hope. The benevolent fund has given 3252 free meals to the destitute, and 17,000 quarts of soup to poor families. One hundred thousand tracts and pamphlets have been distributed, and 210 open-air services held.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Alex. Gregory, senior minister of the Free Church, Anstruther, N.B.—Rev. George Duffield, D.D., who held several Presbyterian pastorates in America, and latterly acted as an evangelist; he was the author of "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," and other popular Gospel hymns.—Rev. Baiconto Nath De, one of the most effective agents of the Free Church of Scotland Bengal Mission. The firm stand which he presented in the face of persistent and insidious temptations when he came out of heathenism forty-three years ago characterised him throughout his whole career.—Mrs. Groves, wife of Rev. W. A. Groves, Wesleyan minister, of Glasgow.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The council of the Evangelical Alliance are making arrangements for the Annual Conference to be held in Plymouth on September 25 and two following days. It is expected that there will be a large gathering of members and friends of the Society from various parts of the United Kingdom, this being the first occasion on which the Alliance has met in the extreme South West of England. The Bishop of Exeter, who is a Vice-President of the Alliance, has consented to preside over the opening meeting of the Conference. Programme and full particulars regarding the Conference may be obtained from the secretaries of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

"THE TREES are SHAKING HANDS."

PSALM xcvi. 12.

[One day last autumn, on seeing the laurels waving in the breeze, the writer's little brother, three years of age, made the exclamation which stands at the head of these lines.]

THE Autumn wind came gently blowing from the West,
And softly whispered to the leafless boughs,
"Clasp hands. In sorrow's lonely hour,
Bereft of all the gaiety of Summer days;
Embrace each other tenderly, and link your arms,
While still my soft, sweet breath is blowing."
Quickly the noble trees yielded a glad response,
And from the new bay window Hubert looked,
and cried,
"The trees are shaking hands!"

Dear trees! a gladsome day is coming soon,
When ye shall sing for joy before all Nature's King;
Because He comes to judge the earth with righteousness,
And we, to whom is given Redemption's wondrous song,
Will add our deepest notes of welcome unto yours,
To greet the Lord of Life and Immortality,
Whose blessèd death upon the cross hath won for me
The right to pass within the city gates,
And rest beneath the shadow of the Tree of Life.

. . . . .

Then waving trees of earth, still bend to clasp your hands,
And murmur pleasant secrets to the Autumn wind
Of tender Springtime coming by and by.
May our hearts hear the comfort too, and,
bright with hope,
Wait patiently for that glad day when He shall come,
The Lord of Paradise, who shall transplant us all
To his fair garden, where his love is sunshine.
There blow no winds of Autumn, breathing sad
"Farewells,"
But, bright and beautiful, in garments of salvation,
The trees of God's own planting, "perfected for ever," Clasp their loving hands, and nevermore unbind them.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Habitual Drunkards Act (1879) Amendment (No. 2) Bill has received the Royal assent.

Sir William Houldsworth, M.P., has withdrawn his Bill for withholding fresh licences, there being no hope of passing it during the present session.

Canon Wilberforce points out that the two Protestant cathedrals and the largest Presbyterian chapel in Dublin are memorials of drink, all three having been restored or built by drink manufacturers.

FOREIGN.

In Manitoba 16 out of 20 of the nearest residents must endorse an application for a licence, otherwise it will be refused.

The Canadian Presbyterian General Assembly at its recent sessions passed a series of trenchant temperance resolutions.

In a recent year 2418 delirium tremens patients were brought into one hospital of New York, and of these 1950 were men, and 468 women.

In Queensland the electors of each polling district can prevent the granting of additional licences, can reduce the number of existing licences, and may prohibit all drink licensing.

Mr. Charles J. Guthrie, who has just returned from Palestine and Egypt, reports that he found "one blessed feature in the system of the False Prophet—viz., abstinence from drink—is rapidly disappearing."

The King of the Belgians very favourably received the deputation to him on the Congo liquor traffic appointed by the Pan-Presbyterian Council. The King was in full sympathy with the deputation, and hoped its American members would try to influence their Government towards effective restriction of the traffic.

Letter of Canon Christopher in "The Record," July 6, 1888.

THE LATE REV. WILLIAM PENNEFATHER.

IT was not possible for me to spare more than one day for the Mildmay Conference. But that was enough to bring my dear friend William Pennefather and his character and life-work much to my mind. At the early prayer-meeting on Thursday, June 28, I asked those present, as I now ask your readers, to pray much during this Long Vacation for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Oxford and Cambridge, and other Universities and Colleges, next October term. The Holy Spirit alone can accomplish the work which the Church and the world need, and raise up a multitude of faithful devoted young men, prepared to work for the Lord Jesus Christ at home or abroad, wherever He may call them. . . . I entreated the Christians at the early prayer-meeting to add efforts to their prayers for young men at the Universities and elsewhere. If anyone asked, "What can I do?" I would reply, "At least give any educated young man you know the 'LIFE OF WILLIAM PENNEFATHER.'" And as it is one thing to give a young man a book, and another thing to get him to read it, interest him in Mr. Pennefather's character and life-work. Show him what God did by this man of faith and prayer. How, in addition to other most practical and abundant good works, he drew together the hearts and minds of thousands in different folds of the one flock of Christ. How he was used of God to establish a wonderful and most spiritual Annual Conference, at which men connected, through birth, circumstances, and strong convictions, with different portions of the one Church of Christ, manifest that they are taught by one Spirit and are of one mind in the Lord on the most essential doctrines of the Christian faith. . . . Then trace all this back to God's grace in the heart of a country clergyman at Christ Church, Barnet, and a Conference in a little school-room by Hadley Common, convened on principles in harmony with His mind who said, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." As you describe this Mildmay miracle wrought by God's power and grace, the young man to whom you are speaking will be moved to read the life of the clergyman whom God led on to open at Mildmay a springing fountain of good works carrying blessings to a multitude at home and abroad.

But the 'LIFE' is out of print! Shall it remain so? A generation of young men have grown up, many of them with high and holy aspirations, who never knew, and perhaps never heard of, William Pennefather. But we may make them acquainted with his Life. Messrs. Shaw, of Paternoster-row, the publishers of the memoir, have the stereotyped plates from which the later editions were printed. The first edition was sold at half a guinea. Messrs. Shaw have very liberally promised that, if at least fifteen hundred copies are subscribed for, they will print off a large edition, page for page and line for line, the same as the half-guinea edition, at the small price of half-a-crown to subscribers, and three and sixpence to the general public. I hope each one of your readers will encourage this good work by writing at once to Messrs. Shaw ordering at least one copy to give to some young man. In few ways could a pound be better spent than in giving eight copies to eight young men likely to profit by the gift.

Those who are spreading error are active in their efforts and liberal in their gifts. Shall those who love the true Gospel be apathetic or lukewarm? The Lord requires zeal in each one of His servants, whom He has bought at so great a cost. Some of your readers may be in imminent danger of dying rich. Will they not use their means zealously while they can. Young men are attracted by a man full of love and good works. How suggestive and fruitful may the memoir of William Pennefather be, to thousands of young men who may not elsewhere have seen in equal degree the power of the true gospel to produce a lovable character and a life of extraordinary usefulness.

One of the good results of the proposed cheap reprint of Mr. Pennefather's Life may be that the Mildmay Conference may become better known to the young men of the present day, and may be attended next year by a still larger number of those who are thirsting for grace to serve God in the work of winning souls for Him. I cannot forget the usefulness to myself of the first of these Conferences I attended at Barnet, and of my first acquaintance with dear William Pennefather.

St. Aldate's Rectory, Oxford. ALFRED M. W. CHRISTOPHER.

WHAT IS LIME-JUICE?

This question is rendered necessary from the prominent attention it is attracting as the Best Temperance Beverage. The answer is that it should be JUICE of the LIME FRUIT without admixture. In Montserrat alone is the Lime Tree cultivated for this purpose, and great care should be taken to obtain this brand (as supplied to the Government), and not any of the numerous concoctions sold under the name of Lime Juice Cordials or Prepared Lime Juice, &c.

REV. W. HAY M. H. AITKEN, M.A.

Mission Preacher.

THE subject of this sketch is the son of remarkable parents. His father, Robert Aitken, was a Lowland Scot, who made his mark at Edinburgh University, and eventually gave himself to the sacred office of the ministry. He was a man of great dramatic power, considerable intellect, simple faith, untiring zeal, and filled with the love of Christ. Besides being an earnest and successful evangelist, he was for a short time a leader of religious thought. So much so that at one time the name "Aitkenite" threatened to establish itself as "Wesleyan" has done. Not that he ever intended to found a sect or party. Nothing was further from his thoughts. But he rescued from threatened oblivion those higher truths concerning Christian holiness which had been almost lost sight of in the spiritual darkness which succeeded the deadening struggle between Calvinism and Arminianism.

(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs Russell & Son, London).

Mr. Aitken's mother, Wilhelmina, was the fourth sister of Hay Macdowall Grant, of Arndilly. She was a person of great strength of character, and deep personal piety, one who powerfully affected all who knew her. In her later years she used to devote at least an hour of every day to prayer for Divine blessing upon her son's work. God only knows how much of the son's success is due to the mother's earnest prayers.

WILLIAM HAY MACDOWALL HUNTER AITKEN was born in Liverpool on September 21, 1841. He received his early education from private tutors, amongst whom was Dr. Scrivener, the famous textual critic, then vicar of St. Gerran's. He began preaching at the early age of fourteen, and when seventeen he was associated with the late Macdowall Grant and Reginald Radcliffe in the revival in Scotland in 1859. Not in vain were his gifts thus early exercised. There are many living and working for God to-day who were led to Christ in these early days of his career.

Entering Wadham College, Oxford, Mr. Aitken took his degree in 1865, obtaining a second class in the Final Schools. This was no small success for a man who had so few educational advantages in his early years. His Oxford contemporaries cannot forget his earnest work for the conversion of his fellow undergraduates, and that he was the mainstay of the Wadham Prayer-meeting, long ago, alas! defunct.

Among the eighteen offers of acuracy which he received was one from the saintly William Pennefather, of St. Jude's, Mildmay. For about five years he worked lovingly and happily in North London, and towards the end of that time he took part in the Twelve Days' London Mission of 1869. That Mission produced an immense impression, and seemed to suggest to earnest Churchmen throughout the country, the urgent need of Mission Work. From that time forward Mr. Aitken found his services as a mission preacher in great demand. Accepting the incumbency of Christ Church, Everton, Liverpool, in the year 1871, he was brought face to face with duties which were engrossing in the extreme. Spread over thirty-six acres of ground there were no fewer than thirteen thousand people, and mission work was indeed the one thing needful in his parochial administration. The requirements of the parish were carefully attended to, but all the time Mr. Aitken was being requested to conduct missions in the many districts where Christian life was more a name than a fact. At length the alternatives, pastoral duty or mission work, came up for full consideration and absolute decision.

Those who knew his power, urged Mr. Aitken to give up his charge, and hold himself at liberty for more distinctly aggressive labour. That he must leave Liverpool became certain, for Mrs. Aitken's health having failed, the physicians said that another climate must be sought. After prayerful consideration Mr. Aitken saw it to be his duty to devote himself to mission work. Resigning his living in 1875, he took up residence at Hazelwood, in Derbyshire; and five years later moved to Bedford, where he now lives.

During the many years in which he has been engaged in the important work for which, by common consent, he is eminently fitted, Mr. Aitken has travelled much. In ancient cathedrals and parish churches, as well as in public halls, he has preached the Gospel in simplicity and with power. In 1876 he was the means of founding the Church Parochial Mission Society, of which he is still the General Superintendent, and also an Honorary Missioner. Eight clergymen are now wholly employed on its staff, and from twenty to thirty missions are held monthly under its auspices.

As a teacher, one of Mr. Aitken's chief merits is that strict party men of all sorts are inclined to respect him. He is not one of those who suffer from the misfortune of having all men speak well of him. He is evangelical in the truest sense. Christ and his work is the substance of his message. He is not satisfied with explaining the way of salvation, simply, earnestly, and incessantly as he proclaims it. He often leads his hearers beyond "the word of the beginning of Christ" to higher truths. His is essentially the Gospel of a saved life. Not that he is a perfectionist in anything but a Scriptural sense. Nobody teaches more emphatically the personal imperfection of the saint so long as he is tied to this body of death. He believes, however, in the magnificent possibilities of the Christian life, and endeavours to lead his hearers to a realisation of the saving power of Christ.

On two memorable occasions Mr. Aitken has preached in the Guildhall. This is said to be a distinction which no other clergyman has enjoyed. The circumstances are full of interest. In the month of October, 1878, Mr. Aitken addressed evening meetings for several weeks in Exeter Hall, and preached in the mornings to business men at St. Margaret's, Lothbury. In the fervour of that auspicious movement the Lord Mayor, Sir T. S. Owden, was asked whether the Guildhall could not be placed at Mr. Aitken's disposal. There was no objection, and the Lord Mayor presided over the proceedings in his robes of state. It was felt that the meetings were very opportune. Interviewed a few months ago by a special commissioner of The Quiver, Mr. Aitken showed his notebook of the period, containing the following: "A very solemn feeling aroused, and a great impression seemed to be made. Crowded with people, mostly men." In many parts of London Mr. Aitken's influence was exerted during the year, and not a few to-day praise God for his powerful and winning testimony for the truth as it is in Jesus.

During the opening days of his missions Mr. Aitken always insists upon the necessity of repentance, calling upon people to adopt such an attitude that power may be given them to overcome sin. He attaches great importance to the after-meeting, at which his addresses are short and to the point. In the course of the interview to which reference has just been made, Mr. Aitken said:

> My theory is, Strike the iron while it is hot. My dear father used to say, "In the parable of the sower the devil cometh immediately, and we must endeavour to anticipate him." The impression made by a powerful sermon runs a risk of being neutralised before the man impressed reaches his home, by half a dozen chance circumstances; but if it is no sooner made than an opportunity is offered for acting upon it, the impression may deepen into a true conversion.

Mr. Aitken has often been permitted to rejoice over fruit of his abundant labours. Among other incidents, he tells of one which almost approaches the romantic. When he was preaching one evening in a manufacturing town in Yorkshire, a young lady seemed in great distress, through a sense of sin. One of the lady workers spoke to her, and after a time elicited from her that she wished to decide for Christ, but she was warmly attached to a young man, who, she feared, would not marry her if she became a decided Christian. But at length she determined to conquer even this temptation, and she then left the church resolved to choose the good part. In another part of the building a young man was also much affected, and after one of the workers had been speaking to him, he declared that he was willing to serve God, but he was much attached to a young lady, who, he feared, would throw him over if he became religious. At length he too decided for Christ, no matter what it cost! Then he also left the church. These two met outside. They had each, unknown to the other, been to the mission the same evening, and had been through a similar experience. They are to-day happily married, and both devoted Christians. When Mr. Aitken, in the interview already referred to, described this story as "enough to make the angels sing," he gave expression to a very reasonable estimate of its affecting beauty.

In 1886 Mr. Aitken paid a visit to America, where his evangelistic exertions were much blessed. He stayed about four months, and was much gratified by the way his message was received.

Earnestness consecrated to God, and directed by God, cannot fail of success. Whilst an attempt to measure the results of a career of mission activity such as Mr. Aitken's, would be alike foolish and irreverent, it is not too much to say that hundreds (if not thousands) of Christians to-day trace the commencement of their Christian life to the mission services of this servant of God; and thousands more of the Lord's own people are able to thank God for illumination and renewal through the Gospel poured out from his heart through his lips. We trust that many years of usefulness are yet before him.

THE MARQUIS OF LORNE attended at the Caledonian Christian Club, Bloomsbury, a few days ago. In the course of an address, he referred to the working of the Scott Act in Canada, saying that much difficulty attends a prohibition measure until public opinion is fully prepared for it. Meantime, he counselled activity in regulating and diminishing the drink traffic as much as possible.

ROMISH ACTIVITY.—"A Singaporean," describing the manner in which multitudes of Chinese are being drawn into the net of Popery by its gorgeous display writes:—Would to God those who know the truth would give themselves willingly to the service of God, as those do who, under a false system of compulsion, think to save their souls and lay up a store of merit against the coming solemn judgment. If the love of Christ do not constrain us, shall not the devotion of Romanists and Ritualists shame us to do more than we are doing, and to do it at once, whether at home or abroad."

BINDING OF RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

SIR,—Will you allow me to call the attention of your readers to some statements made in the report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops for 1887?

There is in this Blue Book a very interesting report by Mr. Lakeman, H.M. Inspector for the Central Metropolitan District, on the social condition of factory and workshop female operatives in that part of London. Among the trades which he describes is that of bookbinding, and he says, p. 90:—

> The commercial book-sewer finds regular employment, and can earn 15s. a week at machine work; the publishers' sewers are subject to the uncertainties of trade....Religious publications are very poorly paid for; piece work rules, and masters accept orders on the barest margin of profits....I believe that publishers' binding work is now among the poorest paid of city industries.
> It is undisputed that great and sore trials are undergone by many young hands out of season. I am told that the struggle comes with heavy temptations; some who cannot be helped at home, or who have no homes, are obliged to seek cheap lodgings, where companions are met with who, being stronger and more skilful, lead them on step by step till the facile descensus is complete. Many employers have told me of circumstances not fitted to be connected with so extensive an industry as this, which is all the more singular, because throughout my inquiries I hear of one trade only of which like things are said.

The italics are mine.

These workers, many of whom are young girls, suffer in two ways. Their wages are low, varying from 3s. or 4s. a week for learners, to 12s. or 15s. a week for experienced hands, and even this sum cannot be earned on cheap work. And their work is uncertain. "The ordinary slack season" is from "March to July"—i.e., four or five months out of the twelve—then very little work is done. There are also "extra slack seasons," in which "large numbers" of workers "are dispensed with."

I do not know what the religious publications are to which the inspector refers, but the charge is a very serious one, and should surely be inquired into. It would be terrible, indeed, if our cheap Bibles, and cheap tracts, and cheap moral stories, are cheap through the sacrifice of the bodies and souls of these poor girls.

The number of religious publications must be enormous, and action on the part of the various great societies could surely do something to improve the condition of these workers, both by actually raising wages, and by making the work less irregular.

Yours truly, MARIAN F. PEASE.

VISITING THE SICK IN CEYLON.

MRS. PIGOTT, of the Baptist Mission, Colombo, Ceylon, writes:—My sister and I visit the patients in the Government Civil Hospital here, three times a week, and they are always glad to welcome us, and to listen to our message, which has not been spoken in vain. There are generally to be found in the hospital over two hundred patients, and in the Seamen's Ward we meet men of almost every nationality.

We are often at a loss in trying to communicate with some whose languages we do not understand, and, to supply this deficiency, we should like to be able, at least, to give each patient a book or tract in his own tongue. If any of your readers will therefore, kindly send us a supply of such tracts, including also some in English, we should be very thankful. Books can be sent by the P. & O. parcel-post, at the rate of 6d. per pound weight, and there is no duty on them in Ceylon.

"The Lord our Righteousness."

MAN is a fallen creature, fallen from fellowship with God into disobedience and condemnation. The cause of this fall, indeed the real fall itself, was out of faith into doubt and disbelief—faith transferred from God to Satan. The Lord Jesus teaches that to desire forbidden things is to disobey already in the heart. When Eve looked at the tree, and desired the fruit, she had already fallen in her heart.

By the fall man lost faith in God; lost righteousness; came under condemnation. Redemption must deliver him from condemnation, and must restore him to faith in God and to righteousness.

Jesus the Son of God came forth from the bosom of the Father, and revealed God, that men might know and believe in God. His life on earth made it manifest that He was without blemish and without spot. Angels announced his birth as Son of the Highest, the Saviour; the Father acknowledged Him as his beloved and well-pleasing Son; the Holy Spirit descended and abode upon Him; demons owned and feared Him as the Holy One of God; Simeon, the patriarch, saw in Him the salvation of God, the light of the Gentiles, and the glory of Israel; John, the prophet, testified to Him as the Lamb of God; Caiaphas, the high priest, prophesied that He should die for the people, that the whole nation perish not; Pilate, the governor, was warned by his wife not to have anything to do with condemning that Just Person, because she had suffered many things in a dream concerning Him, and Pilate washed his hands and declared that he found no fault in Him; the centurion appointed to certify his execution said, "Certainly this was a righteous man." Heaven, and hell, and earth, patriarch, prophet, priest, and ruler, acknowledged that He was without blemish and without spot. Failing this testimony, the type of the passover lamb, which was laid up from the tenth to the fourteenth day that its spotlessness might be made manifest, would not have been fulfilled.

Jesus died to make expiation for sin; He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. We are justified by the grace of God as the antecedent cause; by the blood of Christ as the procuring cause; by our faith in God who raised Him from the dead, as the connecting link; by works, as proving the reality of the faith.

Our justification is not complete apart from the resurrection of Christ. Our connection with Him is based upon his death and resurrection.* Our justification, though accomplished by his blood, was made manifest by his resurrection.

The faith which justifies is faith in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered up for our offences, and was raised again for our justification. So that the evidence of our justification was not completed until his resurrection. For the object of our redemption was that we might be restored to faith in God, and that our faith might take hold on God as having provided a complete expiation of sin, and as having raised the Expiator out of death into an endless life (1 Pet. i. 18—21).

Until his death, Jesus was as a corn of wheat, abiding alone. Dying and rising again, He bare much fruit. When we believed we were baptized into his death; buried with Him through our baptism into his death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also should walk in newness of life (Rom. vi. 3, 4). And because we are risen with Christ, we are exhorted to seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God (Col. iii. 1).

It is never even hinted in Scripture that the righteousness of the earthly life of the Lord Jesus is imputed to us as though we had lived it. He died that we might live to Him who died and rose again for us. It is to Him as risen from the dead that we are married; we have been made dead to thel aw through the body of Christ, that we might be joined to Another, even to Him who is raised from the dead; that we might bring forth fruit unto God (Rom. vii.). We are no longer considered as in the flesh, but as having died and risen in Him; how, then, could the life which He lived in the flesh be attributed to us who are no longer in the flesh, but raised again in Him? He, the Lord from heaven, came into the region of the first Adam that He might die out of it, and that all believers might also die out of it in Him. He is raised through that death into another region, that of resurrection life, and all who in Him die out of connection with the first Adam are raised with Him into that other region of resurrection life in which He lives.

Very far from depreciating the value of the righteous life that Jesus lived on earth, we believe that that, and infinitely more than that, is ours in Him. He was and is the eternal Son of the Father; the Word who was God was made flesh and dwelt among us; God manifested in flesh. That Holy and Eternal One who lived and died, and was raised again, is He in whom we believe, and to whom, through death and in resurrection, we are eternally united. He is Himself our Righteousness. We are his Bride, married to Him in resurrection life. We are members of his body. As He is one with the Father, so we are one with Him. The idea of his law-fulfilling, as a man in the flesh, being accounted to us, is outside the question. For we do not begin to be united to Him until He is crucified and risen, and the very first act of our faith in Him unites us with Him in death and resurrection, and translates us out of association with fallen Adam and works of law into union with the risen Son of God.

Therefore, it is not merely that his holy and law-fulfilling life is imputed to us, and a robe of his righteousness thrown over us, as a hymn says—

> And, lest the shadow of a spot
>   Should on my soul be found,
> He took the robe the Saviour wrought,
>   And cast it all around—

not just this, but much more and better than this. We are born again. As the grub dies out of its crawling caterpillar life, and is born again into a higher and larger life, so we, by faith in Christ crucified, die to our sinful and condemned Adam life, and by faith in God who raised Him from the dead, we rise into his glorified life, which includes not merely the legal righteousness of his life on earth, and his obedience unto death, but all He was, and is, and will be, as the only begotten Son, who is for ever in the bosom of the Father; the Firstborn of every creature; who said: "Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of Me: I delight to do thy will, O God"; the Faithful and true Witness; the First-begotten from the dead; the Prince of the kings of the earth: and all else that is included in Jesus, the Name above every name which is named, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come. This is the heritage of the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all.

The "seven togethers," so characteristic and so much blessed a feature of Mr. Denham Smith's preaching, began with death. Crucified together, buried together, quickened together, raised together, seated together in heavenly places, suffering together, glorified together. This accords with the Apostles' testimony. The power of the Gospel preached by the Apostles was the resurrection of the Lord Jesus whom men by wicked hands had crucified and slain. The Gospel by which the Corinthians were saved was that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; and that He was raised again from the dead according to the Scriptures; and it went on to declare his coming kingdom and glory (1 Cor. xv.).

What then is meant by the statement that Abraham's faith was reckoned to him for righteousness? Surely exactly what it says. Adam's disbelief, with the fruit it bore, was reckoned to him for unrighteousness. Abraham's faith in God, proved by the fruit it bore, was reckoned to him for righteousness. Adam doubted God and fell. Abraham believed God, and in believing God, believed not only all that God had revealed to him (however much or little that may have been), but he believed God, trusted God, to do whatever was needed to be done for man's redemption, and to be and to do everything else which it became God to be and do. Abraham knew the fall and the promised Seed of the woman; he knew God as the Judge of all the earth; and he saw Christ's day and was glad. In a word, like all the elders before and after him, he saw the promises and greeted them afar off. And in them all, the effect of this was that they obtained witness that they were righteous; that they pleased God; that they became heirs of the righteousness which is by faith; that they wrought righteousness; that they gave glory to God. (Rom. iv. and Heb. xi. passim.)

With our fuller revelation the same is true of us also; for justifying faith is that which believes in God who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification. In either case it is belief in God which is counted for righteousness, and which produces righteousness of life.

Of course, "righteous" and "righteousness," as applied to men, are comparative terms. God called Noah, Abraham, Daniel, and Job, righteous men. He did not mean that they were sinlessly perfect men in themselves. But the object of their faith was the righteous God, who would provide and did provide Himself a Lamb, typical in their case of the anti-typical Lamb, who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, who now once, in the end of the ages, hath appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

"Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith."

L.

The correspondence on "Imputed Righteousness" seems to have been sufficient to afford opportunity for the expression of the various views on the subject. It is hoped that the foregoing article may indicate how far those views may be harmonized, and that those who seemed to deny the imputation of the righteousness of Church to the believer, do indeed affirm it in the very highest sense.

* As their Messiah, the Son of David, He was rejected by Israel. During his earthly life He was not offered to the Gentiles (Matt. x. 5, 6, 23; Luke x. 1), although the violent among them overleaped the barrier, and, like the Syro-Phenician woman, took the kingdom of heaven by force of faith.

The "Very Words" of Jesus.

II.

TURNING now to the positive aspects of our Lord's speech, we cannot but place in the foreground his use of the personal pronouns. The way Christ marks Himself off from others in the use of the personal pronouns has, we venture to submit, no parallel in the wide world. Even the most egotistical among men utterly fails to keep our Lord within sight in this regard. Christ's discourse bristles with the Ego; and the more deeply the whole question is studied, the wider will the distance between Him and other men in this particular be found to be. Indeed, the difference, when sifted, amounts to the superhuman. Only let our Lord's use of the personal pronouns be pondered, and if we have eyes to see, or minds to understand, we must exclaim, "Surely God was in this place, and I knew it not."

If, for instance, for the sake of comparison, we glance at St. John's use of the personal pronouns, or St. Paul's, we find that it naturally turns on the pivot of "we," "our," and "us." "These things write we unto you"; "This then is the message which we have heard of Him." And so Paul: "The love of Christ constraineth us." "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved." But when we come to the very words of Jesus we are confronted by a unique exception. He does not say "Let us be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect," but "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." Nor does He, as a Jew speaking to Jews, say, "Our fathers did eat manna in the wilderness," but "Your fathers" did so. Our Lord had no human paternity, and, therefore, may not group Himself with others as if He had. Nor is our Lord's relation to the Father such as admits of being brought under any inclusive category. Hence He does not say to Mary "I ascend unto our Father...and to our God..." but "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, to my God and your God."

The wording of the "Lord's prayer" may seem to collide with this finding, but the expression, "Our Father," with which that prayer opens was framed for the disciples' use, not the Master's. His own words are, as John xvii. shows, simply Father or Righteous Father. In harmony with the same grand law of difference, our Lord says, "In my Father's house are many mansions"; not "In our Father's house," &c. So in respect of the dying thief, the consolatory answer is, "This day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise"; not "This day we shall be there." The idea is not their going in company, but the Lord of the residence welcoming an invited guest.

There are, indeed, a few instances where "we," "us," and "our," occur in Christ's very words; but on examination they will be seen to be rather the exceptions that prove the rule than otherwise; concerned, for instance, with Christ's action when representative, as on the occasion of his baptism, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness"; and, again, in matters merely civil, which the laws of his kingdom were not meant to contravene, "Lest we offend them." But even in that instance a distinction is made where it was pertinent to mark it. Hence Jesus does not say, "Give unto them for us," but, "Give unto them for Me and thee."

Not to dwell longer on this aspect of the subject, it has been computed that Paul uses "we," "our," "us," something like forty times for our Lord's once, whereas "I" and "Me" are the constantly recurring pronouns in our Lord's speech—the staple, in fact, of his discourse. It is incredible that such a use of the pronouns ever could have been concocted; nor can it be intelligently supposed that such a disposal of the pronouns ever could have taken place had not Christ been more than man, one that spake as never man spake.

We notice, further, how marvellously the memorial name of God is interwoven with the very words of Jesus. The fourth Gospel is largely devoted to the explication of Christ in this character, and that not by any species of philosophising, but simply by registering Christ's own speech. We may characterise this Gospel as that of Christ's I AM-ship. There is a datelessness about it, a lifting up of the whole theme out of every narrowing limitation; a placing of it apart from all creature antecedents, which tells that the place is holy ground. Nothing in this particular escapes the eagle eye of John. And though he contents himself with the office of the mere narrator, and seldom puts in a line of comment, yet it is clear his eyes are filled with the Divine light; he is a beholder of the glory of the Only-begotten of the Father.

Christ's exposition of Himself, as the I AM, shows us how grandly unique and absolute Christianity is. There is no comparative science of religion. Christ is all, and there is nothing else besides. It would have been a great deal to have said, "I am the Light of this age," or, "I am the Light of the Jews," but the claim, "I am the Light of the world," leaves room for no other foot. To catalogue Mahomet, Socrates, Buddha, or Zoroaster, or anyone else with Jesus, is utter infidelity and blasphemy. The absoluteness of Christ's claim is equally marked in the other prismatic unfoldings of the memorial name. Who else, for instance, has ever dared to say, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age"? Christ's ipsissima verba proclaim his Godhead. This is not a deduction from his speech, but is the warp and woof of it. His enemies say, "Thou art not fifty years old, and hast Thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, Before Abraham was I am." The uplifted stones to cast at Him are evidence that in their view the Divine prerogative had been infringed. Christ's very words are Divinely loaded, and He is not owned at all unless on bended knee He is acknowledged as Lord and God.

In concluding this paper let me call attention to the force of the indirect in our Lord's mode of meeting inquiry. This feature is not without its significance. The categorical style of reply may suit the mutual relations of fellow-mortals, but seldom did it befit his lips, who read in all our queries the limitations of thought and view, and who, therefore, required another kind of measure into which to pour the treasures of his wisdom and knowledge.

JAMES DOUGLAS.

A PLEA FOR SOLDIERS' WIVES.—Mr. John Poate, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hants, wishes to correspond with any Christian people willing to take up the cause of the wives of those soldiers who are married off the strength of the regiment. The domestic needs of such a soldier are in no way considered by the authorities, and after he has paid for his room, only about 2s. per week remains for the wife to live on. Mr. Poate suggests the erection of model lodging-houses, at Aldershot and elsewhere, affording suitable accommodation at such a cheap rate as will leave such soldiers more money on which to keep their wives.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXII.—THE GREATEST TRIAL OF ALL.

GEN. xxii.

So long as men live in the world, they will turn to this story with unwaning interest. There is only one scene in history by which it is surpassed; that where the Great Father gave his Isaac to a death, from which there was no deliverance. God and Abraham were friends in a common sorrow, up to a certain point; though the infinite love of God stepped in to stay the hand of Abraham at the critical moment, sparing his friend what He would not spare Himself.

"God did tempt Abraham."—A better rendering might be, God did put Abraham to the test. Satan tempts us that he may bring out the evil that is in our hearts; God tries or tests us that He may bring out all the good. In the fiery trial through which the believer is called to pass, ingredients of evil which had counteracted his true development drop away, shrivelled and consumed; whilst latent qualities, produced by grace but not yet brought into exercise, are called to the front, receive due recognition, and acquire a fixity of position and influence which nothing else could possibly have given them. In the agony of sorrow we say words and assume positions, which otherwise we would never have dreamt of, but from which we never again recede. Looking back we wonder how we dared to do as we did; and yet we are not sorry, because the memory of what we were in that supreme hour is a precious legacy; and a platform from which we take a wider view, and climb to the further heights which beckon us.

The common incidents of daily life, as well as the rare and exceptional crises, are so contrived as to give us incessant opportunities of exercising, and so strengthening, the graces of Christian living. Happy are they who are ever on the alert to manifest each grace, according to the successive demands of the varied experiences of daily life. If we were always on the outlook for opportunities of manifesting the special qualities of Christ's character, which are called for by the trials, and worries, and vexations of common experience, we should find that they were the twenty thousand chariots of God, waiting to carry us up to heights which could never otherwise be trodden by our feet.

But God sends us no trial, whether great or small, without first preparing us.—He "will with the temptation provide a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Trials are, therefore, God's vote of confidence in us. Many a trifling event is sent to test us, ere a greater trial is permitted to break on our heads. We are set to climb the lower peaks before urged to the peaks with their virgin snows; made to run with footmen before contending with horses; taught to wade in the shallows, before venturing into the swell of the ocean waves. So it is written: "It came to pass after these things, that God did tempt Abraham."

Moreover, God often prepares us for coming trial, by giving us some new and blissful revelation of Himself. I notice that, at the close of the preceding chapter, we are told that "Abraham called on the name of the everlasting God." Now, we do not learn that he had ever looked on God in this light before. He had known Him as God, the Almighty (xvii. 1), but not as God, the Everlasting. The unchangeableness, the eternity, the independence of change, and time, and tense, which mark the Being of Jehovah, all these broke suddenly on his soul about that time in a fresh and more vivid manner. Who that can remember seeing the sea for the first time can ever forget the first impression of its grandeur and far-spread mirror-like expanse? And the soul of the patriarch was thrilled with the lofty train of high and holy thought, as he used that name in prayer beside the well, and beneath the spreading shade of the tree he had planted. And with him, as so often with us, the new name was to enable him the better to withstand the shock of coming sorrow.

The trial came very suddenly.—Life was flowing smoothly with the patriarch,—courted by Abimelech; secure of his wells; gladdened with the presence of Isaac; the everlasting God his friend. "Ah, happy man," we might well have exclaimed, "thou hast entered upon thy land of Beulah; thy sun shall no more go down, nor thy moon withdraw itself; before thee lie the sunlit years, in an unbroken chain of blessing." But this was not to be. And just at that moment, like a bolt out of a clear sky, there burst on him this, the severest trial of his life. It is not often that the express trains of heaven are announced by warning bell, or falling signal, they dash suddenly into the station of the soul. It becomes us to be ever on the alert, for at such an hour and in such a guise as we think not, the Son of Man comes.

The trial touched Abraham in his tenderest point.—It concerned his Isaac. Nothing else in the circumference of his life could have been such a test as anything connected with the heir of promise, the child of his old age, the laughter of his life. His love was tested. For love of God, he had done much. But at whatever cost, he had ever put God first, glad to sacrifice all, for very love of Him. For this he had torn himself from Charran. For this he had been willing to become a homeless wanderer, content if only at the last he became an inmate of God's home. For this he had renounced the hopes he had built on Ishmael, driving him, as a scapegoat, into the wilderness to return no more. But, perhaps, if he had been asked if he felt that he loved God most of all, he would not have dared to say he did. We can never gauge our love by feeling. The only true test of love is in how much we are prepared to do for the one to whom we profess it. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me." But God knew how true and strong his child's love was, and that he loved Him best. So He put him to a supreme test, that all men might henceforth know that a mortal man could love God so much as to put Him first, though his dearest lay in the opposite scale of the balance of the heart. Would not you like to love God like this? Then tell Him you are willing to pay the cost, if only He will create it within you. And, remember, though at first He may ask you to give up your Isaac to Him, it is only that you may take up your true position, and evince to the world your choice; but He will give your beloved back again from the altar on which you have laid him. "Take now thy son, thy only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him for a burnt-offering."

It was also a great test of his faith.—Isaac was the child of promise. "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." With reiterated emphasis this lad had been indicated as the one essential link between the aged pair and the vast posterity which was promised them. And now the father was asked to sacrifice his life. It was a tremendous test to his faith. How could God keep his word, and let Isaac die? It was utterly inexplicable to human thought. If Isaac had been old enough to have a son who could perpetuate the seed to future generations, the difficulty would have been removed. But how could the childless Isaac die, and still the promise stand of a posterity through him, innumerable as stars and sand? One thought, however, as the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us, filled the old man's mind, "God is able." "He accounted that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead" (Heb. xi. 19). He felt sure that somehow God would keep his word; it was not for him to reason how, but simply to obey; he had already seen Divine power giving life where all was as good as dead; why should it not do it again? In any case he must go straight on, doing as he was told, and calculating on the unexhausted stores in the secret hand of God. Oh, for faith like this!—simply to believe what God says; assured that God will do just what He has promised; looking without alarm, from circumstances that threaten to make the fulfilment impossible, to the bare word of God's unswerving truthfulness. Surely this habit is not so impossible of attainment. Why, then, should we not begin to practise it, stepping from stone to stone, until we are far out from the shore of human expediency, leaning on the unseen but felt arm of Omnipotence?

It was a test of his obedience.—It was in the visions of the night that the word of the Lord must have come to him, and early in the next morning the patriarch was on his way. The night before, as he lay down, he had not the least idea of the mission on which he would be started when the early beams of dawn had broken up the short Eastern night. But he acted immediately. We might have excused him if he had dallied with his duty, postponing it, procrastinating, lingering as long as possible. That, however, was not the habit of this heroic soul, which had well acquired the habit of instantaneity, one of the most priceless acquisitions for any soul ambitious of saintliness. "And Abraham rose up early in the morning." No other hand was permitted to saddle the ass, or cleave the wood, or interfere with the promptness of his action. "He saddled his ass, and clave the wood for the burnt-offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him." This promptness was his safeguard. While the herdsmen were beginning to stir, and the long lines of cattle were being driven forth to their several grazing grounds, the old man was on his way. I do not think he confided his secret to a single soul, not even to Sarah. Why should he? The lad and he would enter that camp again, when the short but awful journey was over. "I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you."

This test did not outrage any of the natural instincts of his soul.—First of all, he was too familiar with God's voice to mistake it. Too often had he listened to it to make a mistake in this solemn crisis. And he was sure that God had some way of deliverance; which, though he might not be able to forecast it, would secure the sparing of Isaac's life. Besides, he lived at a time when such sacrifices as that to which he was called were very common; and he had never been taught decisively that they were abhorrent to the mind of his almighty Friend. We must, in reading Scripture, remember that at first all God's servants were more or less affected by the religious notions that were current in their age; and we must not imagine that in all respects they were divested of the misconceptions that resulted from the twilight revelation in which they lived, but have since become dissipated before the meridian light of the Gospel. One of the first principles of that old Canaanitish religion demanded that men should give their firstborn for their transgression, the fruit of their body for the sin of their soul. On the altars of Moab, and Phenicia, and Carthage; nay, even in the history of Israel itself, this almost irrepressible expression of human horror at sin, and desire to propitiate God, found terrible expression. Not that fathers were less tender than now, but because they had a keener sense of the terror of unforgiven sin; they cowered before gods whom they knew not, and to whom they imputed a thirst for blood and suffering; they counted no cost too great to appease the awful demands which ignorance, and superstition, and a consciousness of sin, made upon them.

Perhaps Abraham had lately witnessed these rites; and, as he did so, he had thought of Isaac, and wondered if he could do the same with him; and marvelled why such a sacrifice had never been demanded at his hands. And it did not, therefore, startle him when God said, "Take now thy son, and offer him up." He was to learn that whilst God demanded as much love as ever heathen gave their cruel and imaginary deities, yet Heaven would not permit of human sacrifices or of offered sons. A greater sacrifice was to be made to put away sin. Abraham's obedience was, therefore, allowed to go up to a certain point, and then peremptorily stayed, that in all future time men might know that God would not demand, or permit, or accept human blood, much less the blood of a bright and noble lad, and that in such things He could have no delight.

Time and space warn us here to stay for the present, only asking ourselves, as we do so, whether we are of this same mind; holding our treasures with a loose hand; loving God most of all; prepared to obey Him at all costs; slaying our brightest hopes if God bid it, because so sure that He will not fail or deceive us. If so, may God give us this mind, and keep us in it, for his glory, and for the maturing of our own faith.

We shall hope to continue our meditation on Abraham's obedience next week.

THE CAPE.—A Cape Town correspondent writes: The terrible Acts which have disgraced India are about to be put into operation here, in civil as well as garrison towns. We have no one to speak publicly on the subject of social purity. A visit from a capable speaker on this subject would do much good.

MALTA.—A week's mission has just been held in connection with the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, 104, Strada S. Lorenzo, Vittoriosa, and much blessing has been experienced. Mr. W. Boyle, Scripture-reader, writes: "I heartily thank God and his people for the response to my appeal for old copies of The Christian, or other papers and tracts for distribution. If those who have sent only knew how the papers are welcomed, especially by the sick in hospital, they would indeed rejoice.

XIX.—GRAVE-CLOTHES.

As surely as Lazarus came out of his grave with grave-clothes upon him, so all converts come from death into life with some besetment or entanglement about them, in which they were held before.

Some people are bound up with worldly ways, and cannot live without them. Others are taken up with themselves, and have conscientious scruples which they think must be attended to, as if their eternity depended upon it. And others, again, are immersed in religious exercises which they believe they must observe and do, in order to be saved. They regard the sacraments and ordinances of religion as absolutely necessary for salvation.

A lady I have in my mind at the present time was so absorbed with this idea that she was ignorant of any other way of obtaining what she called grace, excepting by the use of means. She was like the woman of Samaria who went to the well to draw water.

I said to her, "Do you get rest and peace by this means?"

"Yes," she answered, "most assuredly I do."

"How long does it last?" I inquired.

"Oh, I do not know about that; I have to do it again and again, and keep on supplying myself."

"Exactly so," I replied, "that is what the Lord said to the woman at the well. "'If you drink of this water (which you draw) you will thirst again; but the water which I will give you shall be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life' (see John iv. 14)."

The lady made no reply, so I continued, "Are you really satisfied with this doing of yours?"

"Yes," she answered, "I am; there is a satisfaction in doing, which I could not have if I had nothing to do."

She was evidently struck with the difference between drawing water for herself, and receiving living water as an abiding gift from the Lord Himself.

Being an earnest soul, she was prejudiced in favour of her own views and practices; yet underneath there was something else which was stronger than her prejudices. She really desired the Lord's will more than her own, therefore she had no difficulty in asking for this living water.

The Lord, knowing her wants better than she did, opened her eyes to see herself a sinner. Hitherto, she had considered herself good, and religious, and was so regarded amongst her friends. But the Lord made no account of her religious exercises and self-denials.

When Saul of Tarsus was seeking for mercy, God said, "Behold he prayeth!" (Acts ix. 11), as if to imply that all his past prayers and prolonged exercises were nothing at all.

From the sorrows of conviction, this lady was brought to conversion with its consequent joy and thankfulness. She was now conscious of possessing something she never had before—something she had been wanting, though she did not know what it was. With this new experience, she said to herself, Now I know how to walk in liberty; but for all this, she went on depending upon her exercises—not for salvation this time, but for progress in her Christian life.

Again I reminded her of the difference between drawing from a well and receiving from a living person. I endeavoured to show her that we are not only justified by faith, but that the just live by faith also.

This was the hardest struggle of all. In her perplexity, instead of going direct to the Lord as she had done before for pardon, she went to a man who called himself a "priest of God." Dear man, he did not mean to mislead or deceive her, any more than he desired to deceive himself. This gentleman directed my friend, who was now on the threshold of spiritual liberty, to go back to deeper and closer vows of religious bondage and legality. He forbade her speaking to anyone about these matters, but bade her simply follow his directions.

Thus giving her conscience to be kept by another, she professed to have peace, and went on with her works of devotion. This was accounted the right thing.

The question may be asked, How could this lady, if she was really converted, fall back again to these "beggarly elements"? If she had never known the difference between the way of works and the way of faith, there might have been some excuse for her; but why should she take to crutches, when she might follow the Lord freely?

It is a very important thing to distinguish between spiritual death and religious grave-clothes. Because a person is brought out of one it does not follow that he or she is yet free from the other. Otherwise, the Lord would not have said, "Loose him, and let him go," to the people who saw the living Lazarus standing before them.

When converts go back to legality, we suppose that they were never really out of it; like those who go back from apparent conversion, we say, they were not really converted, "for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us" (1 John ii. 19).

How was it possible to get at this lady according to the Lord's command to loose her grave-clothes? She was so well guarded on every side, and so fortified against all comers by her spiritual director, that, humanly speaking, it was hopeless. But God knows how to deliver his own.

It pleased Him to lay her upon a bed of sickness, and there she occupied her time in reading the Bible. One morning she closed the book to meditate upon the words she had been reading, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. xi. 28—30). Who does this mean, she said to herself, if it is not me! Can Christ give me rest direct from Himself?

She came from "can Christ" to "Christ can," "Christ will;" "Christ has done it." Her eyes were opened, so was the door of her cage, and she flew out as a bird into liberty.

Now, she said to herself, as if she had never heard it before, "the just shall live by faith," not works.

She was right; works are on the other side of faith, the result and token that faith is living.

A tree does not live by bearing fruit; but bears fruit because it lives.

This lady was amazed at the simplicity of faith when once she had entered into it. She found out that the Lord's yoke was easy because He enabled her to bear it; and that his burden was light, for she loved to carry it.

Of course it followed that she was denounced as a fanatic, heretic, and so on; but this did not take away her peace or interrupt her joy.

Without loss of time she was sent adrift from the position which she occupied, lest she should contaminate other birds in that cage.

It was naturally a great struggle for her to tell me what she had passed through. However, she did this, and I could not help rejoicing at the marvellous manner in which the Lord Himself had delivered His child from bondage, and brought her to walk with Him in the liberty of God's children.

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

"THANK GOD FOR THE MISSION SHIP."

The following extract from the report of W. H. Shipp, chief mate of the Medical Mission Ship Euston, stationed with the North Sea Trawling Fleets, will be read with interest, as illustrating the work in which the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is continually engaged.

On the morning of Wednesday, July 25, the fishing smack Proceed ran down to the Euston with her flag flying half-mast, and on nearing the Mission ship the third hand shouted for us to go aboard as soon as possible for they had four men badly scalded through the bursting of the steam capstan boiler.

Our boat was immediately launched, and the skipper and myself with two hands put off to the Proceed, taking with us such remedies as were necessary. We found both the skipper and mate of the smack very dangerously injured, and two other men (the cook and deck hand) also scalded, but not so seriously. We at once set to work to dress their wounds with lint saturated in olive oil, we also used plenty of carbolised oil and vaseline, and when they were all bandaged we wrapped them up carefully in some rugs we had brought from the Mission ship.

Skipper Snell then returned to the Euston, leaving one of the crew to assist me in taking the Proceed into port. I started immediately for Yarmouth, having seventy miles to run W.S.W. from where the accident happened, and with a contrary wind. Remembering our blessed Lord's injunction to call upon Him in the day of trouble, the first thing I did was to pray that He would guide us safely, and spare the lives of the dear men, at all events till they reached the harbour. The poor fellows needed constant attention as they were quite helpless, and were continually crying for water; but they found great relief from my applying vaseline to their parched throats.

About 2 p.m. the skipper became much worse, and had to battle hard for his breath. The poor fellow looked up in my face in great agony, and seemed as if he were going mad. He turned round and made an attempt to go on deck, saying he would throw himself overboard. However, I was on my guard, watching every movement. The mate meanwhile had gone completely blind, and was also suffering terribly from scalded feet—for they were quite raw, also his hands, arms, and face; but the other two men, the cook and the deck hand, were not so bad.

Night came on, and an anxious night it was, which I shall never forget. The skipper turned to me in his terrible pain, and said, "I am dying; what shall I do, for I'm not prepared to die?" I just sat by his side and pointed him to the Lord Jesus, the Lamb of God; and, thank God, the poor man accepted the Gospel message, and received the Lord as his Saviour. All through the night, the groans and cries of the sufferers were heartrending, but the eye of God was upon us in the darkness, and at eight o'clock on Thursday, the 26th, we ran into Yarmouth, and at once transferred the injured men to the hospital. I stayed until after their wounds had been dressed, and while sitting alongside the skipper, he said to me, "I have just lifted my heart to God in thankfulness for his sparing me to reach home. I went out of port a blasphemer, and now I have returned a child of God. Thank God for the Mission ship."

Both the skipper and the mate of the Proceed have since succumbed to their injuries.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.—Dear Sir,—I am sure, now that the work amongst the children at our different seaside resorts has commenced, I may ask the earnest prayers of your readers that the Divine blessing may be abundantly poured out on workers and young people. Will our many friends make it also a matter of prayer that, if it be the Lord's will, fine weather may be vouchsafed throughout.—Yours faithfully, T. B. Bishop,

Hon. Sec. Children's Special Service Mission.

JESUS TAUGHT THE ATONEMENT.

The letter from "A Student" with reference to your article upon Dr. Marcus Dods's paper was clearly and conclusively answered by "The Writer of the Article." But there is a question arising out of it, which I deem it to be very important to have more clearly and definitely answered. The question is, Did the Lord Jesus during his ministry on earth teach the Atonement, or did He not?

It is a specious argument of many in the present day that our Lord did not teach this grand foundation truth, and that it was only the Apostles who afterwards enunciated it, not as giving the words of the Holy Ghost, but merely expressing their own ideas. We who know that the Apostles, like the prophets of old, spake and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, would not be touched by such an argument; but, as there are many who, in these days of conflicting thought, are more inclined to ask what man says than what God says, it is perhaps well to inquire whether the Lord did not teach the Atonement.

None but the most superficial of readers will fail to observe that the doctrine of the Atonement and the absolute need for it underlies the whole of our Lord's teaching; but the proclamation of it in its fulness was at that time bounded by two great limitations. The first, that the Atonement, although ordained of God, was not yet an accomplished fact. The second, that the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified (John vii. 39), and the disciples therefore had not their minds enlightened by Him to receive this truth. Our Lord Himself said to them in John xvi. 12, 13, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now, howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." The great error, of course, arises from not understanding that the teaching of our Lord upon earth was only part of a great whole which is revealed to us in Scripture. During the earlier period of our Lord's ministry one great purpose appears to have been, to teach them the intense spirituality and holiness of the law, which the Jews imagined, like the young ruler, they kept; of which they boasted themselves, and of which the Scribes and Pharisees were regarded as the exponents and examples. They had to learn, therefore that unless their righteousness exceeded the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, they could in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven.

The teachers of whom we write are fain to speak of "the Sermon on the Mount," as if it contained the whole of Christ's teaching, and they fail to see that Jesus in that marvellous discourse held up a Divine mirror which shows the utter failure of every man to keep the law. No living man except the Lord Himself could ever honestly compare himself with that "sermon," without seeing how very far short he comes of the glory of God, and how absolutely necessary it is that an atonement be made for him if he is ever to see God. The Saviour had then to teach his disciples who He was; veiled in the flesh, it was difficult for them to grasp the thought that He was other than a great "teacher sent from God"; and at last, when He put the question to them, "Whom say ye that I am?" and Peter replied, "Thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God," the Lord immediately said to him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

It is remarkable that we read in reference to this (Matt. xvi. 21) that, "from that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how He must go unto Jerusalem and suffer many things and be killed, and be raised again the third day." Did the disciples then understand it? No; even Peter began to rebuke Him, saying, "Far be it from Thee, Lord, this shall not be unto Thee," and he received our Lord's severe rebuke. This shows how difficult it was for the disciples at that time to get rid of their old prejudices and take in the truths the Saviour taught them. Yet again and again He spoke of the Atonement in unmistakable language, for instance, in Matthew xx. 28, "The Son of Man came...to give his life a ransom for many"; is not this substitution in the clearest language? and again John x. 11, "I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep," also vv. 17, 18; besides, the unmistakable meaning of his words in instituting the Lord's Supper, "My body which is broken for you"; "This cup is the new covenant in my blood, which is shed for you."

Then what has become of the Lord's promise, already referred to, of the Spirit of truth to guide them into all truth, if the Apostles never received that Spirit, and were not guided by Him into all truth? His promise in that case has failed, and Pentecost is a fable.

Moreover, if the Lord did not die as an atonement for sin, what was the reason of his death? Death is the wages of sin, and but for sin, so far as we know, no son of God could suffer death. Jesus, therefore, must either Himself have been a sinner, or He must have borne the sins of others; and they who deny the Atonement, either charge the Lord with sin, or charge God with the commission of the most stupendous crime; for Calvary would have been an outrage upon God's most holy law, instead of its vindication; and the righteous Judge of all the earth would be chargeable with permitting the violation; while Christ's laying down his own life would not be an act of self-sacrifice, as they call it, but of self-immolation, only greater in degree than the folly and sin of the poor Hindoo who immolates himself beneath the car of Juggernaut. "ANGLO-BURMAN MORALITY."

This is the title of an article in a recent issue of The Rangoon Times, in which attention is drawn to a shocking result of the desertion by Englishmen of their offspring by Burmese mothers. It is stated that "there are some Europeans in Burmah who seem to think that discarding the mother, cancels any obligation they are under to the children," and hence these unions, "now so indiscriminately formed," will, in course of time, result in the ranks of vice and crime being swelled by numbers of neglected and uneducated children.

With much force it is argued that if legal or other measures cannot be adopted to remedy this state of things, "so-called Christian society might endeavour in a much greater degree than it now does, to punish the wrong-doer, and assist the innocent who has been wronged." The mode of bringing pressure to bear is thus indicated: "If such a man were ostracised by decent society, if Europeans refused to associate with him, and European ladies refused to speak to him (instead of receiving him into their houses with open arms, and, knowing him already to have formed a union with another woman, according to her ideas of matrimony, being quite ready, if he breaks off the connection, to marry him themselves), we might, perhaps, hope, not that these unions would cease altogether, but that, at any rate, the neglect of offspring would not take place so often as it now does." It is further suggested that in case of wife-desertion, there should be some means of compelling, not only mere maintenance, but a proper education of the children.

THE LONDON TRAM-CAR SCRIPTURE TEXT MISSION has put its hand to an excellent work, but through lack of funds it makes only slow progress. Thus far Scripture texts have not been put up in more than a hundred trams, which is only about one in every hundred running the streets of London. The office of the Mission is 53, Paternoster-row, E.C., and Mrs. E. S. Wood is the hon. secretary.

GOD EVER NEAREST.

O Father of comfort and peace divine,
I rest my soul on thy loving care,
And bow in faith at thy holy shrine,
For the help I find so often there.
When the arrow of grief, with poignant dart,
Shot into the depths where none could see,
The sorrow and anguish of mind and heart
Were never so near as Thou to me.

When the tempter came, with his subtle smile,
To lure me on in his slippery way;
And I left thy side for a little while,
In paths of danger and sin to stray:
Thy hand was laid on my wandering head,
Thy guarding shadow fell over me,
And all that the tempter did and said
Could never divorce my soul from Thee.

When my faith was tried as a precious thing,
In fire so fierce as to well-nigh burn;
When its trusting power seemed on the wing,
And its morning beauty upon the turn:
The scorching heat to the golden ore,
The driving wind o'er the stormy sea,
The waves that lashed on the lonely shore,
Were never so near as Thou to me.

When pain was racking my weary frame,
And suffering seemed my portion here;
When peace and rest were the thought and name
Of something enjoyed in the past so dear:
When the aching sense of a constant strain
Not even my Father's hand could see;
The murmuring thoughts of my active brain
Were never so near as Thou to me.

O Father of love and of life below,
Bend down thine ear to my feeble cry;
Let never my wayward footsteps go
In paths where so many have gone to die;
But bind me close to thy sheltering side,
And whisper, "No matter what else may be,
No sorrow or trial shall e'er betide,
But I shall be nearer still to Thee."

CITY WORK GIRLS.

For many years now Mrs. Fisher has carried on her important work in London. Having its inception in connection with the noon prayer-meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, it has ever been carried on in the spirit of faith, and hope, and love. Love has constrained, hope has sustained, and faith has obtained the promised blessings.

Remarkable testimonies have from time to time been given of the spiritual good attending this service among young women. God has abundantly blessed the Gospel services in the workrooms, and the meetings and classes held daily in "The Welcome" and the Lecture Hall. Mrs. Fisher will be glad to forward to any friends a little book, "Saved by Christ alone," giving an account of a girl converted through the dinner service nearly eight years ago. The results of that conversion show what "a factory girl," as she calls herself, can do with her spare moments.

Mrs. Fisher is anxious to be able to send some sick and weary ones away for rest and change, and also to give some hundreds a few hours fresh air at Crohamhurst on August 18. Many kind friends will be glad to be reminded of this opportunity to share in the blessing which is sure to follow what is done in the Master's name. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Fisher, The Welcome, Crosskey-square, Little Britain, E.C.

POLICE AND RAILWAY MEN.—The Railway Signal announces that a lady, who has for some years carried on a Convalescent Home at the seaside, has now made a present of her Home to the Railway Mission and the Christian Police Association jointly, for the benefit of men needing rest and a change of air. All communications respecting the Home should be addressed to the secretary of the Railway Mission, 18, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

For the Young.

SPOTLESS ROBES.

"There shall in no wise enter into it (heaven) anything that defileth."—Rev. xxi. 27.

What simple and yet what solemn words are these! What do they mean? This, dear boys and girls: that no one, old or young, whose sin has not been washed away in the "precious blood of the Lamb" can have any right to enter that golden city. We often sing—

There is a city bright,
  Closed are its gates to sin,
Nought that defileth
  Can ever enter in;

but I wonder how many of us have so realised and understood the truth of what we have sung, that we have gone on to sing and to pray—

Saviour, I come to Thee,
  O Lamb of God, I pray,
Cleanse me and save me,
  Wash all my sins away.

Let me tell you a true story, which will help you all to understand this more clearly.

"Children," said a Sunday-school teacher to her class, one September afternoon, at the close of school, "would you like to spend next Saturday afternoon in my orchard, and have tea with me afterwards?"

Of course they would. What boy or girl would have said "No" to such a question? and what boy or girl who knew this particular orchard would have said "No"? Such abundance of golden fruit! Such wonderful hiding-places in the shrubbery! Such a happy afternoon, and such a delightful tea to finish up with! The reply to the question was a delighted "Yes!" from all in the class. "Very well then," said the teacher, you may all be at the orchard by three o'clock next Saturday afternoon; but," she continued, "I am going to make a condition this time, which, all who wish to enter the orchard must observe."

"A condition, teacher?" and there was a look of surprise on many faces. There had never been any conditions before about her invitations, and some wondered greatly what was coming.

"Yes, children," she went on, "I am going to make this condition; that no boy or girl shall be allowed to come into the orchard who has not on a spotless white pinafore. It must be really spotless, there must be no mark or stain of any sort upon it, not even a mark of iron-mould. My gardener will be at the gate to examine each boy and girl as they enter, and those who fail in this particular will not be admitted, but will be sent home again."

The children listened wonderingly, but were glad the condition was no harder. What easier than for mother to send them from home on Saturday afternoon in white pinafores? They would take care not to soil them in that two-mile walk from their village to the "Great House." But what did teacher mean, why was she so strict about the pinafores being so perfectly white? Many were the questions asked of father and mother during the week that was to pass before the day arrived to which all so eagerly looked forward. But even they could only guess and suppose, and so it came to pass, that when on Saturday afternoon fifteen little lads and lasses, with beaming faces, joyful hearts, and pinafores—thanks to mothers' care—spotlessly white, set forth on their road to the orchard, the unanswered question in every little mind was, "What does teacher mean?"

The village in which the little ones lived was, as we have said, two miles from the orchard, and nearly the whole of the way lay through a narrow country lane, bordered on either side by hedges and brambles. In the company there were two little boys, Willy and Harry and their little sister Mary, she walking in advance with other girls, and the brothers following by themselves.

"Willy," whispered Harry to his brother, after a time; "Willy, how nice those blackberries look on the hedge. I should like a few!" and Willy agreeing in the proposal to pluck some, the two waited until the rest of the children were some way in advance, and then carried their wish into execution.

Slowly they walked eating the luscious berries, when Mary, with whom they had now come up, turning round and seeing Harry in the act of conveying one to his mouth, cried out: "Oh, you naughty boy! you'll stain your pinafore." His sister's exclamation startled him, and the berry fell from his fingers, staining with a deep stain the spotless pinafore.

Here was a catastrophe! What was to be done? Teacher had been so very strict about stains or spots, and here was one, deep, black, and large. The first thought was to turn the disfigured garment, but the stain was found to have gone right through, and was as bad on one side as the other. At length Mary bethought her of a plan by which she hoped her brother would be able to avoid discovery. It was that he should roll up the pinafore, and hold the disfigured portion under his arm out of sight.

The children had now reached the orchard. There, sure enough, stood the gardener at the gate, and as each child entered a careful inspection of each was made. All were allowed to pass until it came to Harry's turn, who was the last of the number. When the gardener saw the guilty-looking boy standing before him with the pinafore rolled up in so suspicious a manner he asked him why he was holding it so. The boy stammered out some excuse, whereupon he sharply bade him let it hang down. The whole matter was apparent now; the gardener shut the gate against him, and whilst the rest of the children were entering joyfully upon their happy afternoon, a little weeping and shamefaced boy slowly returned to the village from which he had set out so merrily an hour since.

When the children were all gathered round the tea table that afternoon, after such a romping delightful time in the orchard, the teacher said, "I dare say you all wonder very much why I was so particular about your coming here to-day in spotless white pinafores, and why I was so harsh in telling my gardener not to admit anyone whose pinafore was in the least soiled or stained." "Yes, teacher, we do," from all. "Well then, I will tell you," she went on, and her voice grew very grave and earnest. "I wanted by this means to teach you a lesson which I have often tried to bring home to you at Sunday-school in the class. Just in the same way as no child was allowed to enter the orchard this afternoon who had one mark or spot upon his pinafore, so at last no child will be allowed to pass through the pearly gates of heaven who has one spot of unforgiven sin upon his soul."

Dear boys and girls, this is true. The teacher said "one spot of unforgiven sin," but we have many, many dark spots and stains of sin upon our souls, all of which must be forgiven and blotted out if we are to enter that "city bright." Oh, that we might all take the other verses of that little hymn, which I spoke of at the beginning, and pray—

Lord, make me from this hour
  Thy loving child to be;
Kept by Thy power
  From all that grieveth Thee;
Till in the snowy dress
  Of thy redeemed I stand,
Faultless and stainless,
  Safe in that happy land.

MRS. HOWELLS' WORK IN TEXAS.

Among the numerous English emigrants who went to Texas about eighteen years ago was a newly married couple, named Howells, earnest and active servants of Christ. Such, however, were the disastrous effects of the climate and the conditions of labour that many of those poor people died within a few months after arrival, Mr. Howells among the number. His young widow, unlike others who were similarly bereaved, did not return to England. Her heart had been touched by the condition of the people around her, especially the negroes and their children, and she gave herself to the work of teaching the young and preaching the Gospel. Alone, without means, receiving little sympathy or help from any human source, exposed to much trial and meeting with many obstacles, and even dangers, she saw that she was needed where she was, and has laboured on, year after year, patiently sowing the good seed upon ground harder and thornier than most, until in due time the fruit appeared. In a recent letter, referring to those earlier days, she writes:—

"Quite a number of the young people who have lived with me are doing well, some teaching and some preaching. I feel thankful to the Lord that He has blessed my efforts amidst the struggles and conflicts."

For many years Mrs. Howells maintained herself and the children whom she sheltered and taught, by the labour of her hands and the produce of a small piece of ground and a few cattle, at the same time preaching the Gospel freely wherever she found opportunity. Recently a wider sphere of usefulness has been opened to her. Some preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Howells is a member, bought fifty acres of land near Houston for an orphanage, and requested her to take up the work, which she did. This gave arduous labour which was augmented by the necessity of raising funds as well, by travelling and in other ways, the lady travelling sixteen hundred miles in the course of last year.

In the same letter she says: "I have been requested to take nearly forty children. As soon as I can get the few debts paid off, and the land paid for, I can begin to teach, as there is a large shed near that I can use as a school-house. The audiences vary from a few to two or three hundred." Thus the entire burden, not only of organising the Orphanage, but of collecting funds to pay for the land and buildings, rests upon Mrs. Howells. Her address is: Harrisburg P.O., Harris County, Texas, U.S.A.

Y.M.C.A.—The North-Western Conference was held a few days ago at Ambleside, and attended by delegates from the eight Associations in the district, as well as other friends. Mr. James Cropper presided over the meetings, which were addressed by Mr. Hind Smith, of London, and Mr. T. Jameson, of Liverpool.

The Scottish Missionary Crusade.

THE DELEGATES AT STRATHPEFFER.

Strathpeffer is the favourite Spa of the far north—the Saratoga of Scotland. It nestles prettily among the Ross-shire hills, and the chalybeate waters are reputed to have great—almost miraculous—healing and medicinal properties. Thither resort many invalids from all parts of the country; and not a few who, without being invalids, are in search of varied society, good scenery, and bracing mountain air. The Free Church of Scotland has recently built a fine new church; it is the custom for some of its ministers to make holiday there in turn, and, at the same time, to minister in things spiritual at the daily prayer-meeting for patients and visitors. The officiating minister for the current month is the popular Edinburgh pastor, Rev. John McNeill.

A meeting was arranged for Tuesday last week, and the missionary deputation went up from Inverness to deliver their message to the strangers at "the Strath." Mr. McNeill presided at 11 o'clock; in briefly introducing the speakers, he said there was a popular belief that no meeting in Strathpeffer could be kept together after 12 o'clock; he would like to see the contrary proved. Though the sojourners might be thinking of "the well," the real interest was up there at the meeting, where they would hear of the wells of salvation. He certainly was right, for it would scarcely be possible to conceive of more intensely impressive addresses than were delivered to a company, not over large, but deeply interested.

A SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

Dr. Pierson took the stand, switch in hand, and, with the aid of a fine missionary map, gave a wonderful object-lesson in modern missions. He seemed to sweep the whole horizon of Gospel effort, among the heathen, and poured forth a perfect flood of fact and figure, bearing on the subject of the world's evangelisation. The map, we may say, is a replica of one belonging to Mr. Blackstone, of Chicago, and represents the prevailing religions of the world. Protestantism is portrayed in yellow. The scarlet shade covers the countries that own the sway of the "Scarlet Lady" of Rome. Mohammedan lands are arrayed in green; brown is the livery of the Greek Church; and dark colours of varying grades represent the different Pagan and heathen peoples. Stripes on the prevailing background indicate the interlacing of beliefs. By this ingenious method of representation the eye is called in to assist the ear and the mind, in comprehending the present religious or irreligious relations of "all people that on earth do dwell." Dr. Pierson called special attention to "God's strategy in preparing the world for its speedy evangelisation by the hosts of the Christian Church." He has taken centuries upon centuries to prepare for this conquest of the world, and, if the Church will fall in with God's far-reaching plan, the work may be accomplished in this generation. We may see even in the Mohammedan system a paving of the way for Christianity. It is a monotheistic faith, and has one great sacred book, which, by its own provisions, is not to be translated. Every educated follower of Mohammed must, therefore, learn Arabic, thus preparing the way for the understanding of one Arabic version of the Bible throughout the Mohammedan world. Dr. Pierson next considered how the centre of the Asiatic world lies in India, and how the course of events has put India under the rule of a great Protestant nation. The water highway to India has to be kept open, and, therefore, great Britain has secured the friendly neutrality of those nations that skirt her Eastern route, and with it the liberty to preach the Gospel. The course of the Plymouth Pilgrims from England to America was traced, and the founding of a Christian and Protestant State in America. Then an American, Commodore Perry, was instrumental, by treaty, in opening Japan, which for centuries had been closed to Christian civilisation. Passing to Africa, Dr. Pierson briefly but succinctly outlined the wonderful march of events, through Moffat, Livingstone, Stanley, &c., in penetrating the darkness of that continent, and throwing it open to the labours of so many Gospel missionaries from England and America. As to South America, it has become so disgusted with the superstitions and oppressions of the Romish system that the nations are ready to welcome the pure Gospel. The great Roman Catholic nations in Europe, too, are throwing off the bitter yoke of the Papacy, and are opening in a marvellous manner to the preachers of the reformed faith. The McAll Mission in France is one of the most remarkable movements even of modern times. Thus we find that God has been preparing the world for centuries for the present crisis. If the Church does not speedily fall in with God's manifest design, she will be left hopelessly in the rear. We talk of an aroused Church; why, she is only beginning to rub her eyes. She devotes a comparatively insignificant amount of men and money to the great cause. Instead of six thousand white missionaries, and ten millions of dollars yearly spent on missions, there ought to be at least a hundred thousand missionaries and an annual disbursement of a thousand millions of dollars for the extension of God's cause. Let the Church arise in the might of her great Captain, and seize the present favourable opportunity for this work, that God has so plainly provided; then before the century has rung out the old and rung in the new, every creature on the face of the globe may have received a knowledge of the crucified and risen Christ.

followed in the same interesting line of remark. He spoke of the indebtedness of the nations, and specially of America, to Scotland. Referring to a recent visit to Iona, he recalled the wonderful devotion of St. Columba, who formed in Scotland the pure Church that was re-formed by John Knox and his compeers. Another link in the connection between Scotland and America. It was the Presbyterian Church of the former that supported David Brainerd, who did such a wonderful work among the American Indians, and who may be called the father of modern missions. Brainerd's journals, published by Jonathan Edwards, were the means of making William Carey into a missionary to India. The same journals moved Henry Martyn to consecrate himself to the work.

Taking up the thread of Dr. Pierson's remarks with reference to the Dark Continent, Dr. Gordon spoke of the inception of the slave trade between Africa and the American Continent. In 1565 a slave ship, with 400 negroes, captured along the West African Coast, carried these to America, and they formed the seed of the great negro race of the New Continent. The name of the ship, singularly enough, was the Jesus. Three hundred years later, by a stroke of his pen, Abraham Lincoln freed that vast community of bondmen, and now we see them being educated and elevated, in order that they may be the future missionaries to the coloured races of the land whence they sprang. There is no people on the face of the earth who are being so thoroughly Christianised as the Africans of America. So the ship Jesus is about to make its return voyage. From the African race Dr. Gordon passed to the Japanese and the Chinese, and told how these vast peoples are being brought within the scope of Gospel effort. He had some striking things to say about the devotion and self-sacrifice of Chinese converts. A Chinese came across to California, and was converted in a mission school there. He began to think about his friends, and greatly desired to do something to bring the Gospel to them. He actually sold himself as a galley slave, and began to preach the Gospel to his countrymen who land on the shores of America. He had planted a church, and had been the means of bringing to Christ more than two hundred Chinese before he died. Who will say that the days of heroic missionary effort have passed away? Referring to Papal countries, Dr. Gordon spoke of the wonderful increase of facilities in the spread of the Word of God throughout Europe, and the readiness to receive the Scriptures, as shown by the rapid circulation of Lasserre's translation of the New Testament in France, before it was tabooed by the Papal authorities.

One of Dr. Gordon's favourite themes in connection with the work of missions is that of systematic giving. He seldom fails to comment upon it, and evidently counts it one of deep importance as a factor in promoting the evangelisation of the world. As to the action of his own congregation in Boston, he gave some very interesting particulars. In America, he said, they are accustomed to have expensive choirs. He had succeeded in introducing congregational singing as a feature of his church, thus diverting the two thousand dollars paid to musical artistes into the treasury of foreign missions. Then he wanted to change the proportion of gifts from the church as between home and foreign work. Formerly they used to give three thousand dollars to missions, while spending ten thousand on the home work. Every Sunday morning regularly there is now an offering for missions: it is a part of their worship. Last year they had reduced the home expenses to eight thousand dollars, while the contributions for foreign effort had risen to thirteen thousand. If every church and congregation would take this matter up, great things might be done in making provision for sending the Gospel to the heathen. In America there is a League, the members of which pledge themselves to give one-tenth of their income to missions. It is regarded as the Lord's money, consecrated to his service, and they would no more think of appropriating it to merely personal uses than they would think of picking a neighbour's pocket. Dr. Gordon told the story of the career of Mr. Samuel Colgate, who went to New York as a poor young lad from Scotland. He met a Quaker, who advised him first to go into the soap trade, and next to give a tithe of his earnings to God. He followed both pieces of advice; he became the great soapmaker of New York, and one of its merchant princes. His name is had in fragrant remembrance to-day as one of the most generous givers in the Lord's cause. It has been found by the members of the Systematic Giving League of America that they not only prosper in business matters but are wonderfully renewed and blessed in their spiritual life.

CHINA AND AFRICA.

In beginning one of her touchingly simple and pathetic talks on mission work in China, Mrs. Stott told how she had been led to adopt the plan of systematic giving to God's cause; even in times of great personal need she had been enabled to adhere to this plan, and God had greatly honoured her desire to carry it out. The systematic method she believed to be far the best, as it relieves one from all care and anxiety in the matter. She went on to tell some of her missionary experiences in the province of Cheh-kiang, in carrying the Gospel to the people. Visitation among the outlying villages is a very interesting part of the work carried on by her husband and herself, and they are greatly encouraged in it. As the fruit of their labours they have now about 300 professed and baptized Christians, besides 300 more under regular instruction. The cry is for more labourers. "I am not nearly so concerned about the money as about the right kind of men and women. If they are sent out, God will see that their needs are supplied, even if it be done through the heathen themselves. Let every Christian see that he does his share in sending forth consecrated workers to carry the light into the dark places of the earth.

Rev. J. Scott completed the circle of testimony by some very encouraging details respecting work among the Zulus of Natal. It is not yet forty-five years since mission work was begun among the Zulus. Now the whole Bible has been translated into their language. There are nearly 10,000 church members among them, with 50,000 or 60,000 under the influence of Gospel teaching. That cannot be called "funereal" progress, despite the writer of the article in The Times. Yet the fringe of African missions has scarcely been touched. There are 1000 languages on the Continent into which the Scriptures have to be translated and published. Africa is calling for the Gospel; who will take or send it to her?

A WOMEN'S MEETING AT NAIRN.

During the missionary tour excellent service has been rendered to the cause by the earnest womanly words of Mrs. Stott and Mrs. Gordon addressed to gatherings of women at Inverness and Nairn. Of the former meeting I made brief mention in my last week's report. A fuller account of the addresses at Nairn on Wednesday afternoon, last week, will, I am sure, be acceptable to your readers.

beginning with a touch of personal experience, told how she had been led, several years ago, to place herself entirely in the Lord's hands for service, willing even to be a fool for Christ's sake. She had found it to be a pathway of unspeakable blessing. She said she had found during her journeyings about Scotland a great holding back among Christian women in the matter of public service for Christ. Her experience was that it needed about as much humility to take a place on the platform as to sit on a back seat. The great thing for a Christian woman is to ascertain what the Lord would have her do, and then be sure He would give grace to do it. When we consider what the Gospel has done in Christian lands for woman, surely she ought to be diligent in seeking to secure like advantages for her sisters in heathen lands. The Gospel everywhere has the same elevating effect; it takes women out of barbarism and out of self, and sets them in their right mind at the feet of Jesus. We cannot distinguish between home and foreign work, except to note how the one grows out of the other. It was not only the Apostles to whom the first great commission was directed; all the disciples, brethren and sisters alike, went everywhere preaching the word. The first mission that Jesus gave after his resurrection was to Mary—Go tell the brethren that I have risen. When the disciples were gathered in one place the Holy Spirit fell on them all without discrimination. In Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Him. It took the Jewish Christians a long while to realise that their brethren were to be on the same equality with them under the Gospel. How long also it took to convince even professing Christian nations that it is a sin for one man to enslave his brother man, and that both black and white stand on a common platform in the eye of God. Now we are learning that sex distinctions in Christian faith and service are as opposed to God's plan as race distinctions and caste distinctions. Let us, sisters, give ourselves to the Lord for any work to which He may call us.

Mrs. Gordon went on to tell how, when she returned to Boston from one of the Northfield Conferences, the Lord seemed to press on her the duty of witnessing for Him in public. She shrank from it, but God gave her grace and strength to obey the call. Since then He had enabled her to testify many times before great congregations, though it is always a trial to the flesh. Her favourite motto text is now "Ready to do whatever the Lord my King shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). This text she amplified in a suggestive and most instructive way. Let us be ready, she said, for all kinds of work, whether it be nearer our own homes or in the far-off fields of the world. Does it not seem as if God in these days were "calling out the reserves"—the great army of godly women. Think how He is preparing us by increased education; by all sorts of labour-saving appliances, which give us more leisure from household cares. Christian women number more than two-thirds of our Church membership. They have been honoured to do much for God. In the recent Missionary Conference in London, twenty-two women's societies in the United States and Canada were represented, besides twelve such societies in Great Britain. So we are hearing the call, "Rise up, ye daughters that are at ease, the Lord hath need of you."

has supplied, in these meetings, the practical element of woman's work in the foreign field, with much womanly grace and pathetic earnestness. Nothing has been enjoyed more than her simple recitals of Gospel effort among Chinese women. To her sisters at Nairn she first spoke a few words concerning the China Inland Mission, with which she and her husband have been so long associated. It seeks to honour God by sending out men and women whose hearts are wholly consecrated to Him, without any respect to social position, and without insisting on any high standard of education. It never appeals for money, but trusts God to meet all its needs. It has been found from experience that men and women with only a plain English education, but with hearts set on fire with love to Christ and to souls, may go forth to China and do noble work for Him, in carrying the Gospel to the perishing millions of that vast country. They have won many to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. In that land God needs all kinds of labourers. She and her husband could speak from ample experience of God's faithfulness, and could truly say that they had lacked no good thing. Her own time had been largely taken up in training girls, so as to fit them for service as wives in Christian Chinese homes, but she had been able to do a good deal of work besides among Chinese women. In the winter season especially, it is possible to take trips here and there among the villages. She had done this as a sort of holiday, though it involved plenty of work. But nobody ever dies of hard work; take the worry out of your work, and you may work as hard as you like. Sometimes, after months of steady labour in connection with the girls' school, she felt as if she could go on no longer. Then she would go into some of the country villages, speaking two or three times a day. After a week or ten days of such itinerating work, she would come back to her station as much refreshed as if she had had a month's holiday. Mrs. Stott gave a most interesting account of some of these village tours. She told of one instance in which she had met with some professional beggars, and lodged in their very humble and primitive place of abode, consisting of a mud hut of one compartment. The power of God was wonderfully shown among them, particularly in the case of a young man, a victim to the opium pipe. He was encouraged to seek the help of God in fighting this terrible foe, and in that strength he prevailed. He became a true Christian, and for many years has worked honestly with his hands, having lost all desire for the fatal drug. Mrs. Stott also spoke of the many trials to which the native converts are subjected by the persecution of their friends. One woman whose son had been converted declared that he had "gone to the bad with holiness," so marked was the change in his life. Christianity takes a deep hold on the hearts of the people when they yield to its power. A man was greatly incensed with his Christian wife, because the villagers had taunted him about her conversion. He could not endure their scorn. One day he rushed into the house, and, taking up a rope and a knife, told her to choose by which of the two she would die. The husbands in China have complete power over their wives. Calmly trusting in God, she replied that if it was his will she should die he must decide the mode himself. She said sh could not give up her faith; she must love an serve Jesus, who had forgiven her sins. Sh added, however, that she had not been a wors wife to him since she became a Christian; wh did she deserve to be killed? He was touche by her plea, and stayed his hand? The met and prayed for him. He was himself led t embrace the Christian faith, and now for severa years he has been a consistent Christian, casting in his lot with the followers of Jesus Chris The native Christian women, with Mrs. Stott formed a prayer-meeting to plead with God fo the conversion of their husbands and children during the past seven years God has answere these earnest petitions, and at least eight husbands and twelve children have been converted God loves to be tested, but we must see that w fulfil the conditions He lays down. Hardly an of his promises are unconditional. "Open th mouth wide, and I will fill it." We do not ope our mouth wide; we merely open our lips an keep our teeth closed; yet we wonder that ou mouths are not filled. "In due season ye shal reap, if ye faint not." How often we faint before the time comes for the answer; so th Lord does not give us to reap. Mrs. Stott, i closing her most touching and practica address, told of the spirit of giving for th cause of God that prevails among the poo native Christian women, and which enable them to support workers. One woman to whom some property was left, voluntarily relinquishe it, because she could have received it onl on condition of keeping up the system o ancestral worship. She visited her relatives and took the opportunity, for several days, o preaching the Gospel to them. They took advantage of her fidelity to Christ, and only gave her a tenth of what she was entitled to. Yet of that pittance she gave one half at once to the cause of Christ as a thankoffering. How is it, asked Mrs. Stott, that in my dear native Scotland we find so many professing faith in the Lord, and yet there is no power in their lives? Is it not because there is no whole-hearted consecration to his service? What a responsibility we have for the light that so brightly shines around us! If God calls any sisters to the foreign field, let them gladly go forth. It is the most glorious work to be found in the wide world. Instead of China being a dry and thirsty land, we find Jesus Christ to be there a very well-spring in the desert. We would not exchange our position with that of any in the loveliest parts of Scotland. We find the Lord to be to us out there much better even than his word.

A general meeting was held in the Nairn public hall on Wednesday evening, when the delegates gave addresses. Alluding to a remark by the chairman (Rev. G. K. Heughan), Dr. Pierson said he feared that lack of interest in missions indicated a lack of life in the soul. He proceeded, in his most impressive way, to describe, with the help of the missionary map, the darkness and cruelty and vileness of heathendom, in order to show the great need there is for mission effort. Dr. Gordon pointed out some of the bright spots on the globe where the Gospel has achieved some of its remarkable triumphs. Mr. Scott retold the tale of transformed lives among the once savage Zulus, and Mrs. Stott again expatiated on her much-loved work on behalf of China's millions. A new voice was heard in some interesting words from Mr. Campbell White, of Glasgow, who is at present sojourning in Nairn. He said the striking facts and figures placed before them could not fail to produce greater zeal and consecration, not only in work at home but in furthering the spread of the Gospel message to the ends of the earth. The meeting was one of much interest throughout, and, with that of the afternoon, must surely leave its mark on the Church life of this popular seaside resort—the so-called "Brighton of the North."

The following day (Thursday) was an open day, so far as any pre-arranged public meeting was concerned. Through the kindness of Mr. Campbell White, the delegation, with some other friends, were treated to a very enjoyable excursion to the unsurpassed river scenery of the river Findhorn. Mrs. Stewart, of Logie, provided a refreshing luncheon at her beautiful country home, where a short Bible-reading service was conducted by Dr. Gordon. The weather was lovely, and altogether the day was greatly enjoyed by the deputation and their companions. For the evening, a meeting at Forres was hurriedly arranged. This was well attended, and was addressed by Dr. Pierson and Rev. J. Scott. At Nairn an open-air Gospel service was held on the links, Mr. Campbell White presiding. Mrs. Stott spoke for a little while to the children, and Dr. Gordon, as well as the chairman, gave Gospel addresses. Thus the day of recreation was also one of earnest service and testimony. The visit of the American and other friends to Nairn will be long and happily remembered.

THE DELEGATES AT ELGIN.

The meeting at this quiet, prettily situated Morayshire town was one of the best of the series. Though no very special efforts at publicity were apparent, a considerable interest must have been awakened, for the Evangelistic Hall was well filled on Friday evening. The season of the year, when many local friends are scattered abroad seeking rest or recreation, has somewhat hindered the success of these meetings. At Elgin there was a fair muster of pastors, and two visitors were present well known in London religious circles—Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, and Mr. Robert Paton. Mr. Mathieson presided. In introducing the American brethren, he urged that the best way to advance God's work abroad is to have a revival of religion at home. As usual was the first to address the assembly. Discarding the map on this occasion, he said that this missionary movement appeared to him to grow more solemn as it proceeded. The profound interest shown everywhere indicates that God is about to work mightily in this land of martyrs, and to produce impressions that will not be effaced. The Doctor addressed himself to an examination of the question as to whether the Gospel can be proclaimed through all the unevangelised parts of the globe before the sands of the present century have run out. He did not mean the conversion of the world within this brief space; indeed it is God alone who can effect the conversion of a single soul. What we as Christians have to do is to bring the Gospel message into contact with men, and leave God to do the rest. To those who might think the evangelisation of the dark places of the earth in twelve years an impossible task, Dr. Pierson recalled the rapidity with which the second edict of Ahasuerus relating to the safety of the Jewish people was spread abroad through all the lands in which they then resided. It was a territory some two thousand miles long by one thousand miles broad, and comprised one-twelfth part of the habitable land of the Eastern hemisphere. Though the message had to be laboriously transcribed into the different tongues, and could only be carried on horses or mules, it was made known in all that wide region in the space of nine months. Surely, with our perfected facilities of travel, with our printing presses, our postal and telegraph arrangements, and with the great array of messengers now to be had for such a service, we could accomplish this business in twelve times that space, say nine years, leaving three years as a margin for contingencies before the century expired. As to the material means for carrying out this scheme, Dr. Pierson referred to the vast wealth stored up in the hands of the Christian Church. He qualified a statement made by Dr. Gordon at a previous meeting about American Christians being possessors of seven billions of money; a billion with them, he said, is not a million million, but a thousand million. As to the limits of time, he declared that the first command to evangelise the whole world is not to be obeyed once for all. The true interpretation is that every generation of believers ought to evangelise those of their own generation. In Apostolic times the then known world appears to have been divided, and the different Apostles with others applied their efforts to different sections. Paul and Barnabas took up the Gentile or Western world; Peter and James cared for the tribes of Israel scattered about. Peter went to Babylon. Paul directed his steps to Antioch, Cyprus, Asia Minor, Macedonia, Greece, Italy, most probably to Spain, and possibly to the shores of Britain. Why did all this evangelistic zeal come to a close? When the Emperor Constantine professed to become a Christian, and took the new faith under his patronage, the believers began to think the Millennium had come. Zeal and self-denial declined; the Church and the world became intermingled, so that they could hardly be distinguished. So evangelical faith died out, and aggressive effort disappeared; so that what we call "the dark ages" intervened, and lasted a thousand years. Christianity almost disappeared from the face of the earth. By and by there came the days of Luther, the great reformer; but, unhappily, he did not revive the Apostolic methods of evangelisation The world had to wait three centuries longer before the revived Church awoke to the idea that she had a heavy responsibility towards the unsaved multitudes throughout the world. When missions to the heathen were mooted, a century ago, even the Scottish divines, slow to admit what they deemed an "innovation," regarded the idea as fanatical and absurd. Thank God, their successors now are becoming earnest and zealous in the work.

In pressing home to a practical issue these first principles of God's design with regard to the salvation of the world. Dr. Pierson said that as for himself he was ready to take any position in the furtherance of this great purpose, if God should make the matter clear. It is a business that must be done promptly, if we of this generation are to bear our part. Think of the awful and endless procession of human souls passing into eternity without a knowledge of God and of his Christ. Dr. Pierson again referred to the marvellous vantage ground occupied by Great Britain and America, and the facilities they possess for pushing on this great enterprise to a right conclusion. The Church of Christ ought to arise in her might, and say, the thing can and will be done. Would that many of the pastors might so feel the urgency of the work that they could not retain the home pulpits and parishes of this highly favoured land, but should go to the spiritually destitute parts of the earth with the healing and uplifting message they possess; choosing the fields where are the fewest labourers and the deepest need. There is scarcely any so-called "sacrifice" now in going to distant lands, as these have been mostly permeated with the advantages of our Christian civilisation. What a magnificent problem it is to take possession of this world for Jesus Christ. Will not the land of Scotland that has produced so many Christian martyrs in the past give many of her best and choicest sons and daughters to this holy cause, who should become standard bearers of the blessed Gospel to all the dark corners of the earth.

In his addresses, Rev. James Scott, of the Natal Zulu Mission, must perforce confine himself to that particular part of the field, so that his words at one place are largely a replication of those at another. He has plenty to tell, and much wondrous testimony to give respecting the progress made among the dark-skinned races of Southern Africa. In speaking at Elgin he referred to the fact that the Dutch Boers, who for years discouraged mission work among the native peoples, are now waking up to their responsibility, and are seeking help in carrying the Gospel to those around them.

Mrs. Stott's contribution to the evening's testimony was certainly not the least interesting. She told the story of the rise and progress of the girls' school she was able to found at Wang-Chau. This highly encouraging narrative of revival among Chinese girls, our correspondent purposes giving at length in an early issue, and we will not therefore summarise it now. It created a remarkable impression on the hearers, and elicited from Dr. Pierson the remark that he had never heard Mrs. Stott speak so manifestly under the guiding of the Spirit of God. Prayer was offered for the health of Mr. Stott. He is one of the party on this missionary tour, but suffers from congested lungs, and is not able to take part in the speaking.

DR. GORDON ON MIRACLES OF MISSIONS.

In beginning an intensely interesting address, Dr. Gordon modestly remarked that those friends who had been at work in the field were supplying the real pictures of missions. All that his friend Dr. Pierson and himself did was to furnish the framework for the pictures. Then he proceeded to rehearse some stories of missionary triumph, where in the beginning there was great discouragement and trial of faith. These successes are the best answer to the sceptical question that so many are asking in these days, "Where is now their God?"

Dr. Gordon referred, as he often does in these meetings, to the international links of history between the old and new worlds in this matter of missions to the heathen. This led up to a mention of Adoniram Judson's labours and trials in Burmah, and to the marvellous outbreak of Christian faith among the Karen tribes, through one of the slave converts of Judson's co-labourer, Mr. Boardman. In three years' time that slave was instrumental in leading to Christ 2500 souls, who were admitted into the Church by baptism. Who can say that God is slow to give results? From that seed wonderful fruits have grown. The Karens have recently built a memorial hall to celebrate the jubilee of their missions, and for that purpose they raised among themselves 15,000 dollars. In contributing annually to the funds of the American Baptist Mission, these Karens come next in amount to the wealthy States of Massachusetts and New York. Another case of missionary success, even more wonderful, is that of the Telegu Mission, the story of which is now pretty well known. The first missionary to that part of India, said Dr. Gordon, is still living. The other day he celebrated his eightieth birthday in America, and his great desire is to be sent back to his loved field at Ongole. For thirty years he toiled on there without success. Then came the story of the young American engineer, Mr. Clough, who went to the Telegu—called "The Lone Star" Mission. He declared that in ten years God would give him 10,000 souls. The time of famine came, and this young engineer undertook the construction of a canal as relief works. He employed batches of 4000 or 5000 at a time, preaching the Gospel to them in the evenings. Then, after a while, he took on a fresh batch of labourers, and dealt with them in the same way. Almost the only thing he could preach in the language was John iii. 16, but that was enough for God to work upon, in fructifying the seed sown during many years. In the result 10,000 people made public profession of Christ in one year, and after being fully tested. Among the other narratives of missionary romance recited by Dr. Gordon was that of the transformation of the Patagonians, as a result of the devoted labours of Captain Allen Gardner, which called forth such a striking testimony to the power of the Gospel from the late Charles Darwin. Then followed a powerfully pathetic appeal for individual consecration to the service of God and the race, in furthering foreign missions.

After these addresses, Dr. Pierson briefly related the circumstances under which he and his companion Dr. Gordon had thrown themselves into this special work, and desired that prayer should be specially made for their guidance as to the immediate future.

The report of these remarkable meetings will be continued in our next.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Post, of Beyrout.

Major Colquhoun, who has been for the past four years connected with the McAll Mission at Lyons and Cannes, is now entering upon evangelistic work at Rome. Particulars are given in another column. We heartily commend our brother and his work to the sympathy of all Christians.

We were glad to notice that the question of the Monte Carlo suicides was brought up by Mr. Samuel Smith in the House of Commons the other night. It is right and useful that public attention should be constantly directed to these scandals, and that the utmost publicity should be given to their existence. The refusal of the Government to take any action in the matter is, however, greatly to be deplored. The great Powers are, or ought to be, the guardians of international morality, and the continued existence of what has very justly been termed the "plague-spot of Europe" is an iniquity for which they must all be held responsible.

Monte Carlo is one of the loveliest spots in the world, and it may truly be said that there "every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." At present no self-respecting person can frequent this enchanting rock, or enjoy the beauties of its scenery and the balminess of its climate, without endangering his welfare, body and soul. The place is rendered uninhabitable by the concomitants of the gambling tables. It has become a trysting-place for all the riff-raff of Europe, and the atmosphere has become one of vice, turmoil, and sudden death. Let the neighbouring nations but awake to their duty in this matter, and Monte Carlo will become what nature intended it should be—the garden of Europe.

The recent Mildmay Conference was beneficial to thousands of Christian people, but from the current issue of Service for the King, it seems that, notwithstanding the spiritual abundance, only scanty offerings were made towards the maintenance of the important work of which the Conference Hall is the home and centre. A correspondent, in sending a contribution towards defraying the expenses of the Conference, remarks that it is not yet too late for those who profited by the meetings to make up the deficiency which is thus brought under notice.

A short time ago we commented upon the enormous and—considering the wealth of London—humiliating disproportion between the increase in the expenditure and in the income of the London hospitals, which were lately stated to require £650,000 annually for their efficient maintenance. It would appear, however, from statements made at its recent anniversary festival, that the Metropolitan Hospital, which has neither endowment nor reserve fund, and has nearly a quarter of a million of people dependent upon it for medical assistance, is on the high road to a solution of the difficulty. The Committee have adopted the provident system, whereby each family willing to do so pays a small weekly sum, which entitles its members at any time to medical relief. Though this scheme has only been in operation six months, six thousand families are stated to be already paying their weekly subscription. From this, it is evident that the poor of London are ready, if facilities be given them, to contribute towards the medical services which they receive; and if the experiment at the Metropolitan stands the test of time, other hospitals will do well to adopt a plan which has the additional merit of encouraging thrift amongst the poorer classes.

The terrible floods in the East-end have plunged numbers of the most helpless class in suffering. It is said that £4000 will not recoup the poor residents of Poplar and the Isle of Dogs the loss they sustained during last week's storms. Christians engaged in mission work in the neighbourhood are asking for help for the distressed families, and we shall be glad to receive any sums which our readers may wish to give towards this charitable object.

We referred in our issue of July 20 to a Bill recently prepared in Germany to provide a State scheme for securing provision for workpeople who may become incapacitated by age or illness, and we expressed an opinion that the establishment of such a scheme in these islands would be beneficial in encouraging habits of thrift, and in keeping deserving people out of the much-dreaded workhouse. The Prussian system now proposed will be to a great extent compulsory, and in that respect will differ essentially from an admirable system which for some time has been established amongst ourselves.

Sufficient publicity is not given to the fact that in connection with the British Post Office deferred life annuities may be purchased at so low a rate, and under such generally favourable terms, as to render it almost criminal in any young working man not to make a provision for old age and a possible period of disablement. It is true that the introduction of the compulsory element makes it possible to charge seemingly lower rates in Germany; but, on the other hand, the payment of the annuity does not commence until the recipient is 71 years old.

Under the British Post Office system a working man of 20 years of age can secure £20 per annum, payable at 60 years of age, for a payment equivalent to about eighteen-pence per week, and in addition the purchase money is returnable on application, or at death, if that should occur before the annuity becomes due. A similar annuity, without these additional advantages, can be purchased for about 9d. per week.

We quoted recently a telegraphic communication respecting the advance of Christianity in India. There is now to hand a more complete report of the statements made by Sir Charles Aitchison at a meeting of the C.M.S. at Simla. In the Madras Presidency the increase of Christians in all denominations is vastly in advance of that of the population. In Bengal the increase of population during nine years has been 10·89 per cent., of Christians more than 40. In the N.W. Provinces the increase of Christians has been exactly nine times as fast as that of the total population. In the Punjab the population has increased 7 per cent. The Hindoo and the Mohammedan religions are practically stationary, that of the Sikhs has declined, whereas the Christian religion has increased 38½ per cent.

On the foregoing remarkable facts these things are to be further observed: The increase is too large to be attributed to natural productiveness. It is traced chiefly to converts from heathendom. The Census Commissioner himself remarks: "The progress made in the spread of Christianity during the last nine years is one of the most interesting facts brought out in India by the census just taken." Sir Charles Aitchison may well exclaim and our readers will echo his words :—

> Now, how are these remarkable facts to be explained? How is it that, turn where we will, north or south, or east, or west, in our oldest provinces, or in our more recently acquired possessions, we find the Christian community spreading at a rate unknown since Apostolic times? You and I know the true explanation; it is the breath of the Spirit of the Lord. Now, as of old, He is magnifying his name. The Lord is adding to the Church daily such as shall be saved. The Gospel message has not lost its ancient power; now, as in the days of the Apostles, the Word of God grows mightily and prevails.

What is wanted in these days of the rapid and general diffusion of information is that Christians should be men and women who, when they take up philanthropic and social questions, should be fully capable of directing all their powers to one object. The great weakness of most persons is in their diffuseness, their sympathy becoming diluted and divided. Men like Howard, and women like Mrs. Fry, achieved great results because, for Christ's sake, they gave themselves up to one task, and the examples are worthy to be followed.

We have often called attention to the dangers which beset inexperienced young women and girls arriving from the country at the busy and bewildering railway stations of London and our large towns, where they are habitually watched for by unprincipled harpies of both sexes, who allure them to their ruin. In a recent letter to The Times Mrs. Fawcett has drawn attention to the claims of the Travellers' Aid Society, which exists for the purpose of protecting such helpless passengers; the officers of the Society have made known its aims to, and secured the co-operation of, the railway-station and steamboat officials, who, on finding one of these friendless girls, either communicate with the office, or themselves send her thither under trustworthy escort. Any person living in the country, and having occasion to send a young girl through London, may also have her met and seen safely off to her destination for the small fee of a shilling, and a bedroom is also provided for belated travellers. The management is economical, the yearly expenses very moderate, and much unpaid work is given, but more regular annual subscribers are urgently needed. The address of the Society is 16a, Old Cavendish-street, Cavendish-square.

Some time ago the Bishop of Chichester refused to consecrate a church at Worthing unless the vicar designate gave a written promise not to wear Romish vestments or to burn "altar" lights. A contemporary says, however, that there are other illegal practices which the Bishop did not specify; and there certainly is ground for the remark, for on the occasion of the consecration of the building on the 1st inst., "sanctuary lamps" were lighted, and our contemporary says, the "altar was decorated in a style which certainly would have delighted the local Roman Catholic priest if he could have seen it." A "sacring bell" was rung, and three strokes of a bell announced the "real presence," the vicar, in the presence of the Bishop, prostrating himself "in adoration before the altar." The English Churchman says that at one celebration "Popish wafers" instead of bread were used, and the bread and wine were "elevated." It is not unreasonable to ask in such circumstances as these, Whither are we drifting? No wonder that the Roman Catholic journals are triumphantly recording perversions in places where such ceremonies are being substituted for the plain simplicity of the Gospel of Christ.

Addressing the University Extension students at Oxford on Saturday last, the Bishop of Ripon reckoned novelists among the artists of the world, and spoke of novels as prose poems. Though apparently appreciating a distinct purpose in fiction, the Bishop certainly seemed to regret that such dry things as "the problems of life" should be served up in novel form. In his enthusiasm he exclaimed: "Novelist, preach on, if you will lift men higher; we have tried to do all in our power; God speed you, we are brothers with one common end." Surely this apostrophe falls far short of expressing the truth. Not by the might of intellect, not by the power of imagination, but by God's Spirit are men "lifted" to the height which is attainable in Christ. To be a "brother" to the Christian worker, the novelist must "preach" the Gospel.

We have of late been hearing much, perhaps, in fact, rather too much, from the Pope with reference to the great civilising power of Romanism. It has always been convenient to the successive Popes to ignore history, and if Rome retains the fine instinct of self-preservation which has hitherto been one of the principal traits in her many-sided character, she will always continue to point in the contrary direction to evident truth. To-day, therefore, she is busily engaged in calling attention to the heavy taxation of Italy, and to the evils of civil and religious liberty, and pretending to ignore the fact that for ages the Papal States were the home of every conceivable kind of tyranny and oppression; and that even now, after some years of freedom from the galling yoke, the city of Rome remains crushed beneath its ecclesiastical incubus.

With a less population than our large English cities, Rome has no less than 30 cardinals, 35 bishops, 1469 priests, 828 candidates, 2832 monks and friars, 2215 nuns, &c. These figures are, of course, very much lower than those of the days of the temporal power; yet, during that régime there was more immorality and crime in Rome than in any other European city, and even still over 100,000 of the inhabitants cannot either read or write. These facts speak for themselves, and dispose once for all of every Romish claim in regard to the civilising power of the Apostasy.

Notwithstanding all discouragements, the question of substituting arbitration for war as a means of settling international disputes is not lost sight of. One hundred and twenty members of the French Chamber of Deputies have lately signed a memorial in favour of the adoption of such a peaceful treaty with the United States, in which country a very strong feeling in the same direction is said to exist, and it is proposed to hold a conference of English M.P.'s and French Deputies on the subject at Paris in October. The French Foreign Minister has intimated the willingness of his Government to enter into such an arrangement, but states that circumstances render it difficult for France to take the initiative. The Gaulois recently calculated that the French have, during the last twenty years, spent nearly five hundred and fifty millions of pounds upon their army, the average annual expenditure since 1872 being twenty millions of pounds. There can thus be little doubt that from considerations of economy, if on no higher grounds, France would welcome a system of international arbitration. But the movement, to be effective, must be general, and the present inflammatory condition of European politics unhappily forbids us to be sanguine on this point.

With regard to the opinion expressed by a Committee of the Lambeth Conference, that the ministry of non-episcopal Dissenting bodies should be recognised as valid, The Morning Post, whose utterances on ecclesiastical and religious matters are always strongly tinged with sacerdotalism, remarks that "this would appear to advocate interchange of pulpits and other overtures to heretical and schismatic bodies, which the Anglican Communion, or, at least, the Church of England, can never rightly assent to." The modest claim of this journal to speak in the name of the Church of England will, we would fain believe, be indignantly repudiated by the great majority of her ministers. Moreover, the above remark lets in a little light upon the secret principle which underlies the action of such bodies as the "Home Reunion Society," and makes it evident that the only terms of "union" which they would accept are those of unconditional surrender, and a general "levelling up" of dissenting doctrine and practice to their standard.

From such un-catholic and unscriptural utterances as that of The Morning Post, which would identify the Church with some visible human organisation, and would put Apostolic succession, Episcopal government, ancient ritual, or "the orthodoxy of curiously articulated creeds" in the place of Christ, it is pleasant to turn to the following words of Archdeacon Farrar, in a sermon lately preached in Westminster Abbey:—

> Perish the hand which would circumscribe by one hair's breadth the limits or the definition of the Church of Christ: perish the arms that would exclude from that one flock of the Good Shepherd the "other sheep which are not of this fold": perish the narrow superstition that the wind of God, which "bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth," can only be conveyed by mechanical transmissions. I, for one, at any rate, refuse to flatter the priestly pride which would sectarianise the catholicity of the Church of Christ: and I, for one, even if I were to stand alone, would still repudiate and protest against the uncatholic teaching which would pretend to do what it cannot do by unchurching any who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth.

We would that all servants of Christ, engaged in preaching and teaching, could take the broad and unsectarian view of "the Church," which Archdeacon Farrar has thus expressed.

Everything goes to rebuke the confidence with which sceptics wrote a few years ago concerning references to Egypt and Canaan in the early books of the Bible. The facts mentioned in Scripture were treated as unhistorical, and reduced to the unsubstantial myths of an illiterate age. In The Contemporary Review for August, Professor Sayce refers to "the great event of the season"—the discovery in Upper Egypt of letters and despatches sent by the governors and kings of Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Babylonia to Egyptian monarchs. Evidences of this active literary intercourse go back to the date of the Exodus. Henceforth, instead of regarding the period of Joseph as fabulous, it is evident that schools of literature then existed; and Professor Sayce avers that the discoveries are likely to have most important bearings upon the criticism of the Pentateuch.

"The subject then dropped." We are sorry to find that no more practical result followed a recent discussion in the House of Lords on the subject of pernicious literature, for there can be little doubt that the evil is growing and spreading day by day—thanks to the comparative impunity which is enjoyed by those who are engaged in the publication and sale of immoral literature, and to the fact that the existing law is not sufficiently elastic to be brought to bear upon all classes of offenders. There are windows in London thoroughfares which are simply a disgrace to Christianity and civilisation, and the time certainly has come when, as the Earl of Meath put it, "a great effort should be made" to reduce, if not to crush out the evil. Mr. Samuel Smith's action in calling public attention to some of the out-of-the way ramifications of the traffic in vile books and prints is deserving of all praise, and we trust that all those who are in charge of large establishments and schools will do everything in their power to protect those who are under their care from the surreptitious introduction of the disgraceful pamphlets and volumes which are being circulated so broadly.

The statement made at the Wesleyan Conference on Friday week to the effect that at the present time the income of the foreign missions is below the expenditure by £12,000 per annum is far from an encouraging one. Hitherto the Wesleyans have never been lacking in their support of this important department of evangelistic work, and it is probable that the falling-off is of only a temporary nature, and due to the pressure of exceptional causes. At the same time there is ground for the growing impression that much economy in mission expenditure might be secured by the union of societies which at present are occupying the same stations, each preaching the same Christ, and yet all their labours tinged to some extent by a selfish and un-Christlike sectarianism.

PROGRESS ON THE CONGO.

In The Missionary Herald there appears a very lengthy letter from Rev. W. Holman Bentley, giving cheering tidings of the progress of the work on the Congo. In February he baptized a young man named Nlemvo, and now he reports the baptism of two young women, Aku Toniangi Biseobodi, and Kavazwila Kalombo, both of whom were formerly slave girls. Of these two Mr. Bentley writes:—"The change of heart and life is exceedingly well marked, and they rejoice in a very definite sense of pardon and peace with God." At their baptism, at the Tombe riverside, the two converts told the people assembled how they had been taken from their countries by the Arabs, and how God had sent them to the missionaries; that they were at first indifferent until they began to see how great and blessed was the salvation which Jesus offered. A few days following, Nlemvo and Kalombo were united in marriage by Mr. Bentley, the first Christian marriage in the Congo country.

The Keswick Convention.

(From our Special Correspondents.)

The reports which we now publish exhaust our account of the proceedings at the Convention. Most of the meetings were remarkable for sustained interest, and those who were privileged to attend will not soon forget the words that were spoken.

The ministers' meeting on Tuesday was largely attended. Rev. F. B. Meyer said: This teaching has been specially helpful to myself in two directions: (1) In connection with sin; (2) in connection with the power of life, the power of Christian living. The teaching has been a great help to me in regard to indwelling sin and temptation. None of us here can be in sinless perfection, no thoughtful man here can say that for a moment. The people who talk about sinless perfection don't understand the terms they use; for, even if we were kept from conscious sin, there is a great difference between being kept from sin conscious to ourselves and sin as seen in the sight of a holy God. We may be kept by the power of the Lord from yielding to conscious sin; but is there not an infinite difference between that and attaining sinless perfection. Sinlessness is negative, perfection is positive. No sane man here can suppose that, in this life, even though he be kept from sin, he can attain to the perfect measure of the stature of Christ. It will appear that sinless perfection is altogether out of the question.

What we do believe, and teach, and enjoy, is the power of Christ put forth hour by hour to keep us from yielding to conscious sin, and from being overcome by the power of our great enemy. We are all aware that temptation from without appeals to sinful tendencies within. These tendencies we have inherited, and they will remain in us to the last. We believe that, just as in nature one strong law may be kept in check by another strong law, so the natural evil tendency of our life is kept in check by the power of the Holy Ghost. The evil tendencies are in the nature, and respond to temptations from without; but the blessed Holy Ghost is within. As the temptation is from without, is there not the constant keeping power of Jesus Christ exercised for us who trust Him, so that when temptation comes to us we who are abiding in Christ are able through Christ to obtain a perfect victory? Now that has been a great help to myself.

The other side, which is the positive side of the same thing, is the power of Christian living, which, if I may put it in one word, seems to me the appropriation of an indwelling Christ. We know that in Christ all fulness dwells, that God has stored up for us in Him all spiritual blessings. Are we in the habit of appropriating an indwelling Christ, and not trying to live a Christian life without Christ? The earnest minister, philanthropist, and Christian teacher may have his life honeycombed with things far different from his ideal—pride, jealousy, and other things. We must definitely give up the whole nature into Christ's hands, being willing to have Christ's will through and through, nothing intervening. All religion is in the will. We are not what we feel or know, but what we will.

Several ministers, chiefly from Scotland, propounded questions of difficulty, which Rev. Evan Hopkins and Mr. Meyer showed great skill in satisfactorily answering. As to the question of the difficulty of self-emptying, it was pointed out by Mr. Meyer that emptying and filling of the Spirit go on pari passu. As to the question of old sinful tendencies, Mr. Hopkins said that we are not born into the world with evil habits, and that there is such a cleansing of the very desires and affections as takes away the love of sin. Evil habits can be overcome, while we cannot say that the roots of sin are eradicated from the soul.

An interesting conversation ensued as to whether God takes away not only the sinful habit, but also the inclination in some cases—especially in regard to drink. Rev. J. A. Jacob, while regarding it as an attainment in the case of some, would not press it. Another minister remarked that drunkenness is to be viewed from a medical point of view, and is believed to be not entirely a moral matter; that the appetite is a physical thing in a certain degree. Rev. J. G. Gregson, without the least hesitation, held that the appetite, both physical and mental, is completely and entirely taken away if the power of God's Spirit gets full possession of the soul. As an ardent temperance advocate, he held that temperance men have been wanting in direct and sound teaching on the subject. We have, he said, got to teach men to come and ask God for the higher and stronger power of his Spirit, and He will take away the appetite.

One minister in the audience asked, Is it necessary to have the experience of the second blessing as something definite from, and taking place at a different time from, conversion. Mr. Hopkins answered it was not necessary, but he remarked that we have to do with Christians, not as they ought to be, but as they are. He observed further, that we find many passages in Scripture which speak of a definite blessing after conversion.

THURSDAY.

At the seven o'clock prayer-meeting, the requests were summarised by Rev. F. B. Meyer, after which Rev. Colin Campbell spoke on John ii. 8: "And He saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear to the governor of the feast. And they bare it."

He treated this miracle of Cana of Galilee as a parable of the Christian life. God's world is full of the parables of nature, and God's Word is full of the parables of grace.

This miracle took place at the beginning of the work of the Lord Jesus, and when that work is finished there will again be a marriage. Will you tell me, Are you married to the Lord Jesus? Have you ever heard the voice of the Spirit as He took of the things of Jesus, and showed them to you? Have you heard Him speaking to your heart, and asking the question, Wilt thou go with this man? Did you say, "I will go"; and then did you go?

If I am asked what consecration means, I have one answer; it is the marriage-vow made and kept, between the believer and Christ. Every believer is the friend of Jesus, every consecrated believer is the bride of Christ. We find that at this marriage the people began to be in want. Forgive me, if in one word I express the conviction that this wine here was the pure juice of grape. The wine is Christ, and the consecrated believer wants more of Christ, and nothing but Christ. Our wants are all briefly comprised in one word—Christ. And what does the consecrated believer want more than this? He wants Christ as his Deliverer in the conflicts of the higher life of the land of promise. And how is this want to be supplied? Whatsoever He saith to you, do it. Implicit obedience is the law of the consecrated life, and, this fulfilled, it will be right all round. Disobey the least word, and it will be all wrong with you. Then notice there were six waterpots. They were common things. The Lord does not so much want great things, but He wants us, and if He gets us He will do with us as He will. The six waterpots were occupied with their ordinary calling. Oh! serve God where you are. Perhaps He may call some of you to go into the mission field. I covet you the honour, but the best training for such service is devoted service where you are. Serve God where you are, as though there was no region beyond, and it will be well with you.

"Fill the waterpots with water." This is no hard task, for there is another word behind that. "Take the name of Jesus with you." The indwelling presence of Jesus is a very filling thing. I fancy it will be said of us, "And they filled them up to the brim." Oh! are you filled, like Naphtali, satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord? Then, "Draw out now!" I suspect that in the miracle only the water that was drawn out was turned into wine. Life is more ennobled, more abundant, more full of heaven's joy, when it is given away to Jesus, and to the world for Jesus' sake. Don't be saved alone! Having taken the water of life freely, so walk that others, through you and like you, may "Stoop down, and drink and live."

At the mid-day Bible-reading, Rev. Hubert Brooke spoke on Ps. vii. 4, cxliv. 3, and Job. vii. 17, 18. Afterwards, Rev. Dr. Cumming gave two expositions of the conditions of consecration. Rev. C. A. Fox closed the meeting with some striking remarks on the history detailed in 1 Sam. xvi., the anointing of David as king, and David's slaying Goliath.

There was an overflow meeting at the same hour in the Drill Hall, conducted by Revs. J. G. Gregson, J. A. Jacob, and Colin Campbell.

The afternoon meeting was taken up with answers to questions. In the evening, in the tent, there was a large gathering, so that an overflow meeting had to be held again in the Drill Hall.

BURDENS AND CARES.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins was one of the speakers, and his address was found to be very helpful. The subject was 1 Pet. v. 6—8, "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you," &c. We may trace here a Divine provision of power in three directions—power to subdue, to sustain, and to resist—in other words Divine power over us, Divine power under us, and Divine power around us; we are enclosed in Divine power. And this threefold provision meets three great evils to which we are always exposed, three great hindrances, and so we read, yourselves, your care, your adversary. We shall find that most of our troubles may be traced to those three things. Notice the order in which they occur, not your adversary, your cares, and yourselves, but beginning with that which is nearest us, and the very thing that we are so prone to overlook—yourselves. We must begin there.

We have made no progress in this Convention, if we have not been brought face to face with ourselves as the source and secret of our failures. We see many things in our neighbours which we should like to put right, so many things in our circumstances that we should like to be altered. How about yourself? humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God. You say, I know I am all wrong; I have prayed, struggled, fought so earnestly, but alas I am continually defeated. You have been trying to conquer yourself. There is the mistake you have made. It is one thing to try and conquer yourself—it is another thing to be willing to be conquered by God. Humble yourselves under the mighty hand, the power of God. The way to get power to subdue self is to yield to the power of God who is able to subdue all things unto Himself—subdue not unto you, but unto Himself.

"Casting all your care." I am quite sure we are not prepared to do that with this matter of our cares until we have been obedient to the first part—humble yourselves. Some people are always murmuring against God in consequence of their troubles and cares. Other people faint under them. Yet others despise them; they harden their heart. Other people, again, carry them. Now we are told to cast all our care upon Him—so there is a provision of Divine power under us to sustain us. In Psalm lv. we are told to cast "our burden." It is really our gift — something to be brought or given to God and cast there—not to be taken back again. Cast all your care upon Him—things in homes, business—roll all over upon Him, and don't take it again.

Now about your adversary. "Whom resist, stedfast in the faith." How are we to withstand the devil? With the power of God, interposing Christ between your soul and your adversary. Just as if you were in a fortress, and as walls surround you in that fortress, you are privileged to know that the power of God encircles you. Christ, the power of God, the fortress by which I am surrounded. Before you are ready to meet your adversary, you must take your right place. If you are outside the fort, you are not ready to meet him. If you have been defeated by Satan, it is because you have got out of the fortification. It is our privilege to take our stand in the victorious position, with the panoply of God. All you have got to do is to submit to the power of God, so as to get the benefit of it. Is it not a wonderful paradox—willing to be nothing that Christ may use you, and magnify his grace in you?

Oh, it is wretched self that stands in the way, after all—not your circumstances! Here is true humility—not thinking bad of self; but not thinking of self at all. We would not lead any of you to think that you will be free from care, trouble, difficulty; but we try to teach the secret of how to meet them. He can transform your sorrow into joy, and make your care a means of grace, and make you realise that, moment by moment, the power of God is meeting your need—his fulness your emptiness—his power your weakness; and this will bring you into contact with Divine omnipotence.

FRIDAY.

A short, practical address was given early in the morning by Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow. At 9.45 Rev. Hubert Brooke gave a Bible-reading on "The Second Coming of Christ," tracing the references to that great and glorious event throughout the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. Then Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe gave a very able address on "Human Responsibility."

The afternoon was devoted to the giving of personal testimonies. Over forty persons, including many ministers and ladies, bore testimony to having received definite blessing. The meeting leaves many precious recollections.

In the evening, in the tent, some practical exhortations were addressed by Rev. C. A. Fox, after which Rev. E. H. Hopkins gave an interesting exposition from Zeph. iii. 17, unfolding and illustrating the nature and grounds of consecration. As at the close of the meetings on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, so this evening there was an after-meeting, conducted by Mr. Hopkins. Comparatively few persons left before the after-meeting, so that about 2000 remained to make or renew their consecration. An overflow meeting was held in the Drill Hall, and this, too, was pervaded with much solemnity.

SATURDAY.

On Saturday morning, for an hour and a half, speakers and a great many of the audience quoted texts, and a few parting words were given by the leading ministers and others.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

On Saturday forenoon a missionary meeting was held, which lasted for about three hours and a half. It was presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock. After a few introductory remarks, Mr. Stock introduced Mr. B. Broomhall, who bore his personal testimony to blessing received, saying that he had been deeply impressed with the glorious truths he had heard, and more deeply impressed on that account with our guilt in not sending these truths to those sitting in the region of the shadow of death. He told how that a hundred new missionaries went forward last year in connection with the China Inland Mission, involving an additional outlay of £10,000, and through God's goodness during the year an increase of £11,000 was received. He introduced to the audience a missionary band of ladies and gentlemen, so that the large platform was packed with the goodly company.

Mr. Broomhall was accompanied on the platform by his young daughter, who is soon going out to China, and who spoke very tenderly. Not a few of the audience were visibly affected. Besides his own daughter, Mr. Broomhall presented to the audience seven other ladies and gentlemen just going out, including Rev. E. O. Williams, who had left his charge, and was going with his family. Of the missionary band, he also presented Dr. Wilson, Miss Wilson, and four others, who have already been out in the mission field.

The Chairman read a telegram received from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, dated from Buffalo, N.Y.: "Men and support offering with us. Who will go from Keswick?"

Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered a brief and telling address. He said that Mr. Radcliffe and he the other day resolved that in all meetings of that kind they would urge on the children of God the necessity of living in a much more simple and less extravagant way. In many cases there were those who could not go out at their own charges, and it scarcely seemed as if the Church had risen to its full responsibility in the matter. Very many objects of value at home might be fairly surrendered for the Lord's sake. Do we know the full value of money? Suppose anyone of us was appointed trustee of a large estate, and the owner said, "You may live in a house of a certain size, and may live at a certain rate of expenditure, and send me the balance." Would it be your duty to remove into a house of double the value, to live extravagantly, and to send, say, an occasional £5 to your master just now and again? Would it be right to spend £70 on a new picture? Would it be right to launch out into new expenditure without first asking him? Let us consider whether we are doing as we should about our expenditure.

After this, Mrs. Henry Reed, of Tasmania, read a touching letter from her daughter, a missionary in China. A deep impression was made. The chairman read a letter from a young lady sending a cheque for £10, a surplus earnings, expressing the hope that others would make it up to £100 a year to send a missionary from Keswick. Slip after slip of paper was then sent up to the platform from different parts of the tent, with subscriptions of £10, so that £100 was guaranteed for this year. Over and above £100 a year was promised for a missionary to Persia; another £60 a year for the China Inland Mission; and then flowed in offering after offering, until about £800 a year was definitely promised.

A KESWICK MISSIONARY SOCIETY

will be formed, and it is hoped that results will follow that will tell far and wide towards helping on the evangelisation of the world. What an offering of sweet incense to the Most High, showing how He has poured out his grace on the Keswick Convention.

Besides missionary meetings, ministers' meetings, young men's meetings, there have been special ladies' meetings and numerous evangelistic meetings in the market-place, in addition to those in the tent.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe preached a powerful sermon on Sunday morning, and Rev. Charles Fox gave a practical sermon in the evening.

A meeting for Christian workers was addressed by Mr. Webb-Peploe on Monday forenoon, and Mr. Grubb addressed a prayer-meeting for Ireland.

[We are asked to notify that the September number of The Life of Faith will contain a full account of the Conference.]

LONDON CITY MISSION.—A few days ago memorial stones were laid of Shaftesbury Memorial Mission Hall No. 3, in Union-street, Borough. The district is one of the poorest in South London, and this additional provision for the religious needs of the people is very timely. The building will cost £800, and there will be an annual outlay of £60 for ground-rent and incidentals. Already about £600 has been subscribed. Mr. Charles M. Sawell, 3, Bridewell-place, S.E., is the secretary to the Shaftesbury Memorial Halls Committee.

A PRESENT SALVATION.

Col. i. 12—14.

Now all my soul is filled with light,
  I wait not for a future hour;
Gone are the shadows of the night,
  Darkness and gloom have lost their power.

Now I receive a royal crown—
  No more a trembling slave am I;
Strongholds of Satan I pull down,
  Through Him who deigned for me to die.

My many sins are all forgiven.
  Yes, "are" forgiven, not "shall be";
The cruel fetters now are riven,
  And in my Saviour I am free.

Give thanks, give thanks, for evermore,
  Ye ransomed sons of God's delight;
Soon shall we reach the glory shore,
  And faith be swallowed up in sight.

BIBLICAL JOTTINGS.

"OLD CAST CLOUTS AND ROTTEN RAGS."

Such was the apparatus with which Ebed-melech got Jeremiah out of the dungeon. Everybody has the means of doing good, however little. Nearly everyone can get some "old cast clouts or rotten rags." Not a costly apparatus. Do we not often miss opportunities, because we under-estimate the means at our disposal? Had we a silken cord and velvet cushions, then we would lift Jeremiah out of the mire! But because we have only the old clouts and rags, shall we do nothing? Our brethren and sisters often get into the dungeon and the mire. Our words may seem to us as mean as old rags, but they may answer the purpose. Let us not say, "Oh that I were a Chrysostom! Oh that I had a golden month!" Say not, like Moses, "I am slow of speech." Use what you have.

PAUL AND THE VIPER.

"There came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand" (Acts xxviii. 3).

That quaint writer, Quarles, says:—

The close pursuers' busy hands do plant
Snares in thy substance; snares attend thy want;
Snares in thy credit; snares in thy disgrace;
Snares in thy high estate; snares in thy base;
Snares tuck thy bed; and snares surround thy board;
Snares watch thy thoughts; and snares attack thy word.

This little incident in the life of Paul illustrates the fact that there are snares in our comforts. It was out of the comforting heat that the viper came. So out of any of our lawful comforts may come vipers of pride, selfishness, indulgence, &c., and fasten upon us. What are we to do? Are we, like monks and nuns and anchorites, to discard the comforts, condemning them as evil? No, do as Paul did, shake off the venomous beast. Before it has time to plant its fangs and poison our spiritual life, let the evil thing be vigorously shaken off. Use the comforts, but beware of the vipers.

THE LAW OF LIBERTY.

The Law of Liberty is the rule of the Gospel, in contrast to the Mosaic Law. The latter engenders a spirit of bondage: obedience is rendered from compulsion; a man obeys because he must, or because he is afraid of consequences. The Gospel is the law of liberty because it fosters a spirit of liberty; writes the law upon the heart; the man obeys from an inward principle, not an outward law, because he delights in it, loves his Master and his work. So David prays, "Uphold me with a free (or willing) spirit." To be judged, as James says, by the "law of liberty" is to be judged according to the Gospel standard, which is higher than the law; which expects more, because it imparts more. So, in James ii. 8, he says: "If ye fulfil the royal law, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well," as if to say, if you go back to legal ground, you would learn to do better than you are doing; how much more, then, on Gospel principles? The LATE MARCHIONESS of AILSA

A loss, the depth and extent of which cannot be measured, has befallen the Church of Christ on earth by the early removal to her heavenly home of the Marchioness of Ailsa. Whilst she accounted herself as "less than the least of all saints," she seemed to those who knew her to walk ever in the light of her Saviour's countenance, and to a rare degree to reflect his loveliness.

It is now several years ago since Lady Ailsa withdrew herself from London in the midst of the season, and in the absence of her husband, retired with her little children to the sea-girt castle which is their Scottish home. There, for some hours in each day, she gave herself to the study of the Bible, and to prayer that God would show her, through his own Word, the way of salvation. More than once have I heard her say that she thanked God that her conversion came through no human instrumentality, but that it was by the guidance of the Holy Spirit alone that she met with her Saviour. She accepted his Atonement in its completeness, and at once surrendered herself to Him. Thenceforward the language of her heart became:—

> My Beloved is mine, and I am his.
> Oh, that I may ever prove,
> By a life of earnest love,
> How, by right of faith Divine,
> I am his, and He is mine!

Although her conversion was without human aid, yet very early in her new-found life she felt the need of Christian fellowship, and sought it amongst those whom she believed to be earnestly loving and serving her Lord and Master. She did this without withdrawing from her social duties, or any lessening of the flow of love to her family and her friends. Only now her love and her friendship took a higher tone, and reached beyond this passing time into eternity. With perfect simplicity she therefore told to those whom she met, and wrote to those at a distance, what great things God had done for her; and with tender pleading and fervent prayers she would entreat them to "come and see" for themselves the Saviour of the world—her blessed Saviour. With her clear evangelical religion, she combined a largeness of heart, which reached to everyone in whom her quick sympathies discerned the evidence of a "spiritual mind"—appreciating it perhaps the more because of the difficulties under which she felt those who had less of definite Scriptural teaching were labouring.

Some nine or ten years ago, it became a great wish of Lady Ailsa's to establish a British Workman Coffee-house in the neighbouring town of Maybole, where a great shoe-making trade is carried on. The work of the building was completed, and preparations were made for opening it with a plentiful supper, to be followed by Gospel addresses. At this juncture, Lady Ailsa received a letter threatening that she would be shot, if she attempted to open the building. With the high courage which was so nobly blended with her gentle and retiring nature, she wrote a brief letter, naming the dastardly threat, but expressing her fearless trust in the sheltering care of her God, and in the generous sympathy and protection of the men of Maybole. This was written in large letters, and nailed to the doors of the British Workman; and when Lord and Lady Ailsa drove up at the appointed time on the following evening, they were greeted with warm acclamations by the vast crowd assembled; and no breach of the peace occurred. Beneath the roof of that capacious house were several large rooms, some supplied with games, others with books and newspapers, another with tea, coffee, and other refreshments; and one was reserved for Bible-readings, and provided with a harmonium to accompany the hymn-singing. In another room pledges of total abstinence were taken, and well do I remember the earnestness of prayer with which she sought to arm the new volunteer in the cause of temperance. But Maybole was not the only centre of her labours of love. The villages within easy reach of Culzean were her peculiar care; and in them a very remarkable work of God took place. Amongst the fishermen of a village called "the Maidens"—washed by the waves of the Atlantic—scarcely a man was untouched by the message of the Gospel of peace and love.

During Lady Ailsa's alarming attack of pleurisy, rather more than five years ago, when her danger reached its height, those true-hearted fishermen kept a watch-night of prayer, and God heard and answered, and spared that precious life. But amidst all her service for God and for her fellow-creatures in every class of life, both in London and in the country—in which she was warmly supported by Lord Ailsa—her devotion to her children, and her thought for their little plays and pleasures, was even greater than before, and no happiness was complete for them unless enjoyed with their wise, sweet mother—a dove in softness and gentleness, a rock in strength and firmness—

> A perfect woman, nobly planned,
> To love, to comfort, and command.

Lady Ailsa took much interest in Lord Meath's philanthropic efforts for the refreshment and pleasure of the poor in crowded London, especially in the playgrounds which he established for the toiling children. And in all the great and good Lord Shaftesbury's noblest work, with its ceaseless efforts to benefit the lives, the circumstances, the hearts, the minds, and the souls, of the young, the weak, the suffering, and the oppressed, she felt the warmest interest and delight; reverencing that most Christian philanthropist as the greatest human blessing of the age. He, on his part, recognised a sister spirit within that graceful fragile form, and more than once wrote of her in his letters to me as "our sweet angel of Culzean." Will each one who reads this slight sketch of a devoted mother, pray that to her sorrowing children may be fulfilled the promise, "All thy children shall be taught of God, and great shall be the peace of thy children"? And also that the bright hope of the Coming of the Lord, to call up his people to be for ever with Him, on which their beloved mother delighted to dwell, may fill their sorely stricken young hearts with heavenly comfort. As a relative she was ever on the watch for opportunities of showing affectionate attention, and her sympathy with those who were sorrowing knew no bounds. One—a mourner for both a deeply loved and idolising husband and son—was drawn out of the depths of her grief's seclusion by the tender constraint of Lady Ailsa's gentlest sympathy, and brought to pass her mournful Christmas-time each year in the sacred yet genial atmosphere of the Christian home at beautiful Culzean. But one of these Christmas meetings, just as the year 1886 had dawned, was darkened by the falling of the shadow of death. One of the sons had returned from school with a sore throat, which proved to be a slight attack of diphtheria. The dread infection had spread to another before the disease was suspected. The little Ena, a child of heavenly sweetness and of simplest faith, was stricken for death. Lady Ailsa and her bereaved aunt shut themselves up in the infected rooms to nurse, watch, and cherish that tenderly beloved child by day and by night. Wonderfully was that delicate mother strengthened for the terrible strain; and when on the ninth day of that cold January the lovely child was carried away—

> Safe in the arms of Jesus,
> Safe on his gentle breast,

to His Home, His Heaven, the mother who so devotedly loved her was enabled to say of the Saviour whom she loved yet more—"He hath done all things well;" "Not my will, Lord, but thine be done."

In Moody and Sankey's great and blessed work, she was earnestly and practically interested; and both Lord and Lady Ailsa deeply prized Dr. Pentecost's powerful Gospel addresses, gathering many to hear them at their own house in London.

Nevertheless, the depths of her quiet sorrow were only fathomed by Him, and only passed away as she was drawn up into the eternal sunshine of her Saviour's presence. But sorrow could never make her self-centred, or forgetful of others. More than ever, if possible, to the poor was she considerate, kind, and generous; to the neighbouring families the ideal of gentle courtesy; to her guests the most thoughtful and attentive of hostesses. But to her many relatives and to her friends, who shall tell how true, how tender she was, how exquisite in the refinement of her sympathies, or how helpful to their spiritual life was all intercourse with her? More than in most of even earnest Christians there shone through everything the heavenly motto, "This one thing I do." And in the holy consistency and beauty of her daily life did she recall to those who knew her best the words, "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light." The spring of this year saw Lady Ailsa in lovelier bloom than ever; and she said that she had never felt better in her life. We only trembled because her sweetness had become "passing sweet," and her spirit yet more heavenly than ever. But she herself seemed to have no presentiment that the end was drawing near, for she was making plans to welcome friends whom she loved in the month we have now entered without her.

So gently did she fade away that those about her felt no alarm—save once,—when she was found, half fainting from weakness, on the floor of her room. "Yet she struggled bravely against that weakness," writes the valued instructress of her two younger children; "no time with her to think of self. She was even more than ever gentle and tender during these last weeks; and the expression of her lovely face grew yet more angelic."

On Sunday afternoon—only four days before her death—she went to her Fishermen's Bible-reading and Prayer Meeting at the Maidens—once more to worship with them before she should join "with angels and archangels and all the company of heaven," as they kneel before the Throne of God and of the Lamb.

But on her return home her power of speech was almost gone. Yet she kept her children with her until their different hours for going to rest. The elder of the two—her little daughter—as soon as she left her fondly-loved mother, went to her governess and told her, with many tears, that she knew her mother was very ill. Immediately a messenger was sent on the fleetest horse in the stables for her doctor, who never left the house again until after all was over, for this life, of her who was the centre of light and joy and blessing. Her father and sister, Lord Blantyre and Miss Stewart, arrived the next day; and on the Tuesday Lord Ailsa; who had left her apparently in health, for a voyage in his yacht. He was not expected home till the following Saturday; but the merciful providence of God led the yacht for shelter from the dangers of a thick sea fog into Wick Harbour, where a telegram answering his inquiries arrived, which caused him to lose not a moment in travelling by day and night until he was again by the side of his most priceless earthly treasure. He was in time to be recognised and tenderly greeted, before her blessed spirit passed away to see the King in His beauty and to rejoin her angel child.

> Thus heaven is gathering one by one, to its capacious breast,
> All that is pure, and permanent, and beautiful, and blest;
> The family is scattered now, though of one home and heart,
> Part militant in earthly gloom, in heavenly glory part.
> But who can speak the rapture when the circle is complete,
> And all the children sundered now around their Father meet?
> One fold, one Shepherd, one employ, one everlasting home:
> "Lo! I come quickly." "Even so, amen! Lord Jesus come!"

PRAYER FOR SUNSHINE.

Sir,—In your issue of July 27 "Londinensis" ery properly suggests "putting up humble prayers o God for sunshine." Is it not well, also, to look or the cause of the "serious damage to the arvests," by wet and the caterpillar, which "Londinensis" dreads?

In the Book of the Prophet Joel (i. 4) we read: "That which the cankerworm hath left, hath the caterpillar eaten," &c. Ver. 11: "Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen...for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished." Ver 12: "Joy is withered away from the sons of men." Ver. 17: "The seed is rotten under their clods, the garners are laid desolate...for the corn is withered." In these words a case parallel to ours was portrayed.

Now for the remedy (ii. 12): "Now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to Me with all your heart...and rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God." Then (ver. 25) "I will restore to you the years that the caterpillar hath eaten...my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else."

Ritualism and Romanism have overspread the land, because the Government have always made Ritualist and Romanist appointments, and the Bishops have favoured the Ritualist movement. We have heard prayers offered up in Anglican churches to the Virgin Mary and to saints. We have seen, in the Metropolitan cathedral, a reredos exhibiting images of the Virgin Mary and of a crucifix, to which idolatrous worship has been offered. We have not known that "the Lord is our God, and none else." Therefore the wheat and the barley are being destroyed, and the "beasts mourn," because the hay crop is perished. "My people are destroyed for lack of the knowledge" (of God) (Hos. iv. 6); because (ver. 13) both priest and people have committed idolatry. "Hear ye this, O priests...the judgment is towards you. I will go until they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face" (Hos. v. 1, 15).

When persons deplore to me the bad weather, and the peril of ruined crops, and an uprising of the unemployed, I say, It is Lord Salisbury, and the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Ely, and Canterbury, who have done it; but my people would have it so.

Your obedient servant,
Robert Montagu.

RECENT PILGRIMAGE TO IONA.

Dear Sir,—We wonder much that in some circles deeper interest has not been evoked by the recent Romish pilgrimage to "The Holy Isle." On May 13 the Roman Catholics, 500 strong, headed by Bishop MacDonald, of Argyll, and Archbishop Smith, of Edinburgh, landed at Iona, and wended their way up the road leading to the grand old Cathedral, there to celebrate High Pontifical Mass, on their way chanting the Rosary. A small part of the central nave was roofed in, and otherwise prepared and decorated for the service.

Is the matter to end here? End it will not; for assuredly, if we do not see to it, a pilgrimage will soon be at Iona again. It is the beginning of the evil day. If the matter were purely a local one, no more might be said; but no, it is one affecting the freedom of Protestants. Privately, the Cathedral ruins are the property of the Duke of Argyll, but we think that a national right is vested in these ecclesiastical remains, and that, therefore, they ought not to be desecrated by such an absurdity as a Popish pilgrimage.

The scene in the Cathedral was very imposing. A large company of people assembled within the Cathedral walls with the blue vault of heaven above them, all devoutly and earnestly telling their beads, and muttering their prayers aloud; the priests in their vestments, the monks bareheaded, attentively following the service in their Latin prayer-books; the incense ever and anon puffing out; bells ringing at intervals; the elevating of the Host; and the people with one accord falling upon their knees, despite mud and damp.

A forty-two days' indulgence was granted by "His Holiness" to all present. The conclusion of the English portion was a prayer that Britain might be brought back to the feet of Rome. Enthusiasm and dead earnestness pervaded the whole service—as such we could not refrain from pity, mixed with admiration, and sighed that Protestants were so lukewarm and inert. Yet, our breasts heaved with sorrow and indignation that this mummery should be allowed upon Protestant ground, and we longed that a Divine cry could be heard in their midst, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

The Roman Catholic system is one of darkness and superstition, and therefore we are bound to wage war with it. No toleration should be given when our Protestant freedom is in question, as it is in granting Roman Catholics the use of one of our famous Abbeys. We know their Jesuitical ways; let us beware! Of individual Roman Catholics we say not a word; some, indeed, "wear the white flower of a blameless life." But our rights, our privileges, our pure, simple, sublime faith we must guard. Let liberty of conscience be given to every Roman Catholic to worship God in his own way; but let us see that he does not compel us to worship in his way some future day.—Yours, &c.

PERNICIOUS LITERATURE.

Sir,—Permit me to call attention, through your columns, to a subject which I recently brought before Parliament—viz., the spread of pernicious literature in this country of recent years. I obtained the unanimous assent of the House to this resolution: "That this House deplores the rapid spread of demoralising literature in this country, and is of opinion that the law against obscene publications and indecent pictures and prints should be vigorously enforced, and, if necessary, strengthened."

Only one opinion was expressed as to the greatness of the evil and the need of dealing with it more vigorously. The Home Secretary said most truly, in reply to me, "The French romantic literature, of which cheap editions were sold in this country, had reached a lower depth of immorality than had ever before been known. In comparing such literature with classical literature, it must be borne in mind that, while the latter was written with no evil purpose, the former was written with the object of directing attention to the foulest passions of which human nature was capable, and to depict them in the most attractive forms."

It has been my painful duty of late to read many communications on this subject from those who are grappling with this question, and I have been horrified by the discovery of the greatness of the evil, and its widespread ramifications. The Post Office is used to convey great quantities of poisonous trash, and miscreants are employed to introduce this garbage into schools for boys and girls. Only lately I learned of a system of supplying servant girls with obscene pictures and books in a suburb of London. The streets of this city are infested with persons who thrust indecent pamphlets into the hands of youths. The evil has grown to frightful dimensions, and unless the nation awakes to the fact, and seriously grapples with it, a rapid decline in morals will be the inevitable result.

The worst of all those classes of bad books are the so-called realistic novels which come from France, and which are being introduced into England by means of translations in enormous numbers. One publisher boasts that he has sold over one million copies. No such books were to be met with in this country till recent years; but the taste for this putrid literature is growing, and every means is taken to stimulate the appetite. One of these means is to procure notices in the daily Press, and I have seen lately, to my great sorrow, several notices of a flattering kind of some of the worst books ever published.

I do not know a sadder thought to any lover of humanity. Is the end of our vaunted civilisation to be the degradation of literature to the level of a sty? Are the youth of this Christian country to be saturated with putrid filth which the heathen of the ancient world would have blushed to read? One thing is certain, wherever the habit of reading such books is found all noble aims perish, all aspirations after the pure, the beautiful, and the good, die out, and man becomes corrupted to the core of his being. Nations that abandon themselves to such practices slowly decline, and by an inevitable law of Providence are swept away by manlier and purer races. If our country is to escape this fate there must be an effort to cast out this hateful thing. The law ought to be more stringently enforced; books are allowed to circulate here which are forbidden in Germany and our own colonies, and miscreants ply their trade safely in London who have been expelled from every country of Europe. Our excessive regard for personal liberty has laid us peculiarly open to this evil. We have to learn that liberty is for the good, not for the evil-doer, "that magistrates are to be a terror to evil-doers as well as a praise to them that do well."

But, after all, public opinion and moral suasion are the most powerful weapons in a free country, and I urge upon the press generally to maintain a high standard in this matter. The power of the press in modern life is enormous; it may be the guardian of justice and morality, or it may be the chief engine of national corruption. Its responsibility is enormous, and this appeal is made with a view of enlisting your support in a movement to purify the current literature of the day. This subject is now being brought before the House of Lords, and a Select Committee will be asked for next year to inquire into the whole question. Amongst the subjects that must be dealt with is the immense circulation of low-class papers for children. I have obtained a list of about forty penny papers issued in London, chiefly for boys, with a circulation of over a million per week. These papers are adorned with lives of successful burglars, pirates, thieves, murderers, &c. This class of papers is not so destructive of the moral sense as the French novel and its congener in this country, but is miserable pabulum on which to rear the coming generation. Need we wonder at the juvenile depravity which disgraces our English towns!

We have a great many organisations for good in this country—churches, Sunday-schools, good education, and immense stores of high-class literature; but all this is being countermined to a degree that the public are hardly aware of. There is a vast array of agencies for evil, and, in my judgment, the worst of all these, the most insidious, the most deadly, is this polluted stream of corrupt literature.—Yours, &c.,

Samuel Smith.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—An earnest Protestant work, writes a correspondent, is being carried on at Trinity (Reformed Episcopal) Church, Wolverhampton. Situated in a portion of the town where Ritualism is in full swing, the need of a simple evangelical service was felt by many, and the hearty support given to the clergy of Trinity Church, is very helpful. That the services are appreciated is borne out by the increasing congregations.

THE BIBLE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE at Forest Hill, S.E.—Rev. Dr. Keen was elected president, and the proceedings have been encouraging from the highest points of view. It was decided that an order of Connexional evangelists should be appointed. There are in the Home and Australian stations 245 itinerant preachers, 1854 local preachers, 830 chapels, 30,168 full members, 9012 Sunday-school teachers, and 51,038 scholars.

THE BLUE RIBBON MOVEMENT. — Mr. William Noble has adopted measures which promise to be productive of much good at Hoxton Hall, Hoxton-street, N. On Saturday evening last the first of a series of special meetings and entertainments was held. It was preceded by a long procession through the streets of the district, in the course of which halts were made and speeches delivered in advocacy of temperance. The thousands of on-lookers showed a friendly disposition, and it is hoped some of them were favourably impressed.

ST. KILDA.—An interesting article respecting this small and solitary island, lying to the west of the Hebrides, in Scotland, appears in the current Free Church of Scotland Monthly. "St. Kilda," it is stated, "is not a fairly level island, which the inhabitants can cross from side to side. It is simply a rock rising abruptly from the sea, furnishing a most natural resting-place and home to innumerable sea birds, but offering shelter to its human tenants only in one small bay. The population, all told, numbers less than eighty souls. As they have opposed all proposals that have been made to transfer them to a roomier sphere, it may be assumed that they are reasonably contented. Letters are only conveyed to them once in six months, and although wandering yachts occasionally touch their shores in summer, it sometimes happens that such long intervals take place in their intercourse with the mainland as to threaten their extermination through starvation. The whole of the inhabitants are members of the Free Church; they have residing amongst them an ordained missionary, and a teacher, for the education of their children."

THE TESTIMONY CONCERNING CHRIST.

A BIBLE READING

By Rev. Dr. GORDON, Boston.

[Concluded from our last.]

THE ATONEMENT.

Now we come to the next great fact—the Atonement of Christ. How do we know that He has made atonement for sin? Where are the witnesses? He does not receive the witness of man on this point. In the Gospel of Luke (x. 30), we read that on the mount of transfiguration "there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias: who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." Of course, in speaking of the decease they bore witness to it in some sense. Moses represented the law, and Elias the prophets, and these two, on behalf of the law and the prophets, bore witness to Christ. Moreover, Moses represented the saints that had died and been buried, and Elias those who had not tasted death, but had been translated. They talked of the decease which Christ was to accomplish at Jerusalem. Turning to the Greek, you find (and I am following high authority in stating this), that the conversation was as to his "exodus which he should perfectly (or successfully) accomplish at Jerusalem."

What a wonderful theme! And how very suggestive in the light of those two witnesses! Who were they? Moses undertook to accomplish an exodus, and was God's chosen servant to do that very thing. How patient he was with the children of Israel! What a master general he was! Who of all the sons of men has performed a task so arduous? But did he succeed with his exodus? No; on account of one sin—a single fault—he was debarred from entering the promised land, and as to those he led, they "could not enter in, because of unbelief." See him on the mountain there! He is about to pass away, and has but a glimpse of the land of promise. He looks out upon the prospect, and catches the glory of the sight before him; but he hears God saying that, though permitted to see the land, he may not enter in. He has failed to accomplish his exodus.

How about Elias? He also failed. You remember his discouragement, and how he lay down and asked God to take his life from him. The task committed to him was so great that he wanted to be excused, and God granted his request, for He cannot use a discouraged man. Moses fails; Elijah asks to be relieved, and the Lord relieves him, and takes him up into heaven. His was a noble life and a magnificent work, and yet we have to acknowledge that he failed in the exodus which he had undertaken. Here were two men that had failed, and they came down to talk to One who was to succeed. You have doubtless read the familiar story of the artist who was trying to work out on canvas a certain conception that he had formed in his mind. He worked day after day, and when night came on he was dissatisfied and rubbed out the picture, acknowledging that he had failed, and could not succeed. One day, having lightly sketched in his ideal, he left his home. While he was out, his teacher called. He learned that his pupil was out, and also saw the sketch on the canvas. Taking up the brush, with a few master strokes, he completed what the pupil had so long been unsuccessfully attempting. Having finished, he stole away. When the pupil came back, and took up his brush, his eyes caught the canvas, whereupon he exclaimed: "The master, the master has been here."

Now, here were the two pupils. Moses had failed, and Elijah had failed. But they were come to speak to the Master who was to accomplish everything. He was going to lead from the grave, and raise up from the dead, as well as deliver men from the bondage of sin. "To this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." He took a great company up from the earth in his exodus, which will be consummated when He comes again to take his elect unto Himself. What a sight for Moses and Elijah, that One comes to "perfectly accomplish his exodus"! Where are the witnesses from? From heaven. As the Sonship was testified from heaven by the Father and the Holy Ghost, so also was the Atonement testified from heaven by Moses and Elias.

CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

Thirdly, we will consider the testimony as to Christ's Resurrection. In Luke xxiv. 4, we have a statement on this subject. On the first day of the week, very early in the morning, the women found not the body of the Lord Jesus in the sepulchre, but "as they were very much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments." "That in the mouth of two or three witnesses" this wonderful fact might be confirmed, here two men—angels—bore testimony. As the women were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, the angels said unto them, "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen." That was the first announcement of the resurrection. The women were not the first to announce it; the disciples were not the first to announce it. They only announced it when they had heard it from these two; the angels were the first to preach the Gospel of the resurrection.

Two heavenly beings were chosen to bear this testimony. I believe they witnessed all that which they spoke to. "We testify that which we have seen." No man saw Jesus Christ rise from the dead. Look at the angels' testimony: "He is not here" is negative; "He is risen" is positive. You know some people say that negative testimony is all the testimony we have of the resurrection. Two of the most eminent sceptics, Renan is one of them, state that the women came and found the sepulchre empty, and then ran and declared that Christ was risen! And, proceeds the sceptic, the doctrine ef the resurrection rests solely on the fact of the empty sepulchre! Well, if it did, perhaps that would be enough for us. I think there is more in that glorious emptiness than in the abounding fulness of such scepticism as that of Renan. But an empty tomb is not all. Besides "He is not here," the angels said, "He is risen."

I am sure I am not presumptuous or speculating when I take the fact that a witness must tell that which he has seen. And it seems to me that the angels saw the body of Jesus when it began to stir with returning life; that they were there as that enswathed form lay before them—one sitting at the head and another at the feet of our Lord; and were still there when the last moment had come, when the time appointed had been fully completed; for it was just as necessary that Jesus Christ should lie in the grave the appointed time as that He should be crucified. For the expression we sometimes hear, that Christ burst the bonds of death, and broke the bars of the grave, is not according to Scripture. In the New Testament we read: "Whom God raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it." A man who bursts the bars of a prison and gets out, is an escaped criminal. To burst the prison bars, however, is one thing, but it is quite another thing to leave a prison when the last moment has been reached, and the full sentence expired. Jesus, having by his death and burial, paid to the uttermost of the demand, God opened the door, and called Him forth. And those angels saw it, so I believe, and they could say: "Here is the empty tomb; and more than that, He is alive; He is risen, and we are witnesses of the fact."

There is another point on which I beg you specially to dwell, with respect to the condition of things in the sepulchre. What was the condition of things? Everything in confusion? No. What wonderful statements those about the clothes? "The linen clothes laid by themselves," and "the napkin that was abo his head, not lying with the linen clothes, b wrapped together in a place by itself" (Lu xxiv. 12, John xx. 7). Now, you know the Je invented a lie to the effect that the discip "stole him away." But does a burglar, wh he has ransacked the place for your jewe leave everything in perfect order? Does not rather make quick haste off, and lea everything in confusion? If the disciples sto away the body of Jesus, it is wonderful th they should have taken time to arrange thin so exactly! But, heaven's first law bei order, the sepulchre was found as I believe had been arranged by the angels themselve Those angels are the witnesses that Christ ros from the dead, and our faith rests upon the word. Theirs is the first testimony; that all others is secondary.

THE RETURN OF THE LORD.

Now we come to the last great fact. It yet future, and it is necessary that it should b accomplished in order that Christ's redemptio may be consummated. How marvellous th words in Acts i.: "All that Jesus began both t do and teach." What was necessary for th remission of sins is finished; what was necessary for our sanctification He began, and i now carrying on. On the cross He said "It i finished," for He completed the work of atonement. When He ascended, He began the worl of intercession. On the cross the work necessary for the salvation of every soul in the worl was done; but Christ must continue in intercession until the end in order that our salvatio may be perfected. So the Acts of the Apostle opens with this word, and at once takes us t Jesus, seated at the Father's right hand.

And now we have (ver. 11) this wondrous scene and promise: "And while they looke stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Well may you look up when you know He is to return! If you had a photograph of that scene you would have a photograph of the Church as it ought to be from the beginning to the end of time. The Church's face ought to be an upward face. How marvellous that expression in Genesis; when the first sin was committed we read that the sinner's "countenance fell." God made man upright, but when sin came there came a fallen countenance. People who imagine that the grave is the goal of man may well look downward; those who see nothing beyond the tomb, and have a consummation of their hopes in their death, may well look downward. We believe that our hope is consummated by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and believe that He shall transfigure us into the likeness of his glorious body. We should therefore be looking up, always "gazing up into heaven."

Now, two witnesses came, and what for? Jesus had told the disciples over and over again that if He went away He would come back again. The fact was constantly stated, and constantly reiterated, and they ought to have no doubt about it. But it was so important a truth that it was necessary to add a sort of chapter of post-ascension Gospel. The witnesses came to say: "Don't forget what He said: He will come back." And notice that this sublime fact is attested by two witnesses. Suppose, when I came away from Boston I had said, as I did, to my children: "There is one thing I want you very particularly to carry out"—a very important business about my own church. "Now, be sure and remember to do this thing." Having started, and gone five miles down the river in the ship which is to bear me across the ocean, I am anxious about the matter for fear they might forget it, and I get two men to get into a boat, and go and tell my family to be sure and not forget to do as I requested them; and the men go and deliver essage. So, when Jesus Christ was borne in the sky, there was one matter of such tance that He was constrained to send

"two men in bright apparel" to say to hurch "Don't forget I am coming back
." As with the Sonship, the Atonement, he Resurrection, so with regard to the d Coming—we have two witnesses. Oh, elighted I am to find that the hearts of any Christians respond to this! Is it a doctrine, having no practical influence on ives? When I hear such a remark, I s tell a little family story.

"WATCH, THEREFORE!"

r Lord Jesus Christ said, "Watch, bee ye know not what hour your Lord
th," and that is the reason we should be ys watching. He would have us always hing; and if we are always watching for we shall be wonderfully careful to be l in such an attitude that we may meet with joy. Well, I was in the country
, and summoned home to the city on im-nt business on a Monday morning. I to my children, "Now, I am going away e city, and cannot tell how long I may be ned; I may return to-morrow, or not until week. You may look for me any day."
s detained in the city until the Saturday, when I did go home I was quite surprised arn that every day those little children ted upon being washed and dressed in best, and taken down to meet the train, use they said, "Maybe papa will come to-
" The expectation in that case had a very tical effect, for it kept them in clean faces clean clothes every day. And the Lord d have us in clean faces and clean clothes y day. Therefore, remember that "this e Jesus which is taken up from you into en shall so come in like manner as ye seen Him go into heaven."

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

AT a meeting held in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Wednesday last week, under the auspices of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, Cardinal Lavigerie, Roman Catholic Primate of Africa, delivered a stirring address on the African slave trade. The Cardinal has been charged by the Pope to preach a crusade throughout Europe against this crying evil.

The meeting was attended by many eminent personages, and presided over by EARL GRANVILLE. In the course of some opening remarks, his lordship rejoiced that there is now no need for arguing the abstract iniquity of slavery. It is quite true, he said, that some time ago, by the introduction of the powerful stimulus of European energy and liberty, we opened lucrative and large markets, and did give enormous motion to the slave trade which has existed from time immemorial in Africa. But during a hundred years we may claim to have done something towards washing away the reproach. We have reason now to believe that Belgium, France, and Germany feel with us the weight of responsibility in this matter. At the present moment I am not aware of any obstacle in the way of these nations coming together, and in a friendly and serious consultation trying to arrive at what would be the most judicious method for the purpose of putting to an end, or of greatly diminishing, the slave trade.

Having declared himself the servant of religion, humanity, and justice, actuated by no political thought or interest, Cardinal LAVIGERIE proceeded to deliver a powerful speech on behalf of the poor blacks. He maintained that England, having destroyed colonial slavery, owes it to herself to support by her sympathies those who wish to destroy African slavery, which he declared to be a hundred times more horrible. In the proportions which it has now assumed, slavery means the destruction of the natives of the interior, and rendering impossible the penetration and civilisation of the heart of the country.

My missionaries, continued the Cardinal, are established in the Sahara, and upon the high table-lands of Central Africa, from the north of Nyanza to the south of Tanganyika. Eleven of them have suffered martyrdom, while more than fifty others have died from fatigue and hardships. Such men have the right to be heard, and to be believed. Your Cameron affirms with truth that half-a-million slaves at the least are sold every year in the interior of Africa, and I will content myself with saying that the testimony of our missionaries not only confirms, but raises this estimate for those regions where they are established. They have seen with their own eyes in the course of ten years whole provinces absolutely depopulated by the massacres of the slave-hunters, and each day they are obliged to witness scenes which point to the rapid extinction of the race. They tell me, particularly, of the province of Manyuema, which, at the time of the death of Livingstone, was the richest in ivory and population, and which the slave-hunters have now reduced to a desert, seizing the ivory, and reducing the inhabitants to slavery in order that they may carry the ivory to the coast, after which they would be sold.

Advancing towards the interior there is a raised plateau of about 2000 ft. above the sea, and above this first plateau there is a second immense table-land, about 4000 ft. high. It is there that fall every year those abundant rains which form the great lakes, and it is from these lakes that flow the vast rivers of the Nile, the Congo, the Niger, the Zambesi, and their innumerable affluents. The nature of the soil, the heat of the sun, and the abundance of water contribute to make this country one of the richest and most beautiful in the world. The population also was, and in some provinces still is, very numerous and happy and peaceable. It is this population which Islam is exterminating at this moment by means of her slave-hunters, and by virtue of her doctrine that the blacks are an inferior and cursed race, whom they are at liberty to treat worse than we treat our animals.

By resolutions spoken to by Cardinal Manning, Bishop Smythies, Rev. Horace Waller, and Commander Cameron, the meeting pledged itself to bring pressure to bear on the European Governments, in order that they in turn may influence the Governments of countries in which slavery prevails.

ABRAHAM'S FAITH.

ABRAHAM'S faith, sorely tried by God's long delay, is rewarded, not with an external fulfilment of the promise, but with larger hopes, wider range of vision, greater strength to endure, more vivid realisation of the unseen. "He looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose Architect and Maker is God" (Heb. xi. 10). In the promise not a word is said about a city. Apparently he was still to be a nomad chief of a large and wealthy tribe. When God deferred again and again the fulfilment of his promise to give him "this land," his trusting servant bethought him what the delay could mean. This was his hill of difficulty, where the two ways part. The worldly wisdom of unbelief would argue from God's tardiness that the reality, when it comes, will fall far short of the promise. Faith, with higher wisdom, makes sure that the delay has a purpose. God intends to give more and better things than He promised, and is making room in the believer's heart for the greater blessings. Abraham cast about to imagine the better things. He invented a blessing, and, so to speak, inserted it for himself in the promise.

This new blessing has an earthly and a heavenly meaning. On its earthly side it represents the transition from a nomadic life to a fixed abode. Faith bridged the gulf that separates a wandering horde from the cultured greatness of civilisation. The future grandeur of Zion was already held in the grasp of Abraham's faith. But the invented blessing had also a heavenly side. The more correct rendering of the Apostle's words, in the Revised Version, expresses this higher thought: "He looked for the city which hath the foundations"—the city; for, after all, there is but one, that hath the eternal foundations. It is the holy city (Rev. xxi. 10), the heavenly Jerusalem, seen by the faith of Abraham in the early morning of revelation; seen again in vision by the Apostle John at its close. The expression cannot mean anything that comes short of the Apostle's description of faith, as the assurance of things hoped for in the unseen world. Abraham realised heaven as an eternal city, in which, after death, he would be gathered to his fathers. A sublime conception!—eternity not the dwelling-place of the solitary spirit, the joy of heaven consisting in personal fellowship for ever with the good of every age and clime. There the past streams into the present—not, as here, the present into the past. All are contemporaries there, and death is no more. Whatever makes civilisation powerful or beautiful on earth—laws, arts, culture—all is there etherealised and endowed with immortality. Such a city has God only for its Architect, God only for its Builder. He who conceived the plan can alone execute the design, and realise the idea.... Of this sort was Abraham's obedience. He continued to endure in the face of God's delay to fulfil the promise. His reward consisted, not in an earthly inheritance, not in mere salvation, but in larger hopes, and in the power of a spiritual imagination.—Principal Edwards, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "Expositor's Bible."

CHESHAM & AMERSHAM.—Mr. W. Skinner, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting missions in these places. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, crowds filled the tents, and many local workers lent a hand in pointing anxious ones to the Saviour. The results are very cheering.

MARYLAND POINT SCHOOLS & MISSION.—For nearly forty years this Mission has been employing many agencies for the present comfort and lasting well-being of the inhabitants of a district of Stratford, E. Young and old are, all the year round, the objects of Christian care, and the solicitude which has been shown to them has been largely appreciated and abundantly blessed. Mr. John Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N., is the treasurer and hon. secretary.

TRUTHFULNESS.—PROVERBS xii. 17—22.

THE book of Proverbs, as might be expected, emphasises the importance of truthfulness. Here we find the thought of truth associated with the law of God (iii. 3), with speech (viii. 7), with pardon (xvi. 6), with preservation (xx. 28), with instruction (xxii. 21; comp. Luke i. 4), and it is set forth as a thing which it is most desirable to procure and to retain (xxiii. 23). In our lesson we see

(1) THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF TRUTH (ver. 17).—The highest and the only proper use of speech is to show the right. It may be used to set forth: (a) Right views of God.—The Psalmist tells how he declared the righteousness of the Lord (Ps. xl. 9). (b) Right views of personal experience.—There is in the recital of spiritual experience the danger of exaggeration and misrepresentation; but, used with a strict regard to truth, such a method of testimony may be of the highest value. See how it was used by David (Ps. lxvi. 16), and by Paul. (c) Right estimates of character.—Biographies, funeral orations, and tombstones are often misleading. (d) Right statements as to the value of articles of merchandise.—The man who does this will not say of an article worth much, "It is naught" (Prov. xx. 14), with a view to getting an advantage. (e) Right expositions of Scripture.—The work of explaining the Word of God requires great care, and should not be undertaken lightly. Some wrest the Scriptures (2 Peter iii. 16), others make them void by their traditions (Mark vii. 14), and others handle them deceitfully (2 Cor. iv. 2); but the God-taught expositor aims at "the manifestation of the truth."

(2) THE WHOLESOMENESS OF TRUTH (ver. 18).—"The tongue of the wise is health." Health here means healing. Foolish speech often wounds, but in the word of wisdom is healing. The tongue of Saul, even when he flattered David (1 Sam. xviii. 21) was as a sharp sword (Ps. lvii. 4). For words that help and heal, we may turn to the gentler sayings of the greater King (Matt. xi. 28). The "sound doctrine" commended by Paul to Timothy is literally "healthy" doctrine. Sound doctrine convinces gainsayers (Titus i. 9), is helpful to all classes (ii. 1—6), and "cannot be condemned" (ii. 8).

(3) THE STABILITY OF TRUTH (ver. 19).—"Established for ever." Time is on the side of truth and so is eternity. There has been an abundant establishment of: (a) The testimony of Prophets.—Compare what is said of Babylon, of Nineveh, of Tyre, of Palestine, and of the Jews, with the writings of travellers for proof of this. What was uttered by the lips of truth has been established by the facts of history. There is a Divine "must be" (Luke xxiv. 44) in all that God has said shall be. (b) Words spoken by the opponents of error.—Lies often die hard, but sooner or later they die surely. Truth will live for ever.

(4) THE SAFETY OF TRUTH.—He who is on the side of truth is on the side of safety. We may be afraid to be wrong, but we should never be afraid to be right. Evil may be spoken against the just or true man (Matt. v. 11), but the seeming evil will be a source of real blessing. Joseph's brethren thought evil against him, but God had a purpose in all they did to him, and meant it unto him for good (Isa. l. 20).

(5) THE REWARD OF TRUTH (ver. 22).—"His delight." To be the object of Divine approval would be an all-sufficient reward, but how much more to be the object of his delight. Those in whom the Lord delights are the subjects of special favours (2 Sam. xxii. 20; Isa. lxii. 4).

ALDERMAN HENRY PHILLIPS writes from the Tidal Basin, Victoria Docks:—"May I, through the medium of your widely read paper, offer my services as hon. mission speaker to friends who may be arranging meetings during the coming winter? The Master has been greatly blessing me lately, both at the Conference Hall, Stratford, at Lady Ashburton's mission tent, and at our Gospel temperance mission. He gave me 496 pledges at our meetings. I feel that the call to preach the Gospel is laid upon me, and I shall be pleased to arrange for various dates for Gospel Temperance or purity meetings."

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

LEV. xxiii. 33—44; GOLDEN TEXT, Ps. cxviii. 15.

THE FEASTS OF THE JEWS.—Of these there were seven, viz.:—Passover, Unleavened Bread (which was joined to Passover), First-fruits, Pentecost, Trumpets, Atonement, and Tabernacles. At three of these—the three great feasts—Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles—every adult male was required to attend. God gave his people a most remarkable promise that He would specially protect their land while they were absent from their homes, keeping the feast at Jerusalem, by restraining the minds of their enemies round about. None might go up to the feast empty handed; each must bring his offering with joyfulness. Passover (April—May, our Easter), the most solemn of the three great feasts, marked the beginning of harvest; Pentecost, fifty days later, its completion; and Tabernacles (October), the vintage and ingathering of all the fruits of the year. Observe how wisely these feasts were arranged. While they avoid the busy seasons, they bring the agricultural life of the nation into closest connection with its religious and national life. Passover commemorated the Exodus, the beginning of their history as a nation, while Tabernacles reminded them of the happy contrast between their present condition as a settled people and their previous wanderings in the wilderness. "The three great feasts, represent the beginning, the progress, and the triumphant close of a godly life." They speak also of the history of the Church of Christ. Passover, both in the slaying of the lamb and the offering of the first sheaf of harvest, tells of the founding of the Church; Pentecost, of its harvesting, the Church in its present state, "presented as two leavened wave-loaves (the mixture of good and evil) with thanksgiving for the good"; while Tabernacles pointed forward to the latter-day glory, the conversion, restoration, and triumph of the Jews, and the full millennial glory. See Edersheim. The Day of Pentecost was fifty days after Christ's Resurrection—seven complete Sabbaths, dated from that first day of the week.

THE INTENT OF THESE FEASTS.—(1) To cultivate national life.—To overcome the littlenesses of local life, and merely tribal connection, by making them feel their oneness and greatness as a people, the people of God. Public spiritedness or patriotism was counted worthy of careful cultivation. (2) To benefit health.—By rest, exercise, careful cleansings of houses, clothes, and persons, change of air, society, and scene. Note God's care for his people's health, and rest, and happiness. He took care that they should have abundant holidays. (3) To deepen and extend their social life.—The interminglings of so many friends and strangers during those long journeys to and from Jerusalem must have had a wonderfully educating effect, binding men together, softening their prejudices, and enlarging both mind and heart. (4) To preserve their religious life.—By awaking memories of past deliverances, by cultivating reverence for God and his worship, and by the constant acknowledgment of God as Father, Friend, and King, the one and only God. (5) To foreshow the work of redemption.—Christ is our Passover, the Unleavened Bread, the Firstfruits of them that slept. The Spirit was poured out at Pentecost; the Feast of Tabernacles points to the coming glory.

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES completed the circle of feasts. It was a thanksgiving for the harvests, now completed, a happy reminder of present blessings in contrast with former deprivations, and a prophecy of future glory. Strictly speaking, it lasted seven days; but was followed by a day of holy convocation, distinguished by sacrifices of its own, which was sometimes spoken of as the eighth day (Neh. viii. 15, 16). During the seven days the people dwelt in booths constructed of living boughs. "No servile work" (ver. 35) was to be done, i.e., no common toil. Works of necessity or mercy were permitted, but nothing that pertained to a man's ordinary calling.

This feast was marked by an extraordinary number of sacrifices and offerings, especially of "sweet savour" offerings. "That is, their feasting and worship was characterised especially by obedience, love to each other, and fellowship." Further, a kid for a sin offering was offered each day, reminding us that in our holiest seasons ther sin to be confessed and forgiven.

The special characteristic of this feast was thanksgiving and gladness. "Ye shall rejoice bef the Lord your God seven days" (ver. 40). rejoicings were so great that the Rabbis use say that he who had never witnessed them did know what rejoicings were.

"On the eve of the second day, and on each the five succeeding nights, was celebrated the ' joicing of the water-drawing' in the court of Temple. Four huge candelabra were lighted in centre of the court, and the light emanating fr them was visible to the whole city. Around th lights pious men danced before the people w lighted flambeaux in their hands, singing hymns a songs of praise, while the Levites accompanied songs (Ps. cxx.—cxxxiv.) with instrumental mus It is supposed that on the last evening of festival, when the splendid light of this gra illumination was to cease, Christ called attenti to Himself, 'I am the Light of the world' (Jo viii. 12)."—Ginsburg.

Early on the morning of the last day, the peo marched in procession to the sound of music, an headed by a priest bearing a golden pitcher, to t fountain of Siloam. Here the pitcher was fille and carried back to the Temple, amid the joyf shouts of the people, and the music of cymbals a trumpets. The water was poured on the altar burnt-offering, just at the close of the morni sacrifice. Then Psalms cxiii.—cxviii. were chant responsively by the Levites and the people, to t accompaniment of the flute. It was, probabl during this ceremony that Jesus cried: "If a man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink See Edersheim.

(1) God's Goodness Forgotten.—A farmer cam from church, where he had heard a sermon fro the text, "The ox knoweth his owner, &c., bu Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider, and went into his farmyard. There his favourit cow met him, and came forward to lick his han Up to this time he had been careless and ungodl but now he burst into tears as he thought, "Tha poor creature knows me, and yet I have neve thought of God, or been grateful to Him."

(2) The Power of Thankfulness.—"If one shoul give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes, and search for them with my clumsy fingers and be unable to detect them; but let me take magnet, and sweep through it, and how it woul draw to itself the almost invisible particles, by th mere power of attraction! The unthankful heart like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and, as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings; only, the iron in God's sand is gold."—Beecher.

(3) A Glorious Change.—A man once gave his experience at a certain camp-meeting as follows:—"I used to live at Grumble Corner, but lately I have moved up on to Thanksgiving-street, and I find the air purer, the sunshine more cheerful, and the people better neighbours."

DISTRESS IN EAST LONDON.

OWING to the excessive rains there has been much distress in East London, especially in Poplar and the Isle of Dogs, consequent upon the flooding of roads and houses. Hundreds of cottages in low-lying districts had two feet of water in them during Monday and Tuesday last week, and the heavy rain poured through the rotten roofs, and added to the misery of the inmates.

Many labouring people are disastrously affected, losing both property and time. The Lord Mayor promptly made an appeal for the sufferers, and a number of subscriptions have been received towards a fund which has been opened in their behalf at the Mansion House.

BRIGHTON.—Early in June a tent was opened in the western part of the town by Rev. J. G. Gregory. The work has since been carried on by the town missionaries and a few other friends. Despite the prevailing wet weather the attendance has been very good, and there have been many cases of decision for Christ. The cab and stable men have seemed specially ready to make confession of their faith.

TENT MEETINGS IN OXFORDSHIRE.

In spite of the very wet weather which we have had for at least six weeks, these meetings have been carried on, and much blessing has been given.

We finished at Great Barford on Sunday, July 29, with a tent quite full of anxious listeners, who found it very difficult to catch all the words of the preachers, through the noise of the rain pouring down upon the canvas; but several at the close professed to find "joy and peace in believing." One man who had walked in from another village came up at the close, and said, "I am so glad you ever came to our village, for I have been to chapel these last eight years, and no one has ever spoken to me personally about my soul, till you did that night at the tent, and that was the turning point with me." A day or two since then I saw him, and he said, "I am expecting to get two or three of my mates over with me on Sunday, and I want you to have a word with them; they never go anywhere; I do hope they will be brought to the Lord."

We have removed our tent to Fritwell, and shall (D.V.) open on Sunday afternoon for a fortnight's mission before going on to other villages.

Will the Lord's people pray earnestly for much blessing to attend these tent services the remainder of these summer months, in these outlying and very much neglected places.—Yours in Christ,

D. Newell.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A public-house at Portsmouth is being transformed into a Sailors' Home.

The current number of the Sunday Closing Reporter gives accounts of a large number of meetings in support of the movement.

The North of Ireland branch of the British Medical Temperance Association is growing, especially among the younger members of the profession.

The South Wales and Monmouthshire Temperance Association reports vigorous work. The secretary, Rev. Morris Morgan, last quarter addressed 73 meetings, personally promoted petitions and resolutions on the licensing question in 40 towns and villages, and influenced 90 others in the same subject.

FOREIGN.

Pawnee City, Nebraska, is twenty-five years old, and only one year has it had a public-house.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, U.S.A., has sanctioned a stirring and trenchant address to the churches on temperance.

A great Prohibition Convention was held last month in Canada, attended by 175 delegates, representing all phases of temperance work.

In New South Wales the Independent Order of Good Templars is the largest of the temperance organisations. It numbers nearly four hundred lodges, with a paying membership of nearly 17,000.

Princess Louise Home.—The committee have it in contemplation to close this Home at Christmas if immediate and adequate support be not rendered. The Institution is now burdened with a debt of £600. The committee realise with sorrow and dismay the necessity, apparently imminent, for casting adrift the fifty young girls now in the Home. A little timely help might avert this. The office is at 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, London, W.; the secretary is Mr. A. M. Gillham.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Chester, has been transferred to the See of Oxford, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Mackarness. It is expected that Bishop Barry, of Sydney, will succeed Bishop Stubbs at Chester.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould, vicar of St. Michael's, Blackheath, has been appointed to the office of Central Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, which became vacant in August last by the resignation of Rev. Henry Sutton.

The Bishop of Ely has forbidden deacons in his diocese to preach more than one sermon a week of their own composition, and if their incumbents require them to deliver a second, they are to write out some sermon of a standard divine, to be supplied them by their diocesan.

The Church Army has recently commenced its sustained mission work at Stanmore, Kentish Town, Titchfield, Norbury, Barkingade, Deane, Brampton, Castleford, and other places. Arrangements are being made for its agents to labour amongst the hop-pickers and harvest folk. In some cases small tents, easily moveable, are to be used for this church evangelistic work.

Dean Vaughan, preaching in the Temple Church, and alluding to the resolution on the recognition of the ministry of persons not episcopally ordained, through whom, as ministers, it has pleased God visibly to work for the salvation of souls, said that, cautiously and guardedly as the resolution might be worded, those who knew the strength of the prejudices and prepossessions which it contravened could not fail to see in it a step, a stride, in the direction of speech and action larger and more generous than that which had for the most part characterised hitherto the Anglican Communion.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. T. J. Leslie has decided to close his pastorate at Mexborough, and devote his time to mission work.

Rev. W. G. Lawes, after recruiting in Australia, and conducting the printing of his books, has returned to New Guinea.

The Clacton-on-Sea friends have completed a year of their existence as a Union Church of Baptists and Independents, and the anniversary was recently celebrated. The membership at present is fifty-two; a Sunday-school has been established, and other religious agencies got into working order.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. E. Somerville has declined the call to succeed Dr. Saphir at Belgrave Church.

Dr. Donald Fraser, contemplating a visit to Australia, has been invited by the Foreign Missions' Committee to extend his journey to the English Presbyterian mission stations in China.

As a result of three months' ministry, Rev. J. B. Meharry recently received sixty-five persons into the membership of Crouch Hill Church. In connection with this church the young men are being well looked after by Mr. Meharry.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In Madagascar and Mexico reports speak of the work of Friends' missionaries as prospering. Education in both countries is spreading, and the Gospel leavening the people.

A denominational return shows that there are over 2800 members of the Society of Friends living in London and Middlesex. This is about one-fourth of the whole of the members resident in Great Britain.

Elwood Scott, and his companion, Robert Wilson, have had some very interesting meetings in Norway. An officer who had condemned the Friends for not fighting wept aloud at a meeting, and expressed his sorrow, and a Lutheran priest gave them a hearty welcome, and offered his daughter as interpreter.

Very practical Social Purity work is in hand in Western Yearly Meeting, U.S.A. The "White Shield Aid Society" has been started, with a pledge, and yearly subscription of a dollar, the money to establish a Women's Home in Indianapolis, where good influences shall surround poor girls and women.

Into the wild and wintry regions of Alaska, formerly Russian America, several American Friends have gone for missionary and educational work. They write: "Often our hearts are made to rejoice through the bearing of testimonies from the Indians, with tears streaming from their eyes." The door is wide open here for Friends.

At Canada Yearly Meeting the Richmond Conference delegates reported as follows regarding the Confession of Faith: "We recommend its adoption by this Yearly Meeting. Not as a creed binding men's consciences, but as an exposition of the truth in Christ Jesus." The Yearly Meeting adopted it, and also the following minute: "We again earnestly and tenderly advise our members to abstain from, and to discourage and discountenance the use of tobacco."

It is at once deeply interesting and instructive to see a congregation of from sixty to one hundred, composed of Armenians, Greeks, Turks, Persians, Jews, &c., gathered at a Friends' meeting in Constantinople. Yet this is constantly happening, at least weekly, and the Gospel of Christ is preached to them in Turkish. It is difficult to name a town of any size in Asia Minor where some are not found holding similar views with Friends, in most, if not all, points which distinguish Friends from other religious bodies.

BAPTIST

Two daughters of Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., were baptized at Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool, on Sunday week, by the pastor, Rev. D. P. McPherson.

A Chinese school in connection with the Baptists at Portland, Oregon, U.S.A., last year sent nearly 600 dollars to the foreign mission field. The contributors numbered forty-five.

From the mission field have returned to this country, for rest and change, Rev, A. E. Scrivener (from the Congo), Rev. J. and Mrs. Balfour (from Jamaica), Rev. R. E. and Mrs. Gammon (from San Domingo). The arrival of Mrs. W. Holman Bentley (from the Congo) and infant son is also reported.

At the anniversary of Regent-street church, Smethwick, Birmingham, it was reported that during the eight months' pastorate of Rev. W. H. Purchase, twenty-nine members have been added to the church, and 100 scholars to the Sunday-school. The Christian Band has 40 members, and the weekly offerings have doubled.

METHODIST.

There has been much blessing at Kingston-on-Thames in connection with special services by Mr. W. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist.

In the recent Australasian General Wesleyan Conference there was a strong disposition to open up new missions, if possible, in benighted parts of the South Seas, and to endeavour to start an Australasian Mission to the Chinese.

A Wesleyan missionary from China, writing to a contemporary, says: "What we need in our foreign missions is less of the coldness of the secretary's pen and committee's regulations, and more of the warmth of wise direction and loving counsel, such as were given by Dr. Coke in the early days of Methodist Missions."

At the evening service in the Central Hall, Manchester, on Sunday week, after an earnest address by Rev. Thomas Waugh, a large number of inquirers were led to the acceptance of Christ as their Saviour. The Manchester Wesleyan Mission Committee is taking over two chapels, and intends to work them on mission lines.

Many in Scotland, says the Northern correspondent of The Methodist Times, are of opinion that the coming year is one which will be fraught with important issues. The conviction seems to be growing that of late Methodism has not been keeping pace with the times—that we are neither so zealous nor so self-sacrificing as some of the Presbyterian bodies, and hence, as a natural consequence, we are not so successful. All over Scotland, Presbyterian ministers and Presbyterian congregations are adopting Methodist ideas, and carrying them out in practice with marked success."

The annual address to the ministers and members of the Methodist New Connexion contains some timely advice on the means of preserving the spirituality of the churches, and witnessing for God in domestic life, business life, and in all social and private relationships. The use of worldly and unprofitable entertainments as means of raising money for church purposes is strongly condemned. "Our mission is not to entertain men's fancy, but to save their souls; and the amusements which lead to little, save unbridled laughter, eat like a canker at the spiritual life and prosperity of the churches."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Belfast Female Mission is doing an encouraging work. During the past month the agents paid 926 visits, held 71 prayer-meetings, and 11 Bible-classes, and relieved 23 poor persons.

Several most successful open-air meetings have been just held in Belfast, under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League. The audiences chiefly consisted of the working classes, and the perfect attention paid to the speakers was most gratifying.

Gospel meetings, extending over a month or more, have recently been held in one of the Irish Evangelisation Society's tents at Loughbrickland, co. Down, and have been attended by a large measure of success. Several persons have decided for Christ and are now working for Him. These have established a Sabbath evening united service in the town, at which good has also been done, and which is largely attended.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. W. H. Gamble, of Port of Spain, Trinidad, for over thirty years a missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society, in the West Indies.—Mr. T. H. Vernon, a zealous deacon of the Congregational Church, Grafton-square, Clapham, and an earnest Christian worker.—Rev. Madho Ram, since 1869 a native pastor of the Church Missionary Society, at Jubbulpore, C.P., India.—Mr. William Bonar, a brother of Drs. Horatius and Andrew Bonar, and senior elder of the Presbyterian Church at S. Kensington.—Dr. Meshaka, of Syria, "the Luther of Syria," in his eighty-ninth year; he was born in the Greek Church, but when he became a man, and saw the unchristian lives of the priests and silly practices of the Church, he became an unbeliever. He was converted by reading the translation of an English book published by the Religious Tract Society, and ever since he has devoted his wealth and skill to the service of Christ. A dozen of his books circulate in Asia and Africa wherever Arabic is spoken.—Rev. Wm. Graham, formerly a Methodist minister, for the last twenty-two years pastor of the Independent Church, Carrickfergus.—At Tralee, in the fourty-fourth year of his ministry, Rev. Wm. Chesnutte, Presbyterian minister and missionary in co. Kerry, a humble, earnest, and faithful minister.—Rev. Dr. J. W. Burgon, Gresham lecturer in Divinity.

THE FOREIGN MISSION FIELD.

MADAGASCAR.

Whilst the Missionary Conference was being held in London, recently, special meetings, both of missionaries only and also for the natives, were held simultaneously in Madagascar, the workers of the Society of Friends, and The London and Norwegian Missionary Societies joining in. Prayer is asked that these meetings may be greatly blessed, and that they may lead to the putting forth of renewed energy for the spreading of the Gospel in the island.

THE WORK OF THE MEDICAL MISSIONARY.

We cannot too often insist on the essentially spiritual aim which is to characterise the medical missionary, and which alone distinguishes his work from that of the ordinary medical philanthropist. The late Dr. Kenneth Mackenzie, of Tientsin, in one of his latest papers in The China Medical Missionary Journal, wrote: "Our waiting-room may be full of patients, and all our beds be occupied, and yet these men and women will pass from under our care pretty much as they came to us, so far as higher things are concerned, unless we directly bestir ourselves for their spiritual good. They seek us, it is true, but for their bodies only; if we would win their souls, we must seek them. The command to us, as to all disciples is, 'Go ye,' 'Compel them to come in.' Deliver us from thinking that we are obeying this command, when we employ an evangelist, and say to him, 'You go and preach to the patients, while I attend to their bodies.' This is not being a medical missionary."—Medical Missions.

TIMES OF REFRESHING IN INDIA.

During the hot season, a large number of missionaries of various societies have been staying at Coonoor on the Neilgherry hills, and the religious and social intercourse, writes one, has been most refreshing. On Sundays a united service has been held in a schoolroom in the village, which has been well attended by those of the several denominations. During the time the great Missionary Convention was in progress in London, prayer-meetings were held daily at the residence of one of the missionaries, and were felt to be seasons of much blessing.

ADDITIONS TO MALAGASY LITERATURE.

Two important additions have lately been made to the books now available for the Malagasy in their own language. The first of these is a "Bible Dictionary," which has been several years in preparation, under the editorship of Rev. James Sibree, jun., who has also been the principal writer of the 1900 and odd articles, which the dictionary contains. Members of the London Missionary Society, and the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, have contributed to the contents of the work, which, it is earnestly hoped, will be of considerable service to all native pastors, evangelists, preachers, and students of the Scriptures. The second book is a translation of Bunyan's "Holy War," which has been done (in part) by Rev. R. Baron, and the present Governor of Tamatave, and recently completed by a young protégé of the Friends' Mission. The "Pilgrim's Progress" was translated by the first Madagascar missionaries, and has always been a favourite book with the Malagasy Christians.

A PRAYER UNION FOR AFRICA.

At the suggestion of some friends of the late Bishop Parker, at Cambridge, an "African Prayer Union" has been formed. Each member is (1) to pray definitely, on one day in the week, for the spread of the Gospel in Africa; (2) to read regularly about one or more of the African mission fields; (3) to correspond with some Africa missionary. The subscription is one shilling a year, and a quarterly paper will be sent to each member. Friends of all Societies and Missions in Africa are invited to join, and should apply to Mr. T. F. V. Buxton, Warlies, Waltham Abbey, Essex.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Rev. A. C. Murray, B.A., was lately ordained at Graaf Reinet as the first foreign missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa. He is the son of the Rev. Andrew Murray of Cape Town. The Free Church of Scotland has united with that Church in this advance, for Mr. Murray has joined the Livingstonia Mission for a time. He has been sent by the ministers of the Reformed Church, who guarantee his salary and that of an artisan-evangelist from their own stipends. In Natal also the Allied Dutch Church has begun work among the Zulus with much blessing, aided by Rev. James Scott, of Impolweni. In addition to his theological training at Stellenbosch, Mr. Murray received some medical instruction in Glasgow University.

BRAZIL.

Rev. E. H. Soper, of the Baptist Mission, Rio de Janeiro, writes, thanking those who have assisted in providing him with a magic lantern. He regrets, however, that the slides sent included no Biblical scenes. Mr. Soper says: "God is blessing our labours here; many souls are interested, and nine are shortly to make a profession of faith by baptism. I would again ask the readers of The Christian to pray for Brazil."

THE FAR NORTH-WEST.

Writing to thank a lady who forwards him The Christian, Mr. George Holmes, C.M.S. missionary, St. Andrew's Mission, Lesser Slave Lake, Peace River District, N.W.T., Canada, says: "Since I have been able to read and expound the Word of God in the Cree language, I have observed that some of the poor Indians are holding very loosely the doctrines which the Roman Catholic priests have taught them, whereby people have a licence to sin, if only they confess afterwards. The last high day some ten or a dozen refused to go to confession, and two families last winter discarded the priests and joined our church. Besides these, I have been privileged to admit fourteen heathen persons into our little congregation by baptism. Already their lives are a marked contrast to those of the Roman Catholics.

TEA TO NAVVIES.—Dear Sir,—For many weeks during this summer there have been a number of navvies laying the tram lines down Commercial-street, and while working opposite the door of the Old Home of Industry, God laid them and their eternal interests so much on our hearts that we were led to pray for them daily, and endeavour to show ourselves friendly, so that they might listen to us when we told them of God's love. Last Wednesday evening, through the kindness of a friend, we were enabled to ask one hundred of the men to a substantial tea. During the evening several kind friends affectionately urged the claims of the Gospel. The men listened so eagerly, were much impressed, and, thank God, we have since heard of blessed results. We would ask the prayers of the readers of The Christian for still further blessing.

(Miss) Mary L. O'Kell.

RATCLIFF "STRANGERS' REST." — There was a good gathering of workers and friends at the monthly meeting last Friday, Mr. Oscar Owers presiding. Mr. Henry Varley examined, and with the Word of God disposed of "some sceptical difficulties" concerning the Fall, Satan, and the Atonement. His address abounded in pointed, clear, and weighty statements, and was well calculated to establish in the faith those who heard it. Mr. Isaac, the secretary, drew attention to the need of additional workers at the Rest, and asked for bags and suitable literature for sailors to take to sea with them as well as for pecuniary help to carry on this good work. As an instance of what is done here, a lady in the meeting stated, she was travelling that morning on the Metropolitan Railway, and spoke to a sailor in the compartment, asking him if he knew the Strangers' Rest. His reply was, "Yes, I do, praise the Lord," and added that it was there, last week, he found Jesus.

Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness or perfection. REV. GEORGE E. POST, M.D.,

Of the Syrian Protestant Mission.

AMONG the missionaries from the East who made a marked impression at the recent Missionary Conference, Rev. Dr. G. E. POST takes high place in the front rank. As often as he spoke he made solid contributions to the deliberations of the Conference. He showed himself both a Christian and a scholar, and won respect and praise on all hands.

George E. Post was born in the city of New York, on December 17, 1838, of pious parents, who consecrated their children from birth to the service of God and humanity. In 1851 he made a profession of religion, and at once resolved to become a missionary to the heathen. In that resolve he has never faltered, but has ever endeavoured to carry it out in the light of God's providence. In 1853 he graduated with the degree of B.A. from the College of New York, and at once entered upon medical studies, which he pursued in the University of New York. Receiving his diploma in 1859, he was two years later ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church.

At the age of sixteen our friend gained his first experience of evangelistic work in a three months' tour as colporteur for the American Tract Society. Through all his medical and theological studies he was actively engaged as a lay missionary and Sunday-school visitor and teacher in New York. During one of the vacations of the Theological Seminary he assumed temporary charge of a church in northern New York, and took oversight of religious work in a large township.

In 1861, the civil war having broken out in America, Dr. Post entered the United States army as chaplain, and served two years during the campaigns of the Army of the Potomac. On the conclusion of the service of his regiment in the field, he went out, in October 1863, to Syria as a medical missionary.

His first field of labour was Tripoli, where he spent three years, with occasional absences in other portions of Syria. A very serious illness in the autumn of 1866 made it necessary for him to take a journey to Egypt in the winter of 1866-7, and to return to the United States in 1867. Meantime the medical department of the Syrian Protestant College had been established at Beyrout, and being called to the Chair of Surgery in that institution, he returned to the East in 1868, and entered upon his new sphere of labour.

ELLIOTT & FRY. PHOT.

(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs Elliott & Fry).

This transfer of sphere did not involve a change of purpose in reference to missionary work. It now became Dr. Post's duty to aid in training men for the most responsible positions in the Eastern world. Entering into the spirit of the missionary Institution which he had joined, he preached to students and patients, conducted a Bible-class for students, organised the students' prayer-meeting, and aided in every way possible in the general missionary work. Among other means of benefiting the country, he made and published a complete concordance for the Arabic Scriptures, covering seven hundred octavo pages in small type.

In addition to teaching, clinical practice, and evangelisation, Dr. Post has written and published during the past twenty years text books in Arabic on zoology, botany, primary physiology, materia medica, surgery, and a Flora of Syria and Palestine. For five years he conducted a medical journal in the Arabic language, but this labour has now been taken up by one of his students, a graduate of the college. Dr. Post is now engaged in supervising the translation and editing of a dictionary of the Bible in the Arabic language. This dictionary is based on that of Eadie, published by the Religious Tract Society, which has furnished a considerable part of the funds necessary to prepare and issue the book. May the labour and the book be greatly owned of God!

One of the most interesting features of Dr. Post's work is in connection with the Johanniter Hospital. This Institution is the property of the Johanniter Order in Germany, with which the Emperor and most of the nobility of Germany are connected, and the medical service is rendered by the professors of the Syrian Protestant College. It is a noble charity, and affords a fine sphere for the exercise of Christian philanthropy and evangelism. The patients are guaranteed by those sturdy Protestant deaconesses of Kaiserswerth an open Bible, and liberty to study it to their heart's content. And at any hour one may see Mohammedans, Jews, Druses, and Oriental Christians reading and discussing the Word. During all the years of service by the College corps Dr. Post has maintained Sunday services with the patients, and many have been the solemn and impressive scenes to which this work has given rise. Who can measure the influence of Christian care of the sick accompanied by earnest Christian teaching and exhortation?

The Syrian Protestant College is by itself one of the most important missionary spheres in existence. It is thoroughly evangelical and evangelistic. Its 180 students are carefully selected by the missionaries from the choicest of Oriental youth. They are trained in a thorough manner in the Bible, and in moral philosophy and Christian work. They have a wide-awake Young Men's Christian Association, which conducts various forms of Christian work, and maintains a most enthusiastic prayer-meeting, in which they become accustomed not only to aid one another in the Christian life, but to express themselves to edification in a mixed assembly, and to prepare for the wider sphere of evangelism which awaits them after their college course is ended.

Dr. Post has been spending a year in America after nineteen consecutive years of absence from his home. During this year he has given account of the work of the college and mission to large numbers of persons in America. After a little rest this summer, including the visit to Great Britain, he hopes to resume his work in Beyrout during the autumn.

It may be added that Dr. Post is a member of a number of scientific societies in Great Britain, the United States, and the continent of Europe; and has contributed greatly to the knowledge of the geography, physiography, and natural history of Palestine and Syria. He is now engaged in preparing in English a Flora of those lands, a work never before undertaken by any scholar. In fact, no separate Flora of those regions exists in any language, except that in Arabic which he issued a few years since.

We hope and believe that Dr. Post will soon see wonders wrought by those who are now profiting by his Christian culture and godly industry. He has already witnessed many results of his zealous labours in the East, and it is hoped that the near future will show that the institution with which he has so long been honourably connected has an important part to play, by God's blessing, in arousing Syria from her long sleep to a confederacy with those people who name the name of Christ.

MEMORIAL TO REV. G. BOWEN.

The Bombay Missionary Conference have resolved to perpetuate the memory of the late George Bowen, for many years a diligent servant of Christ in various spheres in India. It is proposed to erect, in a suitable quarter of the city, a memorial building, which shall include a Native Christian Institute, and a hall, to serve as a centre of missionary effort. Such a scheme will, it is thought, represent the catholicity of spirit which was a marked trait of Mr. Bowen's character, and will also call attention to the purpose for which his valuable life was given to India. Subscriptions may be sent for the "Bowen Memorial Fund" to the National Bank of India, Bombay; or to the office of this paper. Rev. William Bell, of Bellasis-road, Bombay, is the hon. sec. of the Conference.

MR. J. P. COHEN desires us to state that his address is now 17, Melrose-villas, Tubbs-road, Harlesden, London, N.W. We regret to learn that he is not in very good health.

The Priesthood of Christ

PERPETUALLY CARRIED ON IN HEAVEN FOR ALL BELIEVERS.*

> "And thou shalt make the breastplate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen, shalt thou make it. Foursquare it shall be being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof. And thou shalt set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones: the first row shall be a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this shall be the first row. And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond. And the third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst. And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their inclosings. And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes."—Exodus xxviii. 15—22.

Amongst the directions from the aged Paul to the youthful Timothy we have one expressed in these words: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Tim. ii. 15.)

All apostolic preaching and teaching are in beautiful harmony with this principle. In preaching the gospel to the unsaved, they never put them in the place of the saved, neither did they when teaching the saved address them as unsaved. To the former they preached a full and free salvation upon the ground of the Atonement of Christ, and to the latter they unfolded the wondrous portion that is theirs as accepted in "the Beloved," and then exhorted them to walk worthy of such a standing, calling, and hope. Thus THEY rightly divided the word of truth, and there is still the same necessity that we should do the same.

Ministry of the Word will be profitable in proportion as we are enabled to do so. But this can only be attained by accurate and prayerful study of it; and in such study we must carefully distinguish between the Atonement and the Priesthood of Christ. In other words, we must not confound his sacrificial and his intercessory work. Atonement is his one finished work upon the cross—Priesthood is the service that He now carries on in heaven for all believers. Atonement is past—Priesthood is present. The former is what Jesus did upon earth—the latter is what he is now doing in heaven. Atonement is what meets us as "lost," "dead in our sins," "enemies," "afar off from God"—Priesthood is for all those who are born of God, reconciled, brought nigh by the precious blood of Jesus. All that an unsaved sinner wants for pardon is found in the Atonement of Christ. That one complete work sets the sinner who rests upon it in eternal acceptance before God, "For by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." (Heb. x. 14.)

But then the moment we believe upon Christ and are accepted, we are constituted worshippers. The place of worship is within the veil, that is, in heaven. The Priesthood of Christ is to meet the necessities of believers as worshippers; and our worship will be either true or false in proportion as we understand and rightly use the Priesthood of Christ. None of us know until we search how full the Bible is of this subject. In both the Old and New Testaments we shall find that the Spirit has given this truth a large place. In the types, how full it is. Look at the high priest at the brazen altar—then inside the veil, out of the view of the people, and alone with God—then coming out and reappearing to all the people. (Lev. ix.) The priest and the victim at the brazen altar typify Jesus upon the cross; the priest carrying the blood within the veil and sprinkling it upon the mercy-seat typifies Jesus now in heaven; and the priest coming out again typifies Christ at his second coming. (See Heb. ix. 24—28.)

Christians are often hindered from seeing these things clearly, from the fact that in the Old Testament the priest both offered the victim at the brazen altar and carried the blood within the veil. Hence many speak of Christ as Priest upon the cross, as well as now in heaven. This always leads to confusion of mind, both as regards the simple gospel and the standing and worship of believers. It leads the preacher often to apply passages of the Word to the unsaved that only properly belong to Christians; and on the other hand, it more or less beclouds his statements as to the Atonement itself; but the moment we see clearly the place in which Scripture puts the Priesthood of Christ, we shall avoid such confusion.

In Heb. viii. 4 it is expressly asserted that Christ could not have been a priest on earth: 'For if He were on earth, He should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer the gifts according to the law." The reason is here assigned: none could be priests on earth but those of the tribe of Levi. Priesthood having been Divinely limited to the tribe of Levi, barred Christ from being a priest on earth, for He sprang out of Judah, the royal tribe. (Heb. vii. 14.) There was once a Divinely-appointed human priesthood, that we might have some idea of Christ's priesthood now in heaven. The Aaronic priesthood existed over fifteen hundred years; it terminated at the cross. The death of the Lord Jesus Christ was the death and burial of all human priesthood. All official priesthood now centres in and is alone exercised by our great and ever-living Jesus, who now appears in the presence of God for us. (Heb. ix. 24.)

Scriptural views of all official Priesthood now centring in Christ, will help us to see the sense in which all believers are priests. All who believe upon Christ are one with Him, and by virtue of that oneness are placed before God in all the acceptability and nearness of Christ. Hence all Christians are addressed as a holy priesthood and a royal priesthood. (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9; Rev. i. 5, 6.) The perfection of Christ's work and the value of his blood are such, that all his people have now liberty to enter the holiest, once-purged worshippers. (Heb. x. 2, 19.)

What a Saviour He is to his people. He bore all their sins upon the cross. There the infinite weight of guilt pressed upon Him. There the whole wrath due to sin fell upon Him. He exhausted its penalty, and so infinitely compensatory and satisfactory to God is that atoning work of his own Son, that all who depend upon it have the full value that God sees and knows to be in it, and that not merely for time, but for eternity. The cross bounds and defines atonement. There could have been none before the cross, for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul. (Lev. xvii. 11; Heb. ix. 22.) There can be none after, for on the cross He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. (Heb. ix. 26.)

The believer's acceptance is not only based upon the atonement, but is also commensurate with it. The atonement has been made to God for the sinner, and God has shown his acceptance of that vicarious or substitutional work, by raising Christ from the dead. When He pardons the sinner who trusts in that work, He does so according to his own perfect estimate both of the extent of the sinner's guilt, and the value that He sees in the blood of Jesus. Were it otherwise, there could be no such thing as the absolute justification of a sinner before God. (Rom. v. 1; Eph. ii. 14; Col. i. 20.)

As long as the value of the finished work of Christ lasts, the believer is safe. As his pardon before God rests upon the value of the blood, that pardon is as unalterable as the value of the blood.

LATE UTTERANCES OF THE SCARLET WOMAN.

From Address by Pastor Fliedner, at Mildmay Conference.

"Upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery Babylon the Great, the Mother of harlots and abominations of the Earth."—REV. xvii. 5.

"MARY has clothed the Divine Son with her immaculate flesh, and He therefore clothed her with his power and mercy, which is so great that whenever a sinner presents himself before her she never examines if he is worthy to be heard, for she friendly receives everyone, without exception, who comes to her feet. Like the moon gives light to inferior bodies, Mary gives life and light to the most abject sinners. If we are afraid of the power of the Most High, we need not be afraid to come near to her. She is Queen of heaven and Mother of God, but as daughter of Adam she has taken on herself our own flesh, and is all pity and all grace.

"The devil tries to destroy us, Mary seeks us to give us life and salvation. Her power has no limits, especially in disarming the arm of Divine justice. Why is God, so severe in the Old Testament, now so friendly to the sinner? That comes through the merits and the love of Mary. The world long ago would have been destroyed, if she with her prayers did not sustain it. As this Immaculate Virgin has given refuge in her womb to God, she asks, as price for this hospitality, the peace of the world, and the salvation of those who perish, and the life of the dead. So that all our salvation depends alone on her. She is that throne of grace unto which the Apostle admonishes us to come boldly, that we may of Him obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."

MELBOURNE Y.M.C.A.—The syllabus of work, from July to October, shows that much is being done to commend the truth to the young men of Melbourne, as well as to help them in running the Christian race. The fifteenth annual conference is to be held on September 11 to 14, inclusive. The Australasian Convention, which it was proposed to hold in October, has had to be abandoned.

HIGH LICENCE

A HINDRANCE TO PROHIBITION.

PRELUDE TO MR. JOSEPH COOK'S TWO HUNDREDTH BOSTON MONDAY LECTURE.

THERE has been set on foot within a few weeks a movement by the friends of temperance to have all licence laws declared unconstitutional. The hope that such an effort may succeed is based on these great words of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States: "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it; much less their servants.... Government is organised with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them." This language had reference to the lotteries so famous and infamous in New Orleans, and would undoubtedly be reaffirmed concerning lotteries if a proper case were brought before the Supreme Court. Whether it would be reaffirmed concerning licence laws is at least a question. I advise temperance people, therefore, not to expect a decision declaring all licence laws unconstitutional, and yet it may be that you will reach such a decision through the Supreme Court of the Republic. It is evident that the moral, if not the legal, principles contained in these words do go to the extent of a declaration that licence laws ought to be regarded as unconstitutional, because inimical to the welfare of the people. That the principle which the temperance people have read in these words is really in them I fully believe, but whether as much will be asserted by the Supreme Court of the United States, I should prefer not to affirm until our history has been further developed in the line of temperance agitation before the loftiest legal tribunal of the land.

Regarding this new effort as a thoroughly proper one, because morally, if not legally, justifiable, I am yet of the opinion that our conflict with those who would legalise the liquor traffic is not ended, and I, therefore, beg leave to present a few reasons why high licence is to be opposed as a hindrance to prohibition. Most of us here are in favour of severe temperance legislation. Some of us, were it not for our political affiliations, would demand constitutional prohibition, State and national. But on this platform we make little account of mere party ties. We are willing to hear the truth, no matter whose political prejudices it offends. The opinion of the Methodist Church, as declared by her bishops in the United States, is that the liquor traffic can never be legalised without sin.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST HIGH LICENCE.

High licence is a hindrance to prohibition for these eight reasons:—

(1) Because it enlists the covetousness of the taxpayer in the support of the saloon as a source of revenue and of supposed diminution of taxes.

About a million dollars are raised in Chicago from the fees given by those who obtain high licences. Herrick Johnson says you never can bring Chicago to believe in prohibition while so much money is obtained from the whiskey rings to diminish taxes. Dr. Funk said the other day, in New York,—he is the editor of the "Voice," as most of you know, the foremost temperance journal in the world; I am not connected with it in any way, and I wish it all success,—that more than two millions of dollars are received annually from New York city and its adjacent towns for licences, and that nothing checks average temperance work so thoroughly as this apparent diminution of taxes. An internal revenue whiskey tax makes our whole people participators in the gains and crimes of the liquor traffic. It yields about 96,000,000 dollars in some years, but Senator Blair has just shown that the results of it are probably such as to cost us about 15 dollars a head. We get about 1.60 dollars a head from it, but the direct damages it does cannot be covered by 15 dollars cash from every citizen of the Republic. The apparent diminution of taxes is only apparent. Nevertheless, such is the cupidity of the average taxpayer that as soon as high licence brings a great revenue to the State, he becomes wet powder for prohibition.

(2) Because high licence gilds the saloon, transforms the gin-hole into the gin-palace, and so gives external respectability to the liquor traffic.

(3) Because high licence makes the wealthy saloon the low politicians' headquarters, a caucus room, and often a polling place, and so brings elections under the domination of the whiskey rings, and causes the path to political preferment to lead through the gilded gin-mill.

About seven out of every ten caucuses held in New York city, of late, have been held in saloons or next door to them.

(4) Because high licence leads in practice to a combination of the gin-mill with the headquarters of the worst vices, especially with those of gambling and prostitution. "Low licence," says Herrick Johnson, "asks for your son; high licence for your daughter also."

(5) Because high licence is a party measure merely, and can be reversed by a change in party majorities, and so stimulates the whiskey syndicates to foster political corruption; while constitutional prohibition, passed by the whole people, could not easily be overturned, and would not, therefore, tempt to political machination and corruption as a merely party measure always does.

(6) Because high licence is generally approved, and prohibition always opposed, by the whiskey rings.

(7) Because while high licence may diminish the number of saloons, it is the notorious testimony of the best authorities that it does not diminish the amount of liquor sold nor the extent of drunkenness.

(8) Because licence in all its forms is contrary to the principles of good government and good morals. It is a permission by the State to certain people for a consideration to manufacture taxes, paupers, drunkards, widows, orphans, criminals, madmen, and lost souls.

BRIGHTON.—James Wood, better known as "King Solomon, of the Army of the Lord," came up on Friday at Brighton County Court, sitting in bankruptcy, before the registrar, Mr. Jennings, for adjourned examination. He stated that the hall called the "Sanctuary of Jehovah" was purchased by a Miss Webb and Miss Hughes, the former paying £2000 and the latter £250. With the hall was a dwelling-house, where some twelve or fifteen persons lived. These were maintained by contributions of the members. These numbered in all two or three hundred, and some resided together in other houses. The property was vested in trustees, the debtor being one. During examination it transpired that in some accounts submitted £155 was charged on the disbursement side for the passage of Wood's family back from Australia, and another £150 for a Palestine mission undertaken by Wood and four other members of the army. The examination was closed.

JESUIT MISSIONS.—A recent issue of the Etudes Religieuses contains some statistics of the number and distribution of the Jesuit missionaries abroad at the commencement of the present year. The numbers are those of the various orders of the priesthood, priests, coadjutors, and "scolastiques," but in every case the number of priests is more than twice that of the other two orders put together. In the Balkan Peninsular there are forty-five Jesuit missionaries; in Africa, and especially Egypt, Madagacsar, and the Zambesi region, 223; in Asia, especially Armenia, Syria, certain parts of India, and parts of China, 699. In China alone the number is 195, all of French nationality. In Oceania, including the Philippines, the Malay Archipelago, Australia, and New Zealand, the number is 270; in America, including certain specified States of the Union, portions of Canada, British Honduras, Brazil, and Peru, 1130; the total number of Jesuits scattered over the globe in purely missionary work being 2377. These are of various nationalities, but the vast majority are French.—The Times.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXII.—The Greatest Trial of All.

Gen. xxii.—(continued.)

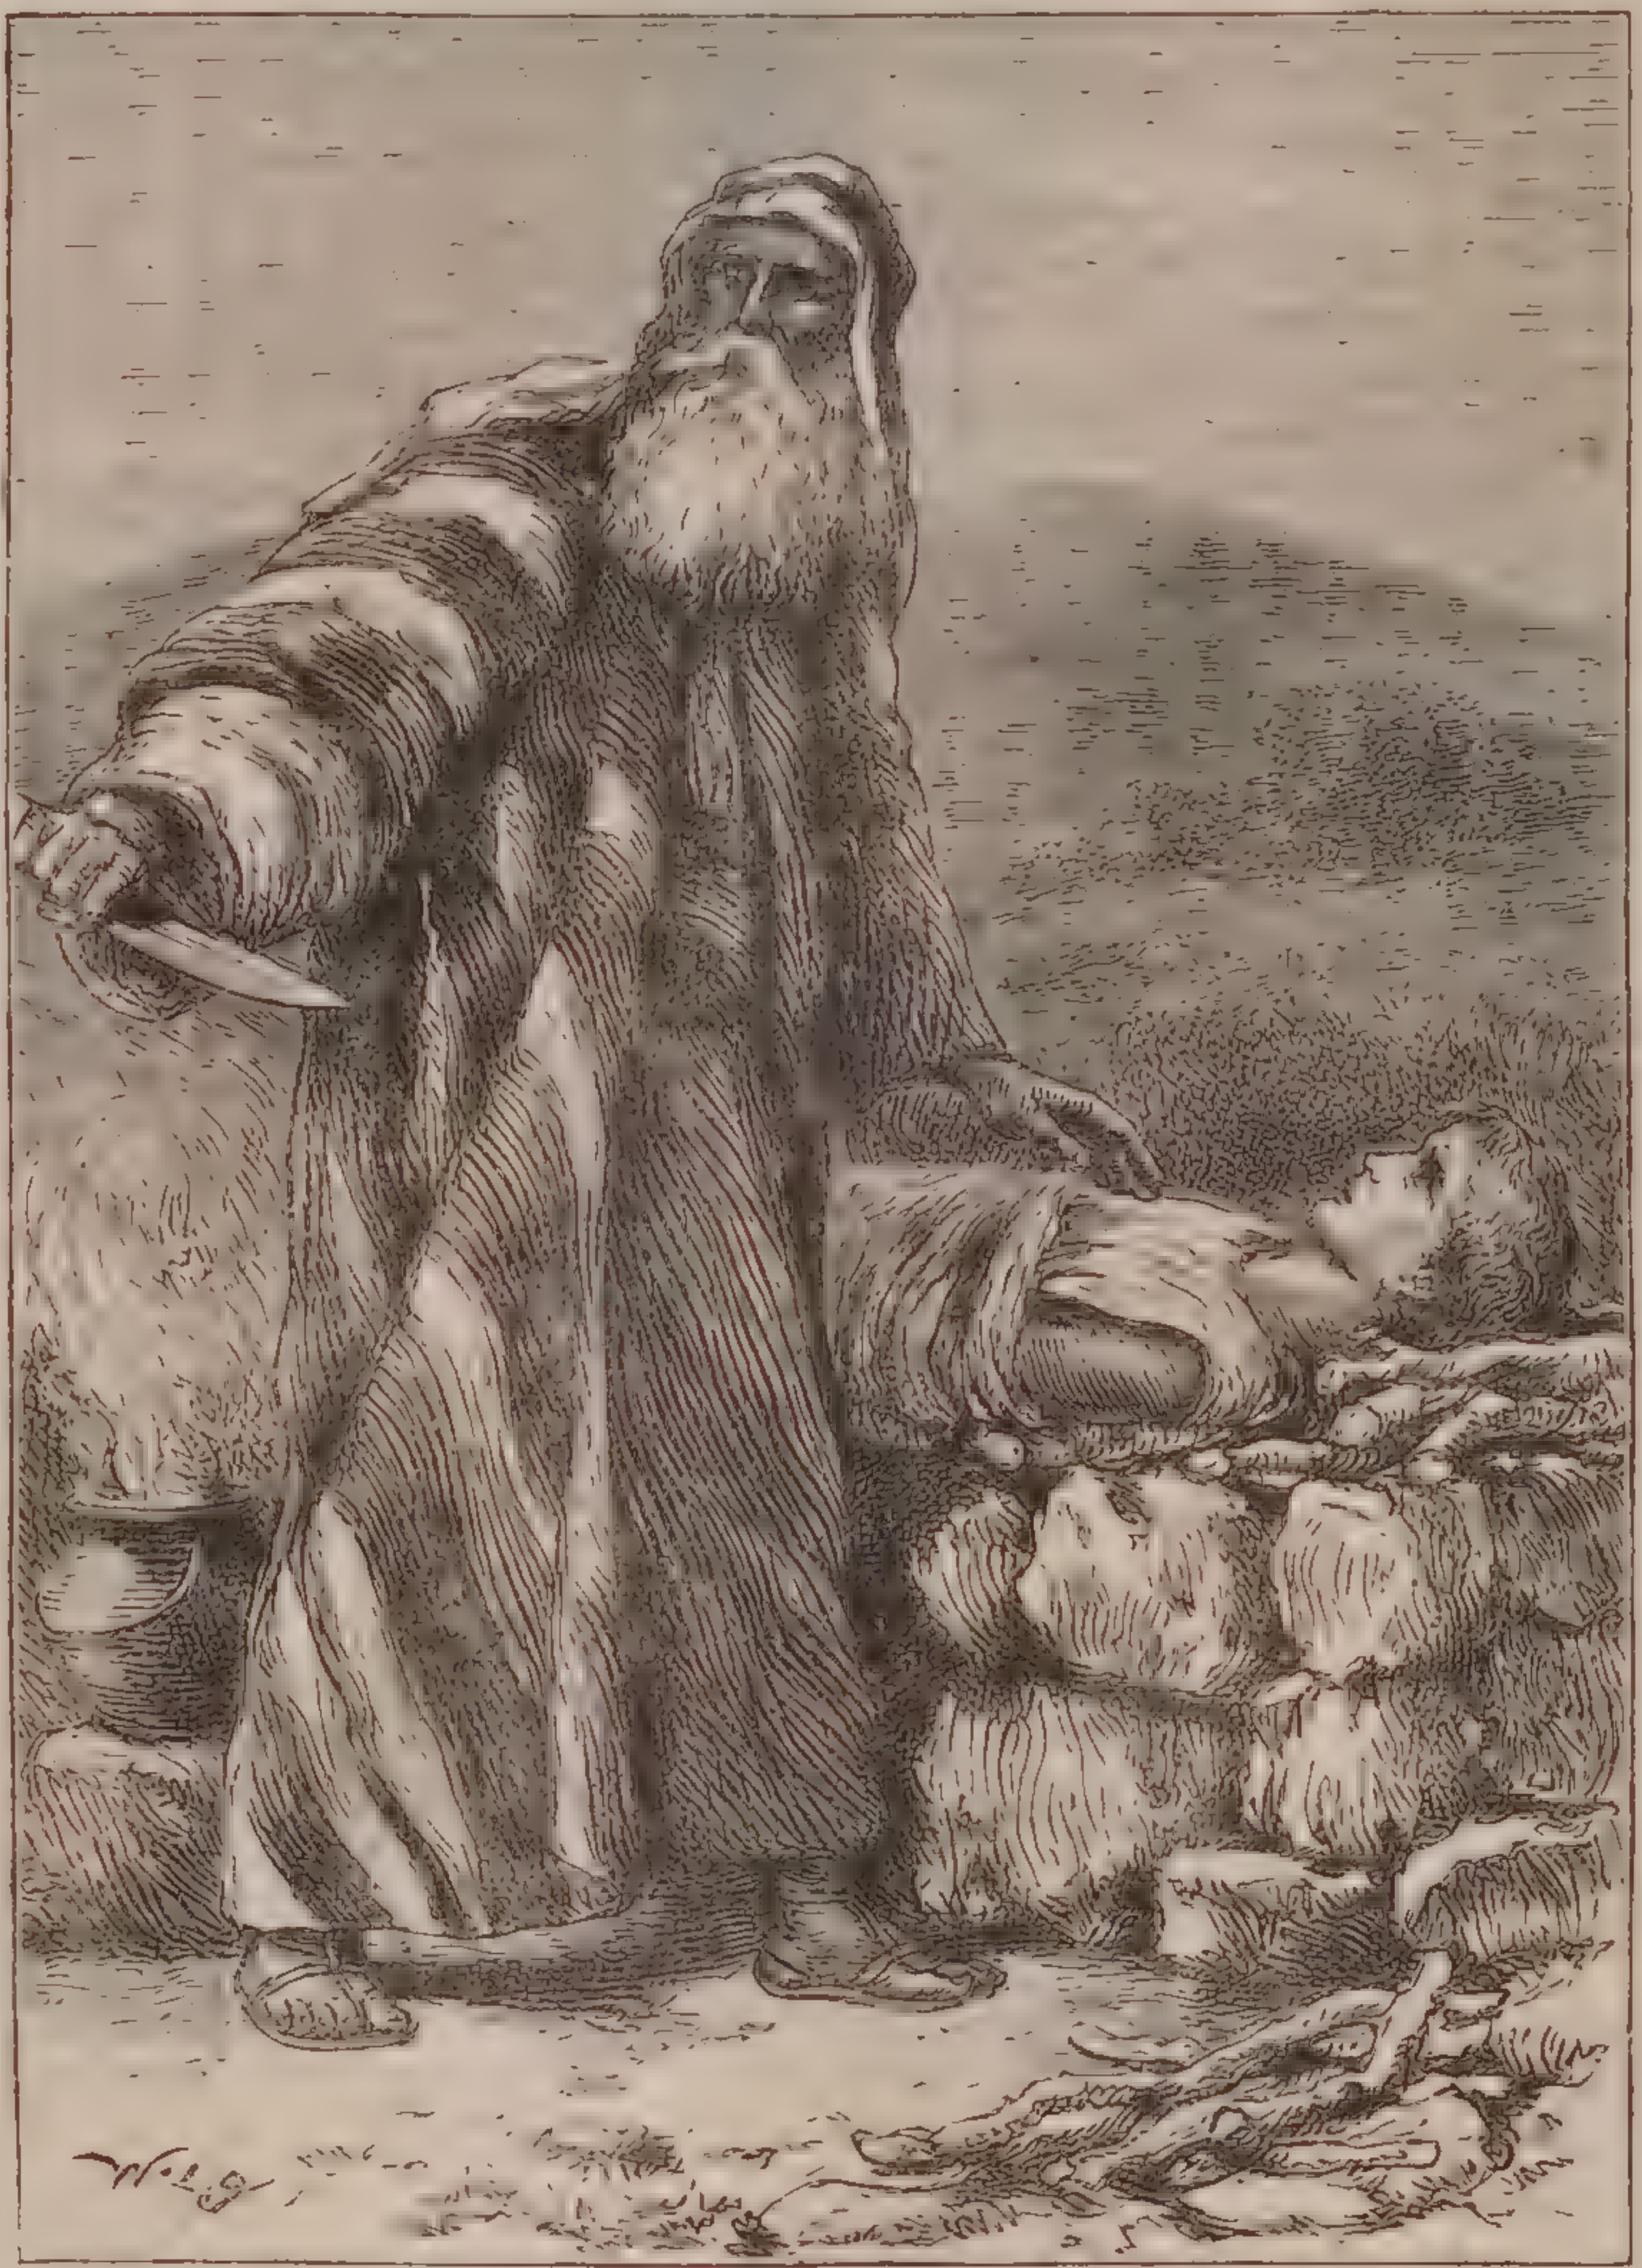
What those three days of quiet travelling must have been to Abraham, we can never know. It is always so much easier to act immediately and precipitately, than to wait through long days, and even years; but it is in this process of waiting upon God that souls are drawn out to a strength of purpose and nobility of daring, which become their sacred inheritance for all after time. And yet, despite the Patriarch's preoccupation with his own special sorrow, the necessity was laid upon him to hide it under an appearance of resignation, and even gladsomeness, so that neither his son nor his servants might guess the agony which was gnawing at his heart.

At last, on the third day, he saw from afar the goal of his journey. God had told him that He would tell him which of the mountains was the appointed spot of the sacrifice, and now probably some sudden conviction seized upon his soul, that an especial summit which reared itself in the blue distance, was to be the scene of that supreme act in which he should prove that to his soul God was chief and best. Tradition, which seems well authenticated, has always associated that "mountain in the land of Moriah" with the place on which, in after days, stood the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite, and the site of Solomon's Temple; and there is a wonderful appropriateness in the fact that this great act of sacrifice took place on the very spot where hecatombs of victims and rivers of blood were to point pious souls to that supreme Sacrifice which this prefigured.

As soon as the mountain had loomed into view, Abraham said unto his young men: "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go beyond and worship, and come again to you." What a significant expression, in this connection, is that word worship. It reflects the mood of the patriarch's mind. He was preoccupied with that Being at whose command he had gone forth on this sorrowful errand. He looked upon his God at the moment when He was asking so great a gift, as only deserving adoration and worship. The loftiest sentiment that can fill the heart of man swayed his whole nature, and it seemed to him as if his costliest and dearest treasure was not too great to give to that great and glorious God who was the one object of his life.

It is of the utmost importance that we should emphasise the words of assured confidence, which Abraham addressed to his young men before he left them. "I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you." This was something more than unconscious prophecy; it was the assurance of an unwavering faith, that somehow or other God would interpose to spare his son, or at least, if necessary, to raise him from the dead. In any case Abraham was sure that Isaac and he would before long come again. It is this which so largely removes the difficulties that might otherwise obscure this act; and it remains to all time a most striking proof of the tenacity with which faith can cling to the promises of God. When once you have received a promise, cling to it as a sailor to a spar in the midst of the boiling waters. God is bound to be as good as his word, and even though He ask you to do the one thing that might seem to make deliverance impossible, yet if you dare to do it, you will find not only that you shall obtain the promise, but also that you shall receive some crowning and unexpected mark of his love.

The influence of Abraham's behaviour was felt by his son.—He caught his spirit. We do not know how old he was; he was at least old enough to sustain the toil of a long march on foot, and strong enough to carry up hill on his shoulder the faggots, laid upon him by his father. But he gladly bent his stalwart shoulders under the weight of the wood, just as through the Via Dolorosa a greater than he carried His cross. Probably this was not the first time that they had gone on such an errand; but it is beautiful to see the evident interest the lad took in the proceedings as they went, "both of them together."



THE OFFERING-UP OF ISAAC.

On all previous occasions Abraham had taken with him a lamb; but on this occasion Isaac's wondering attention was drawn to the omission of that constant addition to their acts of sacrifice; and with a simplicity which must have touched Abraham to the quick, he said, "My father, behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" What a stab was this to that sorely tried heart, which dare not even then reveal the secret beneath which it bowed; and which eagerly caught at a subterfuge to enable it to postpone the answer. Thus with a gleam of prophetic insight, mingled with unwavering faith in Him for whose sake he was suffering, the father answered, "My son, God will Himself provide a lamb for a burnt offering." So they went both of them together.

Can we wonder that Abraham shrank from disclosing all the facts?—We all have our treasures whom we fondly love. We shudder at the remotest thought of losing them. With breaking hearts we watch the colour fade from the cheek of a darling child, or mark the slow progress of disease in some twin soul; but Abraham must submit to a keener test than these. Our dear ones depart in spite of all we do to keep them; but in Abraham's case there was this added anguish, that he was to inflict the blow. The last thought that Isaac would have of him would be, holding the uplifted knife; and even though the lad might be restored to him, yet would it not be a revelation to the young heart to discover that it was possible for his father to do to him an act of violence like that?

But at last the discovery could no longer be withheld.—"They came to the place which God had told him of, and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order." Can you not see the old man slowly gathering the stones; bringing them from the furthest distance possible; placing them with a reverent and judicious precision, and binding the wood with as much deliberation as possible? But at last everything is complete, and he turns to break the fatal secret to the young lad who had stood wondering by. Inspiration draws a veil over that last tender scene—the father's announcement of his mission; the broken sobs; the kisses, wet with tears; the instant submission of the son, who was old enough and strong enough to rebel if he had had the mind. Then the binding of that tender frame, which, indeed, needed no compulsion, because the young heart had learned the secret of obedience and resignation. Finally, the lifting him to lie upon the altar, on the wood. Here was a spectacle which must have arrested the attention of heaven. Here was a proof of how much mortal man will do for the love of God. Here was an evidence of child-like faith which must have thrilled the heart of Eternal God, and moved Him in the very depths of his being. Do you and I love God like this? Is He more to us than our nearest and dearest? Suppose they stood on this side, and He on that side, would you go with Him, though it cost you the loss of all? You think you would. Ay, it is a great thing to say. The air upon this height is too rare to breathe with comfort. The one explanation of it is to be found in the words of our Lord: "He that loveth father or mother, son or daughter, more than Me, is not worthy of Me."

The blade was raised high, flashing in the rays of the morning sun; but it was not permitted to fall. God spared his friend what He did not spare Himself. "And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham." How gladly would that much-tried soul seize at anything that offered the chance of respite or of pause; and he said, as he had said before, "Here am I." Would that we could more constantly live in the spirit of those words, so that God might always know where to find us, and so that we might be always ready to fulfil his will. Then followed words that spoke release and deliverance: "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from Me."

When we have given our best and costliest to God, passing them through the fire, surrendering them to his will, He will give them back to us as gold refined—multiplied, as Job's belongings were. But it is also quite likely that He will not do so until we have almost lost all heart and hope. "Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-Jireh," "The Lord will provide." And so it passed into a proverb, and men said one to another, "In the mount of the Lord deliverance shall be seen." It is a true word. Deliverance is not seen till we come to the mount of sacrifice. God does not provide deliverance until we have reached the point of our extreme need. It is when our Isaac is on the altar, and the knife is about to descend upon him, that God's angel interposes to deliver.

Near by the altar there was a thicket; and, as Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked around, he beheld a ram caught there by its horns. Nothing could be more opportune. He had wanted to show his gratitude, and the fulness of his heart's devotion; and he gladly went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering instead of his son. Here, surely, is the great doctrine of substitution, and we are taught how life can only be preserved at the cost of life given. According to one of the early Church writers, there is a yet deeper mystery latent here; viz., that whilst Isaac represents the Deity of Christ, the ram represents his human nature, which became a sacrifice for the sins of the world. I am not sure that I would altogether accept this rendering; because it is the Deity of Christ working through his humanity which gives value to his sacrifice; but all through this marvellous story there is an evident setting forth of the mysteries of Calvary.

Abraham's act enables us better to understand the sacrifice which God made to save us. The gentle submission of Isaac, laid upon the altar with throat bare to the knife, gives us a better insight into Christ's obedience to death. Isaac's restoration to life, as from the dead, and after having been three days dead in his father's purpose, suggests the resurrection from Joseph's tomb. Yet the reality surpasses the shadow. Isaac suffers with a clear apprehension of his father's presence. Christ, bereft of the consciousness of his Father's love, complains of his forsakenness. All was done that love could do to alleviate Isaac's anguish, but Christ suffered the rudeness of coarse soldiery, and the upbraidings of Pharisee and Scribe. Isaac was spared death, but Christ drank the bitter cup to its dregs.

Before they left the mountain brow, the angel of Jehovah once more addressed the Patriarch. God had often promised; now for the first time He swore, and since He could swear by no greater He sware by Himself, and said: "By Myself have I sworn, because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." Think not, O soul of man, that this is a unique and solitary experience. It is simply a specimen and pattern of God's dealings with all souls who are prepared to obey Him at whatever cost. After thou hast patiently endured thou shalt receive the promise. The moment of supreme sacrifice shall be the moment of supreme and rapturous blessing. God's river, which is full of water, shall burst its banks, and pour upon thee a tide of wealth and grace. There is nothing, indeed, which God will not do for a man who dares to step out upon what seems to be the mist, though as he puts down his feet he finds it rock beneath him.

All who believe are the children of faithful Abraham.—We, then, Gentiles, though we are divided from him by the lapse of centuries may inherit the blessing that he won, and the more so as we follow closely in his steps. That blessing is for us if we will claim it. That multiplication of seed may be realised in our fruitfulness of service. That victory over all enemies may give us victory in all time of our temptation, and that blessing for all the nations of the earth may be verified again as we go forth into all the world telling the story of a Saviour's death.

From that eminence Abraham looked across the vale of centuries, and saw the day of Christ. He saw it, and was glad (John viii. 56). With a new light in his heart, with a new composure on his face, talking much with Isaac of the vision which had broken upon his noble soul, Abraham returned to his young men. "And they rose up and went together to Beersheba, and Abraham dwelt at Beersheba;" but the halo of the vision lit up the common places of his life, as it shall do for us, as from the mounts of sacrifice we turn back to the lowlands of daily duty.

LADY VICTORIA CAMPBELL, one of the daughters of the Duke of Argyll, who devotes herself to Christian work, says The Christian Leader, is learning the Gaelic language in order to get hold of the Gaelic heart.

THE WORKING MEN'S PROTESTANT LEAGUE, of which the late Mr. Thomas McClure was for some years the secretary, has now been amalgamated with the Church of England Working Men's Protestant Union, the office of which is at 18, Paternoster-row, E.C.

TEMPERANCE IN NORWAY.—Miss Charlotte A. Gray, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, writing recently from Christiania, says:—"At the beginning of the century Norway was reckoned among the most drunken nations in Europe. The country was in a sad state, and the people began to realise it, and took alarm. They set to work to remedy the evil, and so far have they accomplished this, that there is proportionately less alcohol consumed here than in almost any other country. How has this change been brought about? Temperance societies of various kinds were formed, and these have procured legislation for restricting the manufacture, importation, and sale of all kinds of alcoholic liquors. The Gothenberg system was introduced and adapted to the country, and is now working in many parts. Sunday closing, to a greater or less extent, prevails everywhere. Local Option is also general. A Prohibition party has been formed, which aims at the immediate closing of all licensed houses by Act of Parliament. Others think it would be wiser to employ only moral force, educate the people, and make the best use of the power they now possess.

THE BRISTOL ORPHAN HOMES.

Although the venerable founder of this institution is now seldom at home, it is gratifying to find that under the care of his able and like-minded co-director, Mr. Wright, the work maintains its position of prosperity and usefulness. The annual report, just issued, answers exactly to its title, being a "Narrative of Facts" selected from the records of the year, and serving to illustrate both the principle on which the work is based, and the way in which God has continued to honour fidelity to that principle, by supplying all needs during the period named.

Mr. Müller has been absent most of the year, travelling and preaching in Australia and New Zealand. These journeyings have extended over several thousands of miles, and both on sea and land this beloved servant of Christ has been enabled to minister to large congregations. In the opening pages of the report a summary of movements and meetings is given, which will prove interesting to many readers. Wherever Mr. Müller goes he finds a cordial reception, and thousands of hearers eager to listen to the testimony of one who, at the age of 83 years, and after a life of eminent usefulness, is able to give such valuable testimony to the reality of faith and prayer.

Donations for the work have flowed in, sometimes rather slowly, at other times more freely, but at all times the wants have been supplied. Thus we read, "October 26, evening: Our balance in hand for the orphans is now £152 15s. 5¾d.—viz., enough for two days, according to the average expenses for the orphans; but God, who has helped greatly for more than half a century, will further help, and to Him we look." Then follow notices of certain donations with the remark: "The donors who kindly contributed towards the support of the orphans on October 27 and the following days, will perceive how seasonably their donations came to hand." Again, "November 9 we had now before us the payment of more than £1000 in a few days, and there was as yet scarcely anything in hand towards this, when to-day the remainder of the legacy of the late T. M., Esq., came in, in answer to many prayers, being (with £91 5s. 2d. interest) £4791 5s. 2d. How graciously has the Lord again helped us thus, and how precious is it at all times to trust in Him. This legacy was left several years since, but only now was paid." As usual, the money comes in a great variety of ways, and from all kinds of sources, conceivable and inconceivable. Here, for instance, is one of the most remarkable: "'Dear Sir,—I beg to hand you a cheque, ten guineas, being the amount of a loss on a machinery speculation I indulged in about two years ago. Please use it for the support of the orphans.' The meaning seems to be this, that the donor is grateful to God that the loss connected with his speculation was only £10 10s., and he sends this sum as a thankoffering to God." Here is a novel way of celebrating birthdays: "From a Christian gentleman in London, £13 1s., who sends on the birthday of each of his children the amount needed for the support of one orphan." The report, generally, is a practical comment on the words of choice hymn:—

Say not my soul, from whence
Can God relieve thy care?
Remember that Omnipotence,
Has servants everywhere.

The testimony which it bears is eminently calculated to encourage prayer, and strengthen faith in God; and thus proves in no small a degree a means of edification. We observe that there are several vacancies for orphan girls. This information may prove valuable to some friends interested in the welfare of any destitue orphans, as admission can be procured at once, provided the cases are found suitable.

Mr. Moody's Summer School.

SECOND WEEK.

Mr. Moody promised we should have four sermons on Sunday, July 8, and actually gave us five. At the morning service the hall was crowded to the windows and the stairs, people having driven in from miles around to mingle with the great college congregation.

DR. BROADUS ON JOHN XVII.

Dr. Broadus was the first preacher. His text was John xvii. 9: "I pray for them." When our Saviour offered this prayer, He was speaking his farewell words to his chosen ones, and was just about to go forth to the scene of the agony and the betrayal; but, nevertheless, even in that moment, He sent his words down the ages. In the first place He prays that they be not taken out of the world, but that they be kept from the evil. It is a bad sign, a sign of morbid feeling, to be wanting to die. We have no business to be tired of life while the Lord wants us to live. It is healthy that we should relish life, and try to make it sweet to others.

The second part of the prayer is positive: "Sanctify them by thy truth: thy word is truth." Many people think Christian piety is a negative thing merely. But it is not so. Christianity means more than mere restraint of vice: it means positive virtue. And this comes through the truth. It is the truth that makes men holy. All the sin that has darkened human life and saddened human history began in believing a falsehood, and all the power of Christianity to make men holy is associated with believing the truth. We don't love our Bible, it does not interest us enough, because we don't use it sufficiently as a help to holiness.

Now the third petition, "that they all may be one," has troubled a great many good people, who fail to see that it is answered. But the answer to this is as complete and perfect as that to any of the other petitions. All Christ's true people are as truly and completely one as they are truly and completely holy. But how are we to become more clearly, more consciously one? By coming together, by worshipping together, by working together. I rejoice to live in a day when Christian people, of different opinions and ecclesiastical connections, find many occasions of working together on common lines, with common desires and aims, for others. The great problem is, how to combine adherence to the truth with love for those from whom we differ.

Yet another petition: "That they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am; that they may behold my glory." He prays that they who had seen Him in his humiliation, and were now about to see its greatest depths, might behold Him in his glory May it not be that He wishes it for his own sake; that He is lonesome for want of some of those who are his, and who are absent? John Jasper, the negro preacher, said once: "When I get thar—oh, when I get thar—I'll say, 'Show me Jesus, show me Jesus. I don't want to see anything else; show me Jesus.'" "But don't you want a crown?" some one asked. "Yes, I'll be glad to get a crown; but show me Jesus." "Don't you want a robe?" "Yes, I'll be glad to get a robe, if you've got one; but show me Jesus! I could sit thar ten thousand year, and never do anything but just gaze and gaze and gaze on Jesus." And then comes the lesson: "Every man that hath this hope in him purifies himself, even as He is pure." Try to live here on earth as they ought who hope in time to live sinless lives in his blessed presence.

MR. MOODY'S NEW THOUGHTS ON DANIEL.

As the second sermon, we had from Mr. Moody his well-known exposition of the Book of Daniel, to the interest of which he greatly added by introducing special references to college life, and by many incidental flashes of wit. So, for instance, he slyly said that if the people who accused the men of God of not worshipping the great image had really been worshipping it themselves, they would not have seen those men; "but they were looking through their fingers." Again, when the presidents sought to attack Daniel, in Darius' reign, they confessed that they found no occasion against him except touching the law of his God, which was the highest compliment ever paid to any man. He did not put dishonest relatives into office, nor did he manage any public contracts so as to put money into his own pocket. They conspired against him because they could not make any money out of the government while he was there, and they probably did their work in the dark, as most mean things are done. The great lesson of the address was:—What we want to-day is men that will go into our colleges and stand up for Jesus Christ, men with convictions who will stick to them, whatever is against them. How many of you have jumped into bed in college for fear your roommate would see you pray, like cowards? You laugh, but is this fiction or truth? How many of you have done it? We want men that will say, I want every man in Harvard, or Yale, or Princeton, to know that I serve the God of heaven. The meeting closed with a solo from Mr. Sankey, "Are your windows open toward Jerusalem?"

MISSIONARY DISCOURSE BY REV. HUDSON TAYLOR.

A large audience assembled again in the afternoon, when Mr. Hudson Taylor gave a missionary discourse, founded upon the text, Matt. xxviii. 18. On his attention being drawn, years ago, to the unsaved millions of heathen, he began to pray for them. You may work without praying though it won't amount to much, but you can't pray without working. He spoke to the secretary of the Church Missionary Society, who stated several objections to his undertaking work in North China. He began with the money-bag, pleading want of funds for many places where there were openings for mission work. China had not been opened, objectors said, and he ought to wait till the Lord should make a providential opening there. But it did not take any more power to open a Chinaman's heart than an American's or anyone else's. Almighty power was necessary in any case, and we had only to go to work, and we would find that we had the power of the money-bag also. "Try, try, try again" was a very good song for children, but for Christian workers trying was of no use. The Lord gave no commands to anybody to try to do anything, but was continually giving orders to go and do things which seemed impossible. The Inland Mission had gone straight to work in China, and although eleven of its eighteen provinces had never seen a missionary, they found no difficulty in entering, and in twenty-two years they had succeeded in making 3000 converts and establishing 60 churches. Mr. Taylor mentioned specially the need for woman's work in China, and concluded by pointing out that the way to succeed when the Church could not manage its home work was to take up foreign missions. When the disciples had fed the five thousand they found they had more than enough to eat themselves. After Mr. Radcliffe had offered the closing prayer, Mr. Moody, who had been deeply interested in the address, surprised everyone by announcing a collection—a very unusual thing with him. Mr. Taylor objected on principle to collections, but Mr. Moody prevailed, and about £40 were taken for the funds of the China Inland Mission.

And now came the unexpected fifth sermon. Mr. Taylor had said incidentally that he wished he had time to speak about certain prophecies of Isaiah. Mr. Moody now suggested that, as the air of the hall was getting hot, we should all go out to the round knoll, where the missionary meetings are usually held, and hear Mr. Taylor there. In a few minutes about two hundred people gathered on the slope, Mr. Taylor keeping their attention until quite six o'clock with a Bible-reading, which extended considerably further than the passages in Isaiah which had first suggested it, as to the taking of those promises literally or figuratively. He held that they applied literally to the Israelites, and that every Christian might appropriate them to himself spiritually.

An hour after the close of this meeting a large congregation gathered in Stone Hall to hear a SERMON FROM BISHOP HENDRICKS.

Though a number of ladies are always present at the meetings (some seldom missing even the morning College Association Conferences), the vast majority of the audience were men; and it was, therefore, with some surprise that we heard the Bishop announce that he intended to speak on the subject of woman's work in the Church. However, as we afterwards saw, more remained behind, and the "application" certainly gained force from its somewhat odd relation to the four "heads." When Dr. Hendricks finished, some of us had a vague feeling that he had been taking a hint from the method of the Prophet Amos, so well analysed for us by Professor Harper. His text was Ps. lxviii. 11, Cromwell's favourite battle hymn. It should, he said, be translated, "Great was the company of women that published it." In it we recognise the ministry of women, not merely in the celebration of victory, but also in helping to win it. The most startling thing which Christianity has accomplished has been the emancipation of woman from a condition of the hardest slavery and the most cruel degradation, and the raising of her to a place by man's side; the making her his fellow labourer in the evangelisation of the world. Yet this has placed her in a position of peril; a position in which she seems absolutely a menace to society, through her restlessness and discontent; her clamouring for rights, when she owes to Christianity all she has; her listening to the siren's song of infidelity; her readiness to break with the Church in pride and wilfulness; too often her frivolity and dissipation. Is she, then, for the safety of society, to be relegated to the position in which Christianity found her? Nay, rather, Christianity is to take her, and to give new direction to these powers which she exercises?

(1) In the first place, then, a divinely-given remedy is necessary for the salvation of the world. This remedy is the Gospel of the Son of God, which is intended for all, necessary to all, and adapted to all. The edification of believers, and the evangelisation of the world, are the two objects of the Church, and the former is impossible without efforts for the latter.

(2) The co-operation of Christian women is necessary for this end, because without it the very nations that have received the Gospel could not have been saved. The very emancipation of woman puts her in a position of special temptation. One of the richest and most intelligent women of America has said: "The great thought of the men of our nation is how to make money: the great thought of the women of our nation is how to spend money." As a thoughtful observer, I look upon the condition of womanhood in our Christian land, unconsecrated, inactive in the Master's service, with the profoundest alarm. In such circumstances, Christianity would prove a failure in Christian lands.

(3) The intellectual, social, and moral condition of woman gauges the intellectual, social, and moral condition of society. It is thus only possible for society in heathen lands to rise above the level of heathen women by the ministry of women themselves, who have access to their homes as the male missionary has not, and who, by ameliorating the intellectual and moral condition of the women, may raise the condition of society.

(4) Woman is a born teacher, and the intellectual condition of three-fourths of the race is very little removed from that of childhood. And woman has patience and endurance, where man would break down. God has marvellously blessed the work of women in the past; but so far it has only begun. And now, if God has this wonderful work for even women to do, what must be the work which He has for young men of America, and of England, to do? Shall woman's heart be touched by the wail that comes from over the seas, and shall she speed with eager feet to tell the story of God's love, and you, young men, be cowardly and recreant, and fail to obey the Divine call, hiding the commission of God that sends you forth with the story of Divine life? I do not, I cannot, believe it. Bishop Hendricks concluded with an earnest appeal to the heroism and devotion of his hearers, and, after Mr. Sankey had sung "The Ninety and Nine," we returned to our various quarters, feeling thankful for the high privilege of hearing so many great truths, and yet anxious lest this "solid food" should be more than we could digest.

MONDAY.

Monday morning brought demonstration of the wisdom of Mr. Moody's suggestion that Saturday should be devoted entirely to athletics—a suggestion which the students themselves so ruthlessly overruled—for, whether as the result of too lengthy sessions, or from other causes, at least twenty men found it necessary to consult the doctor, and many others looked jaded and out of sorts. A day or two's rest, however, brought recovery to most, so that the meetings of the latter part of the week were wonderfully well attended.

At the early conference meeting on Monday, the subject of discussion was the Bible Training Class;

A DISTINCTIVELY AMERICAN INSTITUTION.

Its object is to train Christian workers in the practical use of the Bible in personal dealing with individuals. Such principles as these were laid down as necessary in working with inquirers:—To begin conversation on neutral topics, using tact so as to gain the inquirer's confidence; to answer his objections from the Bible, avoiding argument and rather putting the inquirer on the defensive; and to be alone with him. The same subject was introduced at the 10 o'clock meeting by Mr. Bosworth, of Yale, and Mr. Gordon, of Connecticut, who spoke of the advantages of the class in giving men a longing for souls, and in inspiring them with boldness, inasmuch as through it they get a firm grasp of the fundamental truths of the Word of God. Mr. Bosworth mentioned two other classes which he regarded as necessary: (1) A class for young converts, with the object of giving them the food they need, and creating in them an appetite for truth; and (2) a class for the general study of the Bible, which should enable the student to reproduce for himself the thought of books and chapters of the Bible without reference to the book itself. Success in all these classes depends largely on the leader.

ROMANS I.—VIII.

The address of the morning came from Dr. Broadus, who has a way of interesting his audience and putting them in good humour by opening his remarks with some witty story, or happy piece of banter. This morning he caused great amusement by intoning after the manner of a certain negro preacher, who, he thought, had quite a cathedral style. The matter of the address was a powerful exposition of the first eight chapters of Romans. The great theme of the Apostle, justification by faith, is stated in the 16th and 17th verses of chap. i. The whole passage may be divided into two portions—viz., chaps. i.—v. and chaps. vi.—viii. Of the first portion the first section is chap. i. 18—chap. iii. 20, in which the Apostle states the necessity for justification by faith, because of the guilty and condemned condition of all men, both Jews and Gentiles. In the second section, chap. iii. 21—31, we find how God's scheme works. Chaps. iv. and v. form the third section, and give further proof and illustration of the Apostle's main position. Chap. iv. refers to Abraham, and shows how he was justified by faith; while, in the first part of chap. v. (vv. 1—11) we have the general results of justification by faith; and in the latter part of the same chapter there is further illustration, from the nature of Adam's sin.

Referring to chap. v. 3, the speaker said that it was remarkable to find three of the Apostles insisting upon this doctrine of the power of tribulation to make holy, to "work patience," at the very time when the Epicurean and Stoic philosophies were all-prevailing. In the fag end of the nineteenth century, when we are all tumbling over one another, running after nothing and finding it, I would like to cry over the length and breadth of the land the saying of the Apostle James: "The trying of your faith worketh patience!" Chapters vi.—viii. discuss the bearing of justification by faith on the work of making men personally holy. The Apostle shows the absurdity of representing the doctrine as unfavourable to personal holiness. In chap. vi. and the beginning of chap. vii. he gives three illustrations of this:—(a) If a man is a believer he is dead to sin and raised to a new life; (b) if a man is a believer he has ceased to be the slave of sin, and serves the new Master; (c) if a man is a believer he is wedded no longer to sin but to Christ.

In the latter part of chap. vii. he shows that the best the law can do in the way of making a man holy is to cause a struggle in his nature which only Christ can deliver him from. But the very responsibilities of the law of God, which ought to keep men from doing wrong, often stimulate them to do worse. All the pretty pantheistic talk, of which we hear so much, has to live up among nebulæ and rainbows, and cannot come down to solid earth. Let a man be resolutely engaged in trying to do right, and he will soon see what a terrible thing sin is. In the first part of chap. viii. (vv. 1—17) we find what the Gospel can do towards making a man holy. It delivers him from condemnation for his past sins. It introduces a new moral force into the conflict, namely, the Spirit of God. This is a third "law," in addition to the "law of God," and the "law of sin," or of the flesh, mentioned in the previous chapter. Finally, it introduces a new motive—grateful love for Christ. The remainder of the chapter is a magnificent hymn of thanksgiving. Speaking of ver. 26 ("But the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered") Dr. Broadus said: Roman and Greek advocates not only spoke for their clients, but sometimes wrote speeches for their clients to deliver, or, in other words, told them what to say. So the Spirit teaches us what to say, even although at times we may not be able to give expression to it. The expositor concluded with an earnest appeal for a deeper study of the Bible.

"HERE AM I, SEND ME."

At the missionary meeting in the evening, a number of men from American colleges announced their intention to go as foreign missionaries, recounting the steps by which they had been led to do so. Many of them had come to a decision during the present Conference, and their brief but deeply earnest speeches were most impressive.

Later in the evening we listened to a long and interesting

ADDRESS BY MR. MOODY,

Subject—The Bible and its Uses. He began by giving us a short collection of metaphors or figures through which the Bible described itself, and proceeded to show that it is more important that God should speak to us, than that we should speak to Him. So we want to-day men who know their Bibles, who know how to use the Sword of the Spirit. We want men who believe in the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. There is now-a-days far too much picking at the Bible, taking this and rejecting that. There are lots of things in the Bible that I don't understand; if I did understand it all, it would be a pretty good proof that it was not of Divine origin. But a great many people study the Bible as I once went through France, on a night express, asleep all the time. Above all, Christ set his seal on those very incidents which seem hardest to believe, such, for instance, as the story of Jonah. If these things are rejected, we must reject the divinity of Christ. We cannot give up the Old Testament, and stick to the New. The New Testament is full of quotations from the Old, and these quotations abound in the Gospels, which are the last books to be given up by anyone. Christ Himself quoted from twenty-two out of the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament. If a man studies the Bible with a penknife in his hand, and cuts out what he does not believe, he will soon have nothing left but the lids.

Again, it is impossible to give up the supernatural in the Bible, for it is all supernatural, and no portion of it is more so than the story of Christ's life. In illustration of this, Mr. Moody gave a most vivid picture of the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, telling the story as he supposed it might have been told by Peter to Paul. As to Bible study, we must be independent, and not give ourselves over entirely to our ministers, receiving from them with equal satisfaction the milk of the Word and mere religious sawdust. We must make up our minds to feed ourselves. One good plan would be to take twelve of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible, such as conversion, repentance, &c., and spend twelve months on them. Then, again, we might go through a book, noting the uses of a certain word in it, as, for instance, the seven "blesseds" and the eight "overcomes" in Revelation. Another good scheme would be to take up Bible characters and study them, regarding them specially as types of Christ. We must expound the Word of God, and not use it merely as a textbook for our own theories about botany, or astronomy, or geology. It is expository preaching, above all things, that we need. The world will get on without your opinions, but not without Christ. In this respect we should follow the example of Mr. Hudson Taylor, from whom we have heard so much, and of Dr. Horatius Bonar, of whose style of preaching Mr. Moody gave an illustration, concluding by asking us whether we did not think that such preaching as that would interest people, and, at the same time, impress upon them the truths of the Bible.

(The report will be continued next week.)

MR. DENHAM SMITH'S strength has improved so far as to permit of his sitting out in the open air. He has also taken advantage of these few warm days, and has driven out on several occasions.

WOMEN AND PEACE PRINCIPLES.—At a Congress of Scandinavian women, held at Copenhagen in July last, for the consideration of questions relating to social progress, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—"Inasmuch as the interests of women and those of peace have the same object in common, the substitution of right for might, this Congress declares that the peace cause ought to be regarded by women as their own cause."

"BILLY BRAY."—At the Bible Christian Conference a few days ago a striking illustration was given of the marvellous and widespread influence of a book. In the course of a presentation to Rev. F. W. Bourne, it was mentioned that from letters that had been received, it was known that at least six hundred persons, in all parts of the world, and in almost all positions of life, had been led to Christ through reading his well-known "Life of Billy Bray." Only recently, the lending of a single copy had resulted in the conversion within a fortnight of three persons, one of them being the keeper of a public-house. A former notorious infidel at New Cross is now an earnest Christian through the same means. One of the most learned men of the day, a member of the Old Testament Revision Company, has declared that although he always thought he was a Christian, and was so nominally, he had never known what real Christianity was until he read that book. At first he threw it down in disgust, but afterwards returned to it, and now he felt that, if by God's grace he should reach glory, after seeing the Saviour he should first want to see Billy Bray.

AN AFTERNOON IN CHINA.

By MARY E. SCOTT, TA'NING.

THIS afternoon (February 25) we heard a sad story from a poor woman who is making us some shoes. She is an opium smoker, and so is her husband, and when she came to-day she said she had no food; they had no money, and no food in the house. It happened to be dinner-time in the kitchen, so Miss Miles went and asked for some food for her, and she soon returned with a steaming basin of mien—a kind of coarse maccaroni—which our friend ate like one really hungry. We also gave her some bread, part of which she ate, and the rest she took home for her children. She was very difficult to understand, so we asked Elder Chang to explain to us about her circumstances, and we found that her poor husband was in a dreadful state of craving for opium, which they had no money to buy. Of course, much as we pitied him, we could not possibly give money to buy opium with; but we said that if the children were hungry, they could come and have some food. Later in the afternoon, at our request, Elder Chang went to their house, and found that the husband, who is a scholar, had been employed by one of the Mandarins, but was now so destroyed through the opium that he was no use, and therefore had been thrown out of employment. We mean to keep on praying for them, and hope that when supplied with the opium medicine they will give up this fearful habit.

After we had done all we could for this poor woman, we went out to make a few calls and remind our friends that to-morrow is the Lord's Day, inviting them to come to li-pai (the prayer-meeting). The first house we went to was a queer cane house that always takes me home to snug fireside readings of Robinson Crusoe with my dear little brother. The old woman who lives there we call "Mrs. Polly," because she reminds us so much of a dear old friend at home of that name. She was one of the first people who asked us to go and see them in illness. I am sorry to say that both she and her husband are opium smokers, but she seems quite to want to give it up. Lately we have felt very strongly that it is very little use for people to say they believe in Jesus unless they put away their idols. So this afternoon we told the dear woman distinctly that she could not go to heaven if she kept on worshipping idols, and we very much wanted to see her there. After this "straight word," the husband left off preparing the meal, and tore up both the paper shrines which they had been worshipping, and poked them into the fire under a large cooking-pot. Of course we watched this being done with almost breathless interest, and then, with our Christian servant, we sang the doxology with very full hearts.

I do not think that those who have never seen idolatry can really understand what it means. I certainly did not realise it at home. We both feel very grateful to the Lord for letting us testify for Him in this dark place. We next called on people, some of whom profess to believe; but they, too, have these idolatrous shrines in their house. Coming fresh from victory at the other house, we told these dear people very plainly that they could not worship Jesus and their idols at the same time. We begged them to put away their idols at once, because we expected the Lord soon to come back, or they might in the meantime die, and then how dreadful it would be! They seemed to agree with what we said, but did nothing further. We are praying for them; please join us.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XX.—"I SWORED."

PASSING through the churchyard one day, the door of the church being open, I thought I heard the sound of someone sobbing and praying inside. I stopped to listen, when most unmistakable sobs met my ears. I immediately went inside the church, and, walking softly, made my way towards the corner from whence the sound emanated.

As yet no one was visible, but I knew I was approaching the mourner. Soon I spied a boy upon his knees, and, on closer approach, I recognised him. He was one of the brightest and happiest of the young converts in the school.

I looked with surprise at him, and wondered to myself how he had come into this state of self-condemnation. I overheard him say again and again: "Oh, do forgive me; I swored, I swored. I did not mean it, but I swored!"

The boy, being all alone as he thought, was pouring out his heart to God, and, with much depth of conviction and many tears, was asking his forgiveness.

I stepped back for a few moments, and then walked forward with my usual tread, as if to announce someone was coming. I then said "Amen" to his prayer, but he did not appear to notice either my presence or response. The little soul was unmistakably bent upon having forgiveness for his sin.

Kneeling down by his side I assured him of the Lord's pardon. I said, "He pardoneth and absolveth all those who truly repent, and unfeignedly believe. If you confess your sins God is faithful and just to forgive you your sins, and to cleanse you from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 8).

I comforted the lad with this assurance, and raised him from his knees to thank God, which he did.

I must now confess my own shortcomings. Though I had assured this dear boy of pardon and deliverance, at that time I myself did not know the reality of the deliverance of which I was speaking, or how to obtain it. And although I had quoted the text from St. John about forgiveness and cleansing, yet I myself did not know what cleansing was.

I therefore recommended the boy to make a resolution never to swear again. "Promise me that," I said. He, in broken accents, faithfully made me this promise, saying, "No, I never will swear again!"

How long he kept his promise I do not know; I suppose until the next time he broke it.

Soon after this event it pleased God to show me that deliverance is as great a reality as pardon, and that cleansing is as much needed as forgiveness. The one fact is as clearly stated in Scripture as the other. How then was it that I had not seen this?

It is our privilege as believers to go to the Lord, not only for pardon for our sins, but also for deliverance from the power of sin; or, in other words, from the unrighteousness which produces transgression.

The lad in question had acquired the bad habit of swearing. After his conversion he perhaps flattered himself that the habit was gone, because his past sins were pardoned. However, to his surprise and disappointment, in an unguarded moment he found himself swearing again, and his companions laughing at his Christianity.

Thoroughly condemned in his soul, the little fellow went apart to seek for forgiveness. This was well and right, and if I had known better myself, I might have taught him that God had provided deliverance from the bad habit as surely as He had provided forgiveness for the sin he had committed in taking God's name in vain.

Is this really so?

Anyone may see that pardon does not mean deliverance, or deliverance pardon. Pardon refers to the past, deliverance with the present. Forgiveness has to do with transgressions committed, whereas cleansing is in the present tense, and signifies a continual deliverance.

By this time the boy in question had left the parish, and gone away with his parents to some other part of the county, so that I could not get at him to learn how he had kept his resolution.

I longed to see him that I might teach him more perfectly the manner of God's salvation; but let me teach others.

Whenever a believer falls, instead of passing over his sin, he should go to God at once, and ask for forgiveness; and if he is aware of the unrighteousness or infirmity which caused him to fall, he should ask God to cleanse him from that unrighteousness. We all come out of the horrible pit with mire and clay upon us. Instead of trying and resolving to rid ourselves of this mire and clay, that is, any besetment or infirmity we are prone to, we should come to the Lord, who can as easily take us out of that as He took us out of the horrible pit.

But He must be the Doer of both the works, if we would stand firmly upon the Rock.

It may be asked, Are not all converts placed upon the Rock when they are taken out of the pit? Yes, certainly; but not immediately. There is clay between them and the Rock, and hence the slipping and sliding, even backsliding of so many.

We should understand that the Rock is not merely an immovable foundation, but an unchangeable Person, One who can hold us up, and keep us from falling. As a living present Saviour, He is able to cleanse us, and to keep us clean.

The prophet says, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew, or change, their strength." Instead of trusting to themselves and relying upon their own strength, they have the strength of the Lord. In his strength they mount up with wings as eagles; they run, and are not weary; and they walk, and do not faint. (See Isa. xl.)

True Christian strength is not in man, but in the Lord: a strength which is called by the name of grace. We may well imagine that grace is stronger than sin, as surely as Christ is stronger than Satan. Relying upon this grace, which is in Christ Jesus, we are able to stand, able to walk, and able to run. Indeed, whatever God requires, that He enables us to fulfil. "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens [or rather, enables] me."

There is no besetment, therefore, or entanglement which need hold us in captivity. Let us be sure that our resolutions and determinations will not avail, neither can any effort of ours give us freedom.

The Scottish Missionary Crusade.

THE VISIT TO ABERDEEN.

A RECEPTION.

THE Granite City was the next point of attack in this missionary campaign. Arriving from Elgin about noon on Saturday, August 4, after a swift journey by the new coast route, the delegates were received in the afternoon at the pleasant residence of Lord Provost Henderson. There was a goodly gathering of ladies and gentlemen, notwithstanding the fact that many of the pastors and Christian workers are absent from town. The Lord Provost greeted the strangers in the name of the Aberdeen Christians, and briefly explained the circumstances that had led to their visit. In his speech of response, Dr. GORDON referred warmly to his Scotch extraction, remarking that he had been engaged on the previous day in visiting the graves of his ancestors. Alluding in a semi-facetious strain to three Scotch importations to America—oatmeal, granite, and theology, he said the first might represent the most bounteous hospitality with which they had everywhere been received, and which had greatly touched them. Scotch granite was an excellent foundation, and he only wished they had more of it in their American society. He also expressed their indebtedness to Scotch theology, and happily cited as an instance of the perseverance of the saints, the fact that though he and his brother delegate had been trying hard to get back to America, they had not been able, owing to the persevering tenacity of the Scotch friends in desiring to retain them. Then he plunged into the subject of missions, and spoke impressively for a little on the revived interest on that subject now being created on both sides of the Atlantic.

Dr. PIERSON also responded in his happiest manner, and alluded to the striking coincidence of Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe being engaged on the same blessed service in America, which had brought Dr. Gordon and himself to dear old Scotland. He went on to urge an entirely new departure in this business of Gospelising the world—vastly greater personal consecration and giving of substance. The importance of implanting youthful impressions was dwelt upon: many of the best foreign missionaries had received their first impulse at their mother's knee. Some appropriate remarks were added, on behalf of the Aberdeen pastors, by Rev. J. M. Mitchell, of the West Parish Church, and the pleasant gathering broke up after a hearty vote of thanks to the Lord Provost.

PUBLIC MEETING IN THE MUSIC HALL.

Sunday, Aug. 5, was a busy day. The American brethren preached morning and afternoon; as also did Rev. J. Scott, of Natal. At the close of the ordinary evening church services a mass meeting was convened in the spacious Music-hall, which was well filled. It was by far the largest concourse of the series of meetings since those in Edinburgh. The American delegates had to hurry from the churches in which they had preached in order to face this great company in time. Such continuous and exhausting effort is not very consonant with the holiday programme that brought them across the Atlantic. We can only hope that the blessed stimulus they are giving to a priceless cause will be some reward for such hearty expenditure of time and energy.

In some interesting presidential remarks Lord Provost HENDERSON referred with pardonable pride to the fact that the city and county of Aberdeen had long taken a deep interest in the missionary cause. A friend had compiled for him a table of statistics showing that there are at present no less than 105 workers from the district engaged in different parts of the world. Of these 32 are in India, 22 in China 21 in Africa, and 9 in other foreign fields, besides 22 wives of these missionaries. The total of 105 does not include those still living who have retired from active work, or those who have gone to the European continent.

DR. PIERSON'S ADDRESS

was of the profoundest interest as bearing on the subject in hand. He began by congratulating Aberdeen on the part she is taking in this great work as shown by the figures quoted, but went on to say that there is much cause for penitence, humiliation, and fresh consecration, at the thought of what is yet left undone. There is a danger, in comparing ourselves among ourselves, and measuring ourselves by ourselves, of forgetting the perfect standard of service held up to us by the Master Himself. What we need to do is to look at the awful spiritual destitution in which the world for the most part lies to-day, and the equally awful negligence of the Christian Church. Though so many centuries of time have come and gone since our Lord ascended to his place of power in the heavens, the Church has overtaken with gospel light so small a part of the darkness and degradation of humanity, that a vast proportion of the race have never been reached even by the sound of the message of salvation which is so familiar to our ears in highly favoured Scotland. With the increase of population there are to-day a greater number of unevangelised persons than at any previous period in the world's history. After a rapid survey of the darkness of heathendom and of the unending procession of human souls across the stage of life, disappearing in the same dense darkness as that in which they came, the speaker applied these overwhelming considerations to the point of present duty. There are two kinds of service, he said, to which the Church is called—one the immediate service of seeking to save the lost, and another the more permanent service of making provision for the continued evangelisation and elevation of mankind. In seeking to lay the foundations for the latter, the Church has to a large extent neglected the more pressing duty of the former. As "David served his generation by the will of God," so it is the duty of each generation of Christians to meet the spiritual necessities of the unbelievers in that generation. Continuing to press home the duty of all believers to take their share in this work, Dr. Pierson said he was of opinion that Christ's commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was delivered to the great body of the disciples gathered in Galilee after our Lord's resurrection. Most probably this was the occasion mentioned by Paul when the risen Christ was seen of 500 brethren at one time, so the commission is not one for the leaders in the Church only, but for the rank and file as well. The next point insisted on was a very important one—that the only way to get rid of theological speculations and doctrinal declension in the Church is to be busily engaged in fulfilling Christ's command. In proportion as that command is obeyed, so will the continued presence and power of God be experienced in the Church. Some say that the day of miracles has passed away. Where is there, in the Scripture, the slightest intimation that the supernatural and miraculous manifestation of his power was intended by Christ to cease in the early days of Christianity? Who can say at what point in its history these manifestations did cease? We find everywhere in those early records that the miraculous forthputting of God's power went hand in hand with the evangelistic zeal of the Church. Moreover, so far and so fast as the Christian Church in modern days has been faithful to her trust, God has abundantly confirmed that fidelity by signs following. Have we not in the records of modern missions, as manifest tokens of supernatural power in the conversion of multitudes of men and women, as at any period of the Church's career? The great German commentator Theodore Christlieb has declared as his opinion that the history of modern missions has shown as wonderful things as any wrought in the apostolic age. We can find as marvellous examples of supernatural interposition in these days as though Christ continued to make the blind to see and to raise the dead. But it is true that God has withdrawn his Divine testimony to the word of his grace in proportion as the Church has failed in her mission of universal evangelisation, and occupied her attention with human speculations and philosophies. Having developed this thought in weighty words, Dr. Pierson closed his address with a very solemn appeal as to the personal responsibility of each believer, and as to the great need for entering into the sympathy and solicitude that Christ feels towards a perishing world.

in commencing an address of much unction and power, took up the same thought as that which his predecessor laid down. If, said he, the angels can look down on the earth as it really is, would not their most tender solicitude be directed to its darkest parts? On the New England coast there is a dangerous rocky reef on which there has lived for years a light-house keeper and his wife. Some few years since the keeper met with an accident and was seriously injured, so that his life-blood was fast ebbing out and his wife was unable to staunch it. She was in great perplexity as to what she should do, and ultimately she decided to put out the light in the light-house. A watchman pacing the streets of the city near by presently noticed that the light had gone out. He spoke of it to another, and very soon a little company had gathered to discuss the singular circumstance of the extinguishment of the light on that dangerous sea-girt reef. Within half an hour a boat was put off to the light-house, when the reason of the darkness was discovered; the wounded man was rescued, and his life was saved. It was the absence of the light that drew out the attention and effort of these watchers on the shore. Surely in like manner the angels, as they gaze from the battlements of glory, will turn their eyes most frequently to such places as the Dark Continent, and other parts of the globe over which there broods the gloom of paganism and spiritual death.

Taking up once more the question so often asked in this matter-of-fact and utilitarian age, as to whether missions to the heathen pay, Dr. Gordon showed beyond dispute that such missions return a larger percentage of results than any other kind of Christian effort on the face of the earth. To prove this, he recalled and recounted the circumstances relating to several recent missionary jubilees. The first was that of missions to the Fiji Islands. There was no face he saw at the recent Missionary Conference in London on which he gazed with more intense admiration than that of James Calvert, the aged and venerable missionary to the Fijians. Read his clear and deeply interesting published statement of the Gospel triumphs among that people, and then doubt, if you can, that missionary effort pays. Some statistics were added of the triumphs of the Cross in Fiji, but they need not be repeated here, as a full sketch of Mr. Calvert's missionary career was given in our issue of August 3. Another missionary jubilee referred to by Dr. Gordon was that of the Karen Mission, and the truly marvellous history of that movement was again given in impressive outline. So also was the story of Patagonia, with its savage peoples, so degraded that Darwin was inclined to reckon them among the brute creation. Yet they were so changed by the power of the Gospel that he was constrained to subscribe towards that which could accomplish so much.

Having recounted these sublime achievements of missionary endeavour, Dr. Gordon pressed home the question: What part have we in producing such grand results? It is no doubt true that, as of old, those who remain by the stuff share in the benefits with those who go out to battle. But surely it is our part to devote at least as much care and as much expenditure on those who go to the battle as on ourselves at home. If that were done, then we should almost have a missionary abroad for every believer at home, if we were really in earnest. A poor factory girl in America out of her own earnings supported a native preacher in the foreign field. In like manner, any one of us can sustain a worker in some heathen field. If we would have our individual interest in missions deepened, there is no way of doing it like making a personal investment in the enterprise. Dr. Gordon spoke of the sacrifices that Scottish martyrs and witnesses have made in bygone times to preserve to their posterity the unfettered Word of God. Shall not Scotland do all she can to give this same blessed heritage to the other nations of the world. You cannot blot out the Gospel from a people who possess the Bible. Though we sometimes mourn the sectional divisions of the Christian Church, yet God has made even this redound to the furtherance of his Gospel. If there were what some call a "united Christendom" in an organised sense, should we have to-day thirty-three societies engaged in the evangelisation of China; and more than thirty-five societies at work in Africa? The mention of Africa led the speaker to expatiate on the labours of some of the heroic workers in that land; such as the dusky Bishop Crowther, of the Niger Mission, who in his youth was sold for ten pounds of tobacco; Adam McCall, of Leicester, who laid down his life in seeking to carry Gospel light into the region of the Congo; and others. Then came the closing appeal, listened to with almost breathless interest. In his most thrilling tones, the Doctor told how a New England pastor conceived the quaint idea of having himself and all the members of his congregation buried in the same order of position as that they occupied in his church. This was done, and the singular spectacle may be witnessed to-day. His strange design was that at the day of resurrection he might confront his congregation, when his and their sleeping dust should awake, and ask them whether he had shunned to declare to them the whole counsel of God, and whether the blood of any of their souls rested on his garments as their pastor. In the last great day of reckoning, said the speaker, will it be our lot to meet those whom we have been instrumental in leading to a knowledge of the Saviour, or will the faces of multitudes be to us a terrible rebuke for our lethargy and our neglect in not carrying to them that cup of salvation from which we ourselves have been privileged to drink?

A large gathering of ladies was held on Monday last week in the Christian Institute, and was addressed by Mrs. Gordon, Miss Rainy, Mrs. Stott, and a lady missionary from Constantinople. This meeting concluded the arrangements made for Aberdeen. Dr. and Mrs. Gordon have not been able, owing to previous engagements at home, to prolong their stay on this side, and they sailed from Liverpool last week for Boston. They will be followed by the prayers and grateful good wishes of numerous friends throughout Scotland. Dr. Pierson does not return till September.

AT THE DUFFTOWN CONFERENCE.

The village of Dufftown, in the hilly country of Banffshire, appears to be one of the many training grounds for Gospel preachers in the north for more public service in the populous south. Readers of The Christian a few years back may remember that Rev. W. R. Nicoll, now editor of The Expositor and The British Weekly, was for some time Free Church minister at Dufftown. The present holder of the pastorate is Rev. J. Smith, a man of great earnestness and evangelical fire. If he is spared, he will assuredly be called to minister in some wider field. Four years ago he commenced an annual Christian gathering, a kind of rural Mildmay Conference. Two years since the pulpit of the Established Church in the village was filled by the appointment of Mr. Elder Cumming, son of the highly respected Glasgow minister of that name. He has inherited the warm catholicity and the soundness in the faith of his father, and he heartily co-operates with Mr. Smith in arranging for the Conference.

A pressing invitation was conveyed to Dr. Gordon and Dr. Pierson to attend the meetings this year, and speak on the subject of Foreign Missions. Owing to Dr. and Mrs. Gordon's departure for their native shores, the invitation could only be accepted by Dr. Pierson, who proceeded from Aberdeen on the morning of Wednesday week, to be present at the afternoon assembly of the Conference. It appeared that the subject of the morning Conference was the person and work of the Holy Spirit—a subject which Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, has made peculiarly his own. Besides his address on that topic, there were expositions by Mr. Duncan Davidson of Inchmarlo, Mr. J. E. Mathieson of Mildmay, and others. There was an excellent attendance; and, judging from the fag end of the meeting, much earnest attention was given by the audience.

The Public Hall was again well filled in the afternoon for the missionary meeting. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and spoke some words of weighty import in introducing the subject. Having read Psalm lxvi., in which the writer calls upon all lands to "make a joyful noise," he said: Think of the condition of the lands to-day, compared with what it might have been, and what God purposed that it should be. What sort of a noise is going up from China, with its murdered children; from Africa, with its gangs of slaves taken from the interior to the coast, marking the road with their bleaching bones; from India, with its thousands of child widows doomed to perpetual drudgery and misery? What sort of a joyful noise is going up from Europe, or from our own Great Britain, or from the Scottish Highlands. With its many distilleries, its myriad of drinking shops, and its many drunkards? That is not the sort of joyful noise that our God wants to listen to. He longs to hear the joyful noise of souls, ransomed and redeemed by the blood of Christ. The crowning sin of the Jewish people in the time of the Apostles was their failure to give the Gospel to the Gentiles. It may be that the crowning sin of our day is our failure to give this Gospel to the world. The Jewish people were dispersed, and in a measure blotted out because of their sin; let us beware lest a similar condemnation come upon us. In introducing the first set speaker, hailing from the South Seas, Mr. Mathieson further remarked that in many of these isles of the sea, we find a more beautiful type of Christianity than in our own highly favoured land. God has chosen some of these once cannibal tribes to put us to shame with their liberality in the cause of the Gospel, and their humble, holy lives.

GOSPEL MISSIONS IN TAHITI.

It was a singularly interesting and encouraging story that Rev. J. L. Green had to tell of Gospel effort and Gospel triumph in Tahiti and the neighbouring islands. As to the natural beauties and other points of interest in connection with those isles of the southern sea, he referred the audience to Miss Gordon Cumming's book, entitled. "A Lady's Cruise in a French Man of War." The state in early times of Tahiti and other isles was such that the great navigator, Captain Cook, declared it to be very "unlikely that a permanent establishment of any kind would ever take place." Tahiti was one of the first foreign stations of the London Missionary Society, but for sixteen years the missionaries laboured without any tokens of success. By and by streaks of light began to appear, and then the day speedily dawned. Now hundreds of thousands in those isles of the sea who sat in darkness and the shadow of death are walking in the light of the Gospel. The number of converts has been estimated at 750,000 in those Pacific islands, where there was not a single Christian seventy-five years ago. Mr. Green gave some interesting details of the scope and extension of the work, and told some narratives from his own experience as to the renewing and consoling power of the Gospel among those who were once degraded and cruel. When he had concluded, girded himself for his task, and for a full hour held the attention of the audience in setting before them the New Testament conception of what is the calling of the Christian disciple. He first recounted some of the missionary figures and statistics with which he has so powerfully impressed his hearers during this campaign. The worst feature, he said, of the case, as it now presents itself to us, is that the great bulk of believers have no conception of their responsibility in this matter. Each Christian is just as responsible before God for the salvation of others as any minister or missionary.

The greater portion of the address took the form of a comprehensive Bible reading, based on our Lord's own teaching, as to what his followers should be. The first passage cited was Matt. iv. 19: "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." This was the first call by our Lord to any of his disciples, and therefore we may take it as representing the great principles of his kingdom on earth. First of all, then, the disciple is one who follows not a doctrine concerning Christ, but the Master Himself. That involves the second point, which is that the disciple is one who fishes for men. He must make that his business, and must adapt the means at his disposal to that end. These points were amplified in a very practical way, to show the responsibility resting on every believer to seek the salvation of others. Are we truly following Christ if we are not fishers of men? Too often we forget altogether this second part of our discipleship. Can we point to a single case in which we have been, not indirectly but of set purpose, the means of leading a soul to Christ? A man cannot catch fish simply by putting on fine clothes and sitting down in a well-appointed boat. Neither can the disciple catch souls, by donning his Sunday attire and sitting down in a cushioned pew in church.

The next passage quoted was Matt. viii. 21, 22, "Follow Me, and let the dead bury their dead." The narrative in Luke supplies this other phrase: "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God." The burial service in the East was a long and elaborate one. The point of the exhortation was that in the case of the disciple these things may be left to the world, which makes much of form and ceremony. His great business is to preach the kingdom of God. On this point Dr. Pierson entered on a trenchant exposition of what "preaching" is, showing that it is not the delivery of a set discourse by a specially educated and ordained set of people, but simply the telling out to others, few or many, that saving truth of the Gospel which we have experienced ourselves. The story of the woman at the well of Samaria, and how her preaching of Christ aroused the whole city, formed the basis of a powerful plea for woman's witness. She simply went and told the Gospel to others as she had learned it from the lips of Christ. Even a child may preach very effectually. To illustrate this Dr. Pierson related a narrative of a child who put some simple questions to her careless, worldly-minded father, with the result that he and other members of the family became disciples of Christ.

Referring next to the parable of the sower, and that of the tares, it was pointed out that in one case the seed is the Word, and in the other case the seed is the believer himself. It is through the voice of the human agent, rather than through the reading of the Word, that souls are won to Christ; therefore the disciple of Christ must, so to speak, sow himself is bringing others to the knowledge of his Master. Another command of our Lord is that in Matt. xvi. 24: "If any will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me." Dr. Pierson scouted the idea that "taking up the cross" means the patient endurance of the petty troubles and cares of life. Such a view he deemed to be a gross perversion of the Scripture. There is only one cross for the believer, that by which he is crucified to the world and the world to him. The true and only cross-bearing on the part of the Christian disciple is a willingness even to be crucified in order that men may be saved. Then, as to self-denial, our Lord does not say that the disciple is to deny himself some form of indulgence; he is to deny himself. It is possible to give up one sort of indulgence simply to gratify another. Many seem to be humble, but they are all the while very conscious of it. Self-conscious humility is not humility at all. Those words of our Lord about the foxes having holes, and the birds having nests, the speaker believed to be generally misinterpreted. It really means that while the fox in a time of danger can take to his hole in the ground, and the bird can find a refuge in its nest, the Son of Man, in his appointed and chosen work of redemption, had no place of retreat, and therefore he went on to the Cross. And so the true disciple who follows his Master must be willing utterly to abjure self, and consent to be used of God in the salvation of others.

The last point taken up in this practical unfolding of the disciple's duty was the command recorded in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20: "Make disciples of all nations." A reference to the history recorded in the Acts will show how the first disciples obeyed this command. It is equally binding on us in these last days, if we would carry out the divine idea of each generation of believers being the saviours of their own generation. Dr. Pierson quoted several passages in the Epistles to show that it is our vocation to be co-workers with God, to be co-sufferers with Christ, and to be co-witnesses with the Holy Ghost, in compassing the redemption of the world. Then he repeated the statement that the churches of to-day ought to have at least a hundred thousand workers in the foreign field, and to contribute at least 200 millions of dollars for the furtherance of the world's evangelisation.

The evening meeting of the Conference was devoted to evangelistic addresses; so that during the day there was the threefold testimony—the proclamation of the Gospel; the exaltation of the great saving agent, the Holy Spirit; and the burden laid on the saved man to seek the salvation of others.

IN MEMORY OF MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.—The appeal for funds wherewith to purchase the Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, S.E., as a memorial to the late Mr. S. Morley, at a cost of £17,000, has been heartily responded to. The purchase will be effected without delay, all the money required having been subscribed.

WADHAM COLLEGE, OXFORD.—A Wadham man writes: "In your interesting sketch of the life of Mr. Aitken, you speak of the prayer-meeting which he founded in Wadham College as long ago, alas, defunct. I do not know how long this particular society lasted after its worthy founder 'went down,' but certainly, at least, two prayer-meeting societies have run their course since that time, and three years ago a fresh society was formed, which has held a weekly prayer-meeting during term ever since, and which, we trust, by God's blessing, will be a permanent institution in the College."

EVANGELISTIC WORK AT PISA.—In addition to the schools under her care, Miss S. H. Carruthers has during the past year superintended the carrying on of several other branches of work. Evangelical lectures have been arranged, and a system of Bible and tract distribution organised. While thus endeavouring to promote the moral and spiritual welfare of the people, the care of the bodies of the people has not been neglected. Through the liberal gifts of kind friends, a very large number of cases of real distress have been assisted, and many sick people helped with food and medicine. During August and September, Miss Carruthers' address is 7, Westover Villas, Bournemouth.

WORK AMONGST CHILDREN.

The brighter weather which we have had for the last few days at most parts of our coast has given great encouragement to the workers in the Children's Seaside Services.

Coming from Keswick, I was just able to spend two days with Mr. Spiers at Blackpool, and a day or two with the party led by Mr. C. H. Nash, at Llandudno. At both places some very happy gatherings have already been held, and from the spirit of prayer amongst the workers, there cannot fail to be a blessing.

May I say a word as to the immense field of work which lies before Christian ladies at the seaside during August and September amongst the children? Many are giving valuable help, but there is room for many more, not only at the places where services on the beach have been organised, but at all the watering places, large and small, round our coast. When there are services, a large number of ladies are needed to form a choir to lead the singing. We find that where there is good singing, numbers of grown-up people come who would not otherwise be reached, and they hear the simple Gospel message spoken to the children, while a special word is often given to them.

In inviting the children to the meetings there is of course the opportunity to give one of our picture leaflets, and also to speak a word to the nurses. We find very many nurses who are Christians, and many more who are quite ready to receive the truth, and when we think of their influence over children, there cannot be a more important class to be reached. In some places we have been able to arrange for special meetings for young ladies, and also special classes for the younger girls, to be addressed by lady workers. Often we have games specially arranged for the girls in the afternoons, and lady workers who have managed this part of the work have found it bring them into closer contact with the children, and open a way for many earnest conversations about better things.

But whether there are services or not, the seaside during August offers a grand opportunity for work amongst the children, and this cannot be too strongly impressed on Christian workers who are just now commencing their holiday. Often we may meet with boys and girls who have been brought up under erroneous teaching, and have never really had the simple Gospel message presented to them. At other times we meet with members of the Children's Scripture Union, and a little conversation about their daily portions will be very helpful to them. Others will never have heard of the Scripture Union, and this opens another field for work, for many branches of the Union have been commenced through the first member from some village or neighbourhood having been gained at the seaside.

To give any Christian seaside visitors opportunity for such work as this, the Children's Special Service Mission will gladly make grants of the new series of "Picture Leaflets" and "Loving Messages" just being issued, and papers about the Scripture Union will also be sent. Will friends kindly write, stating the seaside place they propose to visit, to Mr. H. Hankinson, or to myself, at the office, 13, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

T. B. Bishop.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—At the last monthly meeting, after some cheering remarks by Miss Child, Mr. James Merry spoke on "Growing in Grace." Rev. J. C. Brand, who with his co-worker, Mr. Alex. Caldwell, from America, had just held a ten days' mission at the Welcome Home, delivered a brief address. Mr. Blaamer announced that the testimony given for God on Woodford-green during the Bank Holiday had been blessed to several, who had decided to start on the new life.

WAITING FOR GOD'S SON.

1 Thess. i. 10.

The Thessalonians turned
From idols unto God;
For they, by faith, discerned
The virtues of the blood;
Rejoicing in their sins forgiven,
They waited for God's Son from heaven.

To them the Gospel came,
Endued with living power;
To them the Saviour's name
Grew sweeter every hour;
And the rich grace to them was given,
To wait for Christ, God's Son from heaven.

And so the time ran on,
Faith, hope, and love shone bright;
They whiled the hours with song—
The long, dark hours of night;
They sang the Rock, for sinners riven,
As waiting for God's Son from heaven.

Yet seemed He to delay:
Some fell on sleep around;
But faith would not give way,
In this they refuge found—
God's words were true, nor hence were driven
Yet waited on for Christ from heaven.

Be their sweet hope our own,
As on the moments fly;
And, though creation's groan
Ascendeth to the sky,
To us may this sweet grace be given,
With joy to wait God's Son from heaven.

AT GOODWOOD RACES.

The Open-Air Mission sends its agents to race and other such public gatherings, to conduct meetings, distribute tracts, convey good advice, and otherwise further the cause of Christian charity as well as of public morality. The Goodwood races, from July 31 to August 3, have been regularly attended by the Mission, and an interesting report in reference thereto has been forwarded to the secretary by Mr. Henry S. Simmonds, a City missionary:—

There was a great and good work for Christian evangelists to do at Chichester and Goodwood, whither Mr. Peter Wallis and myself went and laboured. We distributed several thousands of tracts, books, illuminated cards, and copies of the Gospels and Epistles. We held an open-air service near the Savant course, not far from St. James's post. Though the congregation was small, we were listened to attentively whilst we preached the Gospel of the grace of God, and warned sinners to flee from the wrath to come. Moreover, we had many personal conversations on matters pertaining to eternal life and godliness. "God bless you, for coming amongst us!" said an innkeeper—a most unpromising quarter from which to expect such a greeting.

There were many notices posted up and about, cautioning the public to beware of pickpockets and gamblers forsooth! Some thieves entered a respectable tradesman's shop in Chichester and stole eight gold watches, value £64. Some other roughs on the road stripped a young man of his clothes. They afterwards were captured by some men who pursued them with pitchforks. On the Downs, East Dean, a prize fight was attempted. A girl at one of the booths, whose parents could not read, in order to show that she could, read aloud portions of Holy Scripture on a card which had been given her: "When we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly"; "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." The tract entitled "The Winner" met with a ready reception. This tract has on the front page a picture representing a jockey upon horseback in the heat of a race; on the last page are printed in large type the words, "The prize is an inheritance that fadeth not away" (1 Peter i. 4).

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. George Fuller, of the Sermon-lane Mission, Islington, N.

We think that our good friend Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is to a large extent right when he says that "the source and strength of the scepticism of the age is in the pulpit." But we question the accuracy of the statement that

> Doubt of the truth, and opposition to it, are mainly created by those who are called "preachers of the Gospel," by some of the very best of men who will read this paper (The Methodist Times), but who would never suppose for a moment that it applies to them....Men so vehemently orthodox that they spend their whole time in dissecting and denouncing heresies, until simple people begin to sympathise with that which gets so much the worst of it, and so easily; and then they find themselves gradually led to a secret belief in, and even an admiration for, the error which is so contemptible, and yet which takes so much killing.

We do not think there is any sufficiently large number of "preachers of the Gospel" who "spend their whole time in denouncing heresies," to become "the source and strength of the scepticism of the age." We believe, on the contrary, that the professedly evangelical preachers who echo, with approval, the scepticism of the age, are its chief source and strength, so far as the pulpit is concerned.

We are, however, in full accord with Mr. Pearse when he asks, "How then shall the error of the times be met?" and replies,—

> Preach the Gospel. Men give up preaching the Gospel when they take to proving it. They leave it caged at home, whilst they go out with their pop-gun proofs to fight its foes. Let Him go forth and we need not fear for the Lion of the Tribe of Judah...To make Jesus precious is both to furnish and to fortify the soul; but to be always treating the Gospel as doubtful is to create doubt and to minister to doubt. If darkness fill the chamber, will beating the air mend matters in any wise? Will dissertations, however eloquent or philosophical, on the origin and perils of darkness, save any man's head from being broken; or guide his steps into the day? Open the shutters. Let in the light; and the darkness may be left to itself then.
> Besides, your proofs do not give me what I want. You may carve a stone into the very image of a loaf, but it is not bread. You may prove to me every clause of the Creed, but I cannot feed on your logic. God is not nearer to me because of your proofs of his Being; for myself I can only say that you have put Him farther off, up and away in the colder regions of the intellect, when I long to know Him as my own in the sunny warmth of my love and trust. The infinite is not more to me but infinitely less, because you have wrapped it evenly and neatly within your definition. There is a peril in proofs > that prove
> God's Being so definitely that man's doubt
> Grows self-defined the other side the line,
> Made atheist by suggestion.
> We may well doubt whether anything can be proved, except, indeed, a proposition in Euclid, which is only a puzzle put together for the purpose. Propositions in Euclid do not live and move and have any being. Life is gone when you begin to dissect it. The flower is spoiled when you begin to botanise. Truth is no more truth, but a proposition only, when you begin to prove it, a thing dependent upon your logical skill and gifts of utterance. It is an awful thing assuredly to make God, heaven, hell, eternity, hang upon your proof.

This is all true, and it is well that it should be so forcibly stated. Yet "to make Jesus precious" there must first be conviction of sin. Jesus is called Jesus because He saves his people from their sins. One of the darkest signs of the times is surely the shallow sense of sin, and the apparent powerlessness of preachers to produce more deep conviction.

In the past, the terrors and torments of hell were chiefly relied upon to prepare the way for the Gospel. It is well that this has been changed. For preparedness for the Gospel does not come by fear of hell, but by consciousness of sin and need: sin as disease and as transgression; need of pardon for the past, and of a Power to keep in the future. The dispensations are reproduced in individual experience. The law is our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. Sense of sin and its consequences, leading to confession and repentance, are the forerunners of salvation. Jesus is only precious to those who feel their need of a Saviour. Perhaps those who have most deeply felt this need, and who have drunk deepest of the wells of salvation, are best able to produce the sense of need in their fellow-men, and then to lead them to Him as their Saviour.

An interesting contribution to the story of the Captivity has been made by M. Naville, who has recently been exploring in Egypt, and has found three kinds of ancient bricks—one, the best kind, with straw mixed in the clay; another, an inferior class, with reeds instead of straw; and the third kind consisting only of mud. These latter are such as the Israelites were required to make, and their discovery adds another little link to the long chain of proof with which modern exploration has been the means of providing students of the Bible.

Russia has been celebrating the ninth centenary of the introduction of Christianity into that country, or, more strictly speaking, of Vladimir the Great flinging his chief idol into the Borysthenes, and making Christianity the State religion. It may be well to note, however, that the "Christianity" of the Greek orthodox Church of the present day is mixed with heathen superstitions of the grossest kind: the priests, in many cases, are unable to read, or read only with difficulty, learning the services by heart; and the practical religion of the Russian mujik may be said to consist in obeying the priest, and in burning lamps before the pictures of the saints, although, theoretically, the worship of images is not allowed. True, the Greek Church, whose professed rule of faith is the Bible and tradition, as taught and explained by the Church, does not by absolute forbiddal shut up the Scriptures from the people, but it leaves them mainly in too great ignorance to read it. The recent reply of the Procurator of the Holy Synod to the protest of the Evangelical Alliance against the religious persecution of Lutheran Christians in the Baltic provinces sufficiently indicates the intolerant and unchristian views of this corrupt church on the subject of religious liberty.

From the recently published report of the Self-Help Emigration Society, which has been in operation nearly four years, it appears that during the first six months of the present year it has sent out 843 emigrants to Canada, and 19 to Australia, at a cost of less than £5 per head, more than half of the total expenses incurred having been paid by the emigrants and their friends. That this society provides for the proper reception and distribution of the emigrants, and also sees to their maintenance after landing, until employment is secured for them, is a strong recommendation of it as one of the most practical of the agencies employed in this work, and also obviates such scandals as have been recently brought to light with regard to Italian emigration.

It is stated that the demand from Canada for able-bodied men and young women appears to be almost endless. At present emigration seems to be the only practical remedy for want of work, but it is the constant draining of the rural population into the towns which contributes very largely towards rendering the labour market so congested: it is to be wished, therefore, that some means could be devised whereby these country workers might remain, if not in their native places, at least in their native counties. Might not the promotion of self-supporting village industries, such as lace-making, loom weaving, or carpentry—an experiment which, though still in its infancy and yet unripe for general adoption, has already been tried with some success—do much towards checking this influx of country people into the towns?

It has been stated recently that the sum spent annually in London in charitable relief is about £2,457,695, this being in addition to the cost of the "relief of the poor," which, according to the figures of the Local Government Board, amounts to £2,258,029. The unrecorded expenditure, that which John Ruskin defends on the plea of thin faces and pinched waists, must also amount to a very large sum.

The venerable William Arthur's reference to the "Down-Grade" controversy, in the Wesleyan Conference, is noteworthy. "Among all able winners of souls," he said, "he did not know one whom he personally honoured so much as Charles Spurgeon; and he did not know that Mr. Spurgeon had ever done a greater service to his church than the one he had just rendered."

The Sword and Trowel asks whether it is not a turning aside from its own hallowed business for the Religious Tract Society to publish handbooks on cricket and football? The English Churchman expresses its regret that the heroine of a story in one of the periodicals of the same Society should ask her dead lover to pray for her. Our contemporary justly remarks: "Forty years ago such a phrase might (we do not say advisedly) have been allowed to escape as a harmless sentimentality; but, surely, in the present day, words like these should not be suffered to go forth bearing the imprimatur of our Protestant Religious Tract Society."

The season for the "Day in the Country" is fast passing away. Our fund has not yet reached the needful limits, and we should be glad if those friends who purpose helping in the matter will kindly do so speedily.

At first sight Local Option seems more reasonable, more feasible, more practical, than Prohibition. It even seems more fair to those who do not think as we do. But the more we think, the more evident is it that the drink traffic is an offence against God and man. No legislative act could do so much good by preventing so much evil as the absolute prohibition of this pernicious trade. But it is constantly said that Parliament can do nothing until public opinion is educated up to it. How, then, will public opinion be the more speedily educated? By such devices as Local Option on the one hand, or High Licence on the other; or by affirming the principle that the traffic is evil, and demanding its prohibition? Surely by the latter. We shoot higher aiming at the stars than at the highest tree.

Our American brethren are far less hampered by precedent than we, and the Women's Whisky War was a notable illustration of what the weak inspired by a true principle can do against a mighty vested interest. But the justification of the Whisky War is Prohibition. Unless the traffic is an infamy those women had no excuse: if it is, the logical sequel of their movement is Prohibition. For if it be an infamous and injurious business it ought to be stopped by the hand of Government. Local Option would only put it down in patches. High Licence would encourage the trade, though it might condense it into fewer hands.

Objection having been taken to a note in which Messrs. Bryant & May were mentioned, we wrote to a friend, who sends us the following reply:—

> Although I read much about the strike, I did not follow the development of it line upon line, and therefore do not feel qualified to speak authoritatively on the pros and cons of the case. However, I have made a special call on a lady, whose work lies exclusively among girls and young women, and whose wholehearted aim is to benefit them in deed and in truth. Many of Bryant & May's girls are personally known to her, and I don't know anyone whose opinion in this particular matter I would rather have than hers. She has not read up the whole case, but she unhesitatingly says that no doubt Bryant & May are the opposite of mean with their "hands." She does not consider that the girls had any real grievance to complain of, and thinks that the firm have made magnanimous concessions to them in their settlement. She also thinks that but for outside agitation the girls would not have felt that they had any real matter for discontent. No, Bryant & May are kind to their girls, and during winter, my friend tells me, they give each of them one quart of soup per day, and in summer one quart (I think) of milk.
> Of course, I, with you, think it outrageous that such firms as Bryant & May, that practically rule the trade, should pay only 2¼d. per gross for box-making; but what can they do? If they paid their "hands" more than they do, they would be undersold by other firms, and so lose their trade. They had to tell their people that if they were compelled to pay more than they do, their works would be transferred to Sweden, and foreign labour employed there. I notice Swedish matches are retailing at 1d. and 1¼d. per dozen boxes! I am told that, privately, the Bryants are generous men.

At the ordinary general meeting of Bryant & May, Limited, at Cannon-street Hotel, July 31, Mr. Wilberforce Bryant, the chairman of the Company, minutely discussed the various charges made against them during the recent agitation; showing to the satisfaction of the shareholders that they were groundless, and declaring that the wages of their hands were on an average 15 to 20 per cent. more than was earned by any similar class of labour in the district. The light which has been let in on the working of this company appears to have been quite to their advantage. The more the labour question is examined the more complicated it is found to be. The purchasing public are not less responsible for cruel cheapness, where it exists, than are the manufacturers and the retailers. Foreign competition also is a serious element in the discussion.

It is a cheering circumstance that while Mr. Anthony Comstock is energetically at work in suppressing evil literature in America, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., is efficiently pursuing the same important work at home. His letter in our last will, we hope, stir up many to the importance of protecting our children from such a source of pollution. A growing sense of this need is shown by the committal to the Central Criminal Court for trial, of the publisher mentioned in Mr. Smith's letter as having sold a million English translations of Zola's novels. The question to be tried is whether or not these are obscene libels.

Another fact in the same direction is that three brothers have been tried by Mr. Justice Stephen at Liverpool for selling indecent photographs. The judge regretted he could not send the prisoners to hard labour, but said they must be imprisoned for two years, fined £100, produce bail for seven years thereafter, or continue in prison until the bail was obtained and the fines were paid. The exemplary severity of this sentence will, we hope, lead to the prosecution of others engaged in this cruel and destructive trade.

It is satisfactory to note that a Bill, promoted by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, is to be introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Mundella. It proposes to make penal every form of ill-usage of children, including not only assault, but overwork and prolonged exposure, such as many poor children are subjected to when sent out by their parents to beg, or when taken with them on their mendicant rounds. The numerous diabolical outrages upon, and inhuman tortures and deliberate starvation of, helpless children (and that, alas! not only among "the lower classes") which are recorded in the reports of the above Society. and the evils arising from the too common practice of insuring children's lives, to which attention has recently been forcibly drawn, demonstrate only too clearly the absolute necessity for some stringent legislation, and it is to be hoped that provision will be made for the infliction of corporal punishment, which, it is submitted, will be found an effectual deterrent in cases of this kind.

Sunday amusement for the rich means Sunday labour for the poor; and the supporters of such bodies as the National Sunday League and the Sunday Society, whilst posing as the friends of the working man, are really among his worst enemies. The following extracts from a recent description in The Leeds Mercury, of a Sunday in the south of France, are full of warning to England, and will, perhaps, have all the more weight with some, inasmuch as they are the impressions of one who does not take his stand on the ground of the Divine institution and sanction of the Day of Rest:—

> It is a time for pleasure, promenading, playing games, and recreation. The majority of the shops are kept open, though some of the more respectable ones are closed for half the day....Masons and joiners work on Sundays, and many of the offices of the wealthy merchants are open for half the day. But of all the toilers I know, I think the servants of the tramway companies come in for the heaviest hours of labour. The trams start out at 5 a.m. in summer and 6 a.m. in winter, for the convenience of workmen, and they continue until half-past ten or eleven o'clock at night. The men work seven days a week. I think in a civilised country it is difficult to imagine a more wearisome career.

And for all this slavery the men receive the sum of seventeen shillings and twopence per week!

The action of the Bishop of Ely in forbidding deacons in his diocese to preach more than one sermon a week of their own composition, has been commended in many quarters on the ground that the laity will be saved by it from much that, owing to the little time devoted to study, would have been somewhat unprofitable. The fact that the Bishop will supply homilies and sermons, when it is necessary for a deacon to preach more than once a week, is, however, not entirely without its questionable features, for it is easy to see how, under the new practice, the Bishop might require an evangelical deacon to preach doctrines quite opposed to those which he had taught in the sermon of his own composition, and how, in fact, such a prelate as the Bishop of Lincoln might make an arrangement of the kind a medium for the dissemination of extreme High Church teachings.

> As the door was flung back, and the girl came forth into the open air, a scene of strange pathos was witnessed. The liberated girl, with a cry of happiness that was yet more than half a sob, and uttering one word: one word only—Mother—almost leapt forward into her aged mother's arms; and the mother and child clung to each other in passionate affection, and sobbed out their gratitude for their release from the pent-up agony of many an anxious day and many a sleepless night. Few words were spoken; the poor old mother could only sob, "Bina! Bina!"—and weep as though her heart would break.

Such is the account given by a contemporary of the release of a girl who a few days ago was found "not guilty" of murdering her illegitimate twin children, and it is due to the fact that owing to the praiseworthy efforts of the journal in question, in arousing public sympathy, and in collecting a large defence fund, that the unfortunate creature is not now awaiting execution, after some months of agony and shame. As in most cases of the kind, however, the seducer has gone scotfree so far as human law is concerned, and it is far from creditable to our Christianity that such should be not only possible but usual. The able Barrister who defended the wretched young mother, the circumstances in whose case are the most pitiful we remember to have read, said but little about the man primarily responsible for the girl's position, but left him "to his conscience and his God;" but men who show such utter disregard of both should be made amenable to the law, and be required to share with those whom they destroy the burden of shame and sin.

A very good story is told of one of the early settlers in New England, who, when at a public assembly it was suggested to appoint a fast day, protested against the proposal, and advocated instead a day of thanksgiving for all the mercies God had bestowed upon them. Perhaps in our private prayer we are inclined to give too much pre-eminence to requests, rather than to praises and thanksgiving, and it is well to cultivate the habit of reviewing each night the manifold mercies of the day, and of gratefully thanking the Giver of them.

The Bishop of Exeter, who has just consented to preside at the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Plymouth, next month, may prepare himself for strong expressions of disapproval from those whose sectarianism will not permit them to recognise the desirability of Christian union. Like the Archbishop of Dublin, however, Dr Bickersteth can afford to disregard such attacks, and he will have the reward of knowing that he has done something practical to bring about a kindly spirit between those who, connected with different communions, are servants of the same Master.

There are differences of opinion as to the wise action and results of the late Lambeth Conference. We are glad, however, to notice, in the resolutions formally adopted, some that may become seeds of future usefulness. They are such as these: encouragement of efforts to promote purity; Sabbath observance, especially among the wealthy and leisurely classes; emigration; home reunion—a recommendation which, though vague, is not bigoted. The Conference identified itself also with the struggles of the reformers on the Continent, who are struggling to free themselves from unlawful terms of church communion, and also with the work of the Moravians. Experience has, unhappily, taught us not to expect too much from the bishops, but it is satisfactory to learn that they will not look unfavourably on the work of others in the foregoing movements.

We should be glad to think that the "new theology" of these days held firmly to the doctrine of Atonement in its Scriptural sense. It is impossible to do so on reading, in last week's Noncomformist and Independent, a quotation from a sermon of Rev. John Hunter, on resuming his ministrations at Trinity Church, Glasgow. After a strong utterance on the universal Fatherhood of God, and that men were born of God's very substance, and inheritors of his nature, just as they were creatures of his power, the preacher affirmed that the glory of Christ was his brotherhood to man, and that his cross was a self-sacrifice for the good of all men, in which we could and ought to imitate Him. Then followed these words: "There are some Christian people who rest in the belief of an external and vicarious sacrifice for sin. Christ cares nothing at all for such a belief." There would appear to be a different Bible in such a preacher's hands from that which other Christians use, and by which, at the peril of their salvation, they must stand.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes recently preached a striking and timely warning from the word "Impossible" (Heb. vi. 6), in the course of which he said:—

> Now, as when this Epistle was written, we feel the doubts and difficulties of a transition age, and the situation is full of peril. A lady who has associated all her life with persons of high rank and literary distinction, told me a few days ago that she finds it almost impossible to shake off the influence of the cynical scepticism which has enveloped her from her childhood. All her days she has been taught "nothing is certain, and it does not matter." That sentiment works the most deadly mischief. The Eternal Verities are dismissed with a cynical smile; but they refuse to go. The Bible is true. The words of Christ abide for ever.

Mr. Hughes thus concluded:—

> Is this a matter for mirth or trifling? Why has God compelled me to take this theme to-day? I place myself in his hands. I do not choose any text. I wait. I wait. I cry: "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth." This week, when the text came, I shuddered. I found that it was a word—the word "Impossible." I would have fled from it, as Jonah fled from Nineveh. But I dare not. Is there some one in this vast audience to whom, by my voice, God sends this last appeal? Do you not know that every hour you delay to accept Christ, you are changing your heart, you are forming your final character, you are making your soul proof against the love of God? The hour of final choice draws nearer, nearer, nearer. You may have entered upon it now. Repent. Escape for your life. Flee to Christ, and all will yet be well. Resist, refuse, go away unsaved, and Christ may be compelled to follow your retreating figure with the bleeding heart, and with the irrevocable words with which He followed Judas Iscariot: "Good were it for that man if he had not been born."

Mr. Henry Varley has "respectfully and earnestly" addressed to the members of the House of Lords and Commons a protest and appeal, in which many startling and terrible statements are made with reference to (1) the opium grown in India, forced upon China, and by a dreadful Nemesis used by Chinamen in Melbourne to debauch and destroy great numbers of English and Colonial young girls and women; (2) the degradation of South Africa, where, to make money out of the damnation of the blacks, is by many, who are hasting to be rich, regarded as legitimate commerce. Steamers, chartered by German and English merchants, bring cargoes of 1000 tons each of hollands and grog. Numbers of native women die from the horrible diseases which the white man, in his licentious brutality, has taken there. The sacrifices of human life at Kimberley are unnoticed by the Press, but the awful price at which the diamonds are secured, and money made, should be denounced; (3) the private leasing by the Metropolitan Board of Works, at two-thirds its value, of the site of the notorious Pavilion Music Hall; (4) the Drink Traffic in London; (5) the Middlesex Licensing Bench and Immorality; (6) the Atheists' Affirmation Bill. This pungent paper (1d.) may be obtained of Whiting & Co., Sardinia-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields. Mr. Varley and his family purpose leaving for Australia about September 20.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

The annual meeting of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society was held last week, in Exeter Hall. Not only have positions already occupied been held fast, but fresh advances have been made. A new Mission has been opened in Madrid, and the outlying stations recently added to the reformed churches in the neighbourhood of Malaga, Valladolid, Villacocusa, and Monistrol, have shown tokens of vitality, and promise to become centres of far-reaching evangelistic activity in the future. In Portugal the prospects are equally hopeful. The Archbishop of Dublin, who presided, referred to the fact that Señor J. M. Vila, the brave and faithful pastor at Malaga, had been sentenced to two years' imprisonment in a Spanish dungeon, merely because he had been courageous enough to protest against that degrading form of image worship which prevails so largely throughout Spain. Señor Vila, said Lord Plunket, was not the aggressor, having merely made a reply to a violent attack upon the Reformed Church by a Romish priest. Whether, for very shame, his sentence would be revoked, it was hard to say. Remembering the power of Jesuit influence in Spain, they could not feel very hopeful as to the result.

Rev. C. H. Banning, Vicar of Strood, Rochester, gave an interesting account of his recent visit to Spain, and Rev. F. Storer Clarke, Vicar of St. Peter's, Greenwich, also gave his testimony, as an eye-witness, as to the reality and success of the work. Rev. Juan B. Cabrera, Bishop-elect of the Reformed Spanish Church, said that their work had never gone back. By the help of God they were always progressing. He thanked his brethren of the Church of England for their loving sympathy and support. The Bishop of Dunedin remarked that if the condition of things in Spain and Portugal was such as he knew existed in Brazil, they ought to do all they could to assist this movement, not only in the interests of the Church of God, but in the reform of society.

TASMANIA.—Rev. Philip Moses, an active Australian temperance lecturer and evangelist, has been carrying on a most successful crusade through the beautiful colony for the past three months. Not only have large numbers of pledges been taken, but a league for legalising the right of the people to regulate the liquor traffic by Local Option has been organised, and also a Women's Christian Temperance Union. Mr. Moses, who was converted from the Jewish faith after his marriage some eleven years ago, is an ordained minister of the Congregational Church. His great gifts as a platform speaker, and his burning enthusiasm in the temperance cause, led him to formally take up this work in which he is now engaged with so much success.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. FLITTON, CAMBRIDGE.

Mr. W. K. Vawser writes:—"It has pleased the Lord to take home, after a very short illness, our dear brother, Mr. Flitton, who has been associated with the Theatre Royal, Barnwell, mission work in Cambridge from its commencement. His loss will be greatly felt, for he was a most constant attendant, and his zeal and devotion to the work were unfailing, and will long be remembered by those with whom he worked. He fell asleep on Aug. 4, aged 69."

DEAN BURGON.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Burgon, Dean of Chichester, passed away peacefully a few days ago in the sixty-ninth year of his age. In 1863 he was appointed to the University Church of St. Mary-the-Virgin, Oxford. He drew large congregations, particularly of divinity students, his sermons having the reputation of being specially valuable from an exegetical point of view. He was appointed Dean of Chichester in 1875. He will long be remembered for his hostility to the Revised Version of the New Testament, which, on its first appearance, he severely criticised, with the view of showing the superiority of the Authorised Version.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Scarborough.—Very successful open-air meetings are being held on Sunday and week evenings, on the foreshore, by Messrs. Titmarsh and Williams. There is a great field of labour at this season of the year, when the town is the resort of visitors from all parts of the country.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been conducting special services, for three weeks, in Lady Ashburton's mission tent at Canning Town. All classes have attended these meetings, and many have received blessing to their souls. God's people have been much cheered by seeing backsliders returning, and unsaved ones being brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus.

Hotwells, Bristol.—The labour in the Gospel of J. Jones, of Wolverhampton, who has conducted a short series of evangelistic services in Cumberland Hall, has been owned of God with "signs following." Several have given testimony as to their conversion, and believers have had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

H. W. Case.

Pontypool.—Two days' camp-meetings were held on Sunday and Monday in connection with Mr. T. M. Wintle's Mission at Pontymoile. Amongst others who took part were Messrs. William Catlin and G. E. Morgan, M.A., from London; Captain Sharples and R. Cory, Esq., of Cardiff; Captain West, of Bristol; and local pastors and friends.

Maryhill, N.B.—Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, has been preaching in this barrack town in a tent for over nine weeks with great success. From the very first night, the power of the Lord was present. Many have set to their seal that God is true, for sinners have realised peace in believing; but those who no longer felt the blessedness which they once knew are rejoicing in having recovered the assurance of faith. The mission will continue for a time, and it is hoped that still greater things may yet be seen in Maryhill.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.—During last month many enjoyed the privilege of hearing the word of God's grace from the lips of Mr. Harrison. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have just arrived from Australia. A native of Tasmania. Mrs. Harrison was a valuable addition to the services; her introduction of some unfamiliar hymns was highly appreciated. Mr. Harrison's addresses to believers, on Sunday mornings, were very edifying, and there is every reason to hope that God has blessed his stay in more than one direction.

Mr. James Neech has been conducting special services in a tent belonging to the Evangelisation Society, in the village of Gesberton, Lincolnshire. They commenced on Sunday, July 8, and continued until August 2. The Sunday meetings were crowded, and at each week night, in spite of the bad weather, there was an encouraging attendance. During the last week Mr. Neech was assisted by Mr. George Tuffin. The tent has since been located at Risegate, the other end of the parish. All denominations have been represented night after night at the services.

THE EMPIRE OF MOROCCO.

This empire of Morocco has been gradually waning for three centuries, shamefully misgoverned, and the people fearfully oppressed. One wonders how it can still hold together. Its wily Vizier retains the control of its affairs, enriching himself, while the masses are reduced to despair. The Sultan, engrossed with his harem of 2000 women, scarcely concerns himself with public affairs, amusing himself with playing chess and music, is an adept at making couscous, riding out occasionally in the sumptuous carriage given him by our Queen, but not allowing the coachman to take a seat above him, but to walk at the side.

The servant of the Vizier, who is dignified by the title of Minister of Foreign Affairs, has to do with foreigners at Tangier, and his great study is to keep them as quiet as possible, and hinder them from disturbing the stationary character of the Government. Foreign trade is impeded by heavy import duties, and exorbitant export rates. There are no made roads, no bridges, no improvements of the ports, no lighthouses, except one at Cape Spartel, lit up sometimes with bougies. The people, heavily taxed—nay, shamefully robbed—present the astonishing spectacle of a nation verging towards the last stage of decay, and within twelve miles of Europe. But it is even more astonishing that the Sultan believes his empire to be one of the first in the world, and receives ambassadors of the great States of Europe on horseback, covered with his parasol, whilst they are on foot and bareheaded in the sun. Functionaries receive no pay, and live by exaction, and, indeed, this is the rule universally. The Sultan buys corn and oats of the people at a ridiculous price, and exports them on his own account. His army of 16,000 receives pay—twopence per man in time of peace, but it lives on the provinces when out on a campaign.

Education is compulsory; the young Arabs are taught the Koran by the stick, and by prodigious effort some learn it by heart. This certainly develops the memory but not the intellect. The peasant, or, as he is called, the "krammes," from the custom of receiving one fifth of the husbandry for his toil—everything being provided for him—is mostly in debt to his proprietor, owing to a threefold cause, the drought, locusts, and the pachas. So that almost universally he is in a destitute condition; but great numbers go into neighbouring countries for work from Tafilet Sous, the Drah, and the Rif, and even have gone as far as Senegal, to work on the construction of railways. The Jews number about 400,000 in the Empire. Fez has 12,000, and the "Universal Israelite Alliance" of Paris has established a Jewish school there.

In the Independent Provinces of the Atlas and the Sous, each Jew has his Berber protector, who is called El-Kaci, and it is a point of honour with him to defend his protégé. This protection does not impose any contribution on the person protected. The Berber tribes in their mountains have their Kabyle or Confederacies, and govern themselves, paying no taxes, not acknowledging the authority of the Sultan, whilst the Arabs of the plains are more subject, and are in constant fear. Of the religious nobility, the most celebrated is the Cheriff of Wazan, a direct descendant of Mohammed; he married an Englishwoman; another is an old man, of 100, Sidi Ben Davud, at Bou Djade, of the Tadla, a great friend of Europeans.

Slavery is still the rule in Morocco. More than 2000 slaves, men, women, and children are bought at Timbuctoo; some are sold in the Souk-el-abid, the slave market in Morocco; others in the great markets of Oued, Noun, Tazelroualt, and, Taroudant, and dispersed through the empire. Many rich Arabs buy negresses, and sell their children when they arrive at the age of seven. Famines are a constant scourge, and generally take place every eight years, carrying off one fourth, one third, and sometimes one half of the people, so that there are now, probably, less than six millions of inhabitants in the Empire.

There is a vast amount of mineral wealth undeveloped; but there is a jealous guard kept over the mines, and there is no hesitation to resort to poison should a European be too pertinacious in exploring their secrets. A large proportion of the revenue has been absorbed these last twenty-five years for the payment of the indemnity given to Spain for the war of Tetuan.

The Portuguese, from 1468 to 1769, had important establishments in Morocco; in 1520 they occupied the coast from Arzila to Cape Gher, but abandoned them for the attractions of their Indian possessions. Portuguese ruins abound on every side. Mr. Mackenzie has established at Cape Juby an important post for an English company for traffic with the natives and with Timbuctoo. It has recently been attacked, and some native helpers were killed. Every impediment is thrown by the Government in the way of traffic with this station, but numerous independent tribes around disregard this opposition.

For the sake of those who may be led to contemplate missionary work in Morocco, it may be useful to specify the population in the interior. Fez contains 80,000; Morocco, 50,000. Along the coast—Tangier, 14,000, including 700 Jews; Arzila, 400 families; Larache, 5000 inhabitants; Rabat, 12,000; Sale, 6000; Casablanca, 6000, including 1200 Jews; Mazaghan, 5000, and 12,000 Jews; Saffi, 8000, including 3000 Jews; Mogador, 14,000, including 8000 Jews, and 100 Europeans. In this latter town cheap living, good air, equable climate—68 degrees summer, 51 degrees winter, clean town, good streets, beautiful country surrounding it—will ere long make it a winter station rivalling Madeira. There are two lines of coasting steamers to Mogador—one from England, the other from Marseilles.

Surely God will hear the cry of an oppressed and down-trodden people, and ameliorate their condition. In the meantime Christians can bring them the light and consolations of the blessed Gospel. The missionaries of the North African Mission find them ready to receive it, and in many cases hearts are won by the Christ-like services and teachings they render. Knowledge of medicine, even a small amount, is found invaluable, ministrations to the body open the way for blessing to the soul. What an unspeakable service have the missionary sisters already rendered to the women and girls they have had access to. Numbers come to them from neighbouring villages, and the door is open everywhere.

THE CHURCH ASSOCIATION.—The Council have decided to arrange for special meetings for prayer, to be held bi-weekly, from the middle of October to the middle of December. One meeting each week to be held in the City, and the other at the West-end of London.

REV. JOHN JONES, OF MARÉ.—The Marquis of Salisbury's representations to the French Government, in reference to the expulsion of Rev. John Jones, of the London Misssonary Society, from the island of Maré, one of the Loyalty group, in the South Pacific, in December last, have proved fruitless. In answer to Mr. W. Johnston, in the House of Commons, a few days ago, Sir James Fergusson, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said: "I regret to say that the French Government adhere to the position they have taken up, and there is no hope of their readmitting Mr. Jones to Maré. They have the right, if they please, to expel a foreigner. It should be stated that nothing has been proved to the satisfaction of Her Majesty's Government in any way affecting the character of this gentleman, who, they believe, has carried on a Christian and meritorious work." No reason has been given for the expulsion. The truth is that Mr. Jones's only offence was that he was carrying on a Christian work which did not please the Roman Catholic priests, who instructed the French Government to remove him.

A LONELY WORKER IN S. AFRICA.

Mrs. C. H. Thomas, writing on May 16, from Shiloh, Matebeleland, viâ Transvaal, says:—

So many of the readers of The Christian are taking an interest in this country that I must beg of you to give them the following account, as I cannot write to so many kind friends individually. I left Shiloh a fortnight ago. As we had two waggons, and were short of oxen, we had great difficulty for some days. We spent a happy week with our good friends, Rev. C. D. and Mrs. Helm, of the London Missionary Society, who very kindly assisted us in many ways to travel more comfortably.

Arrived at the Royal Kraal, the king came out to welcome us. I had an interesting talk with him. He had been so good as to help to pay a man for mending my waggon. I paid £35 of it, but was in difficulty about the remaining £15, so I sent thirty very pretty white goats to the king, and he gave me the £15 for them. I suggested his buying my Scotch cart for four more oxen, as I needed them, and he promised to give them if he saw the cart, so I have sent for it. The next morning he came again to my waggon, and sat and talked to me. He was anxious to know if I meant to come back, and why I was going, &c.

I told him I was anxious to put my children to school. He said, I heard your children could read and write. Why should they go to school? I showed him a translation of Genesis, and he was very pleased with it, and listened attentively whilst I read the first chapter. He assented to everything I read and said, until I stated that the Word of God was so good and made people happy; then he said, "No, it does not. Why there are many white men very wicked. They can read, and must know the Bible." I told him those who knew the Bible and knew God were the happiest.

This afternoon I called to see him, and found him in his hut with three of his wives. We had a long talk again, and I got permission from him to choose one or two missionaries to come and live at Shiloh. He was very friendly, and asked me to read to him again. I am to go to-morrow morning to read to him again; he was very pleased when I told him that we had all prayed for him when he was suffering so greatly, and I thought the Lord had heard our prayers for him. I feel so thankful for these opportunities of speaking to him so freely; otherwise I have always found him so surrounded by his people that I could never speak freely to him.

I am so thankful that he is now willing for me to choose two missionaries to come to Shiloh. I told him they would bring goods to trade to support themselves. I trust there are now two men chosen of God, and well qualified to undertake this work. May their wives also be the chosen of the Lord, and He will take care of them. As the king is willing to listen to the Word of God, I mean to spend a few days here (D.V.), and then I go down to the Transvaal, and if one or two missionaries are in readiness by August or September, I shall accompany them to Shiloh, and introduce them to the king, who will be kind to them for my sake at first, and afterwards for their own sakes, if he appreciates them. I think my friends will rejoice with me, and praise the Lord for his faithfulness in hearing the many prayers that have been offered for me, and for Matebeleland.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Up to July 1 a total of 11,344 boys and girls had been rescued by Dr. Barnardo. There are 2500 now in the Homes.

MR. D. C. JOSEPH delivered three addresses on behalf of the Evangelical Mission to Israel last week in Dundee. Appreciative audiences gathered to listen to Mr. Joseph's recital of some particulars of his work amongst the Jews in Jerusalem.

MEETINGS OF WORKERS.

On Bank Holiday the usual meetings of Christian workers in connection with the Evangelistic Mission took place at Malden Hall, Kentish Town, and were largely attended. At the afternoon meeting Mr. Henry Varley spoke on "Faith in its relation to the Christian Life." In natural life we have a set of senses, but in the spiritual we have no single sense. Faith stands instead of these. God allows trials to come upon his people in order to develop their faith. We should beware of the "ifs." One is found in Luke v. 12: "If Thou wilt Thou canst make me clean." Never doubt the willingness of Christ. In Mark ix. 22 we have another: "If Thou canst do anything, have compassion on us." We shall sympathise with this poor father in his sorrow: he has got out of heart. Here was doubt of Divine power. But the result showed that Christ had almighty power. He showed it by casting out the demon. Then in Matt. ix. 21 we have another "if"—a doubt of personal fitness: "If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole." Christians are foolish in this respect as well as the unconverted. When our Lord met that poor woman, He met her at the bottom of his robe. In Matt. xiv. 28, "If it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee"—we have the "if" which expresses doubt of the Divine presence. It is often difficult to define the Divine presence. But Christ will never forsake his people.

At the evening meeting Mr. C. Inglis read and commented on Phil. iv. 4—7. In this Epistle Christ is presented in a fourfold way. In the first chapter it is Christ our life; in the second, Christ our pattern; in the third, Christ our object; in the fourth, Christ our strength. Christ is the same, though friends change. One of our greatest mistakes is that we do not take little things to God. Paul tells us in Ephesians to pray for "all saints," in one of the Epistles to Timothy, for "all men," and in Philippians for "all things."

Dr. Neatby read Matt. xiv. 15—20 as illustrating Christian service. It was quite enough for unbelief, which would send the people away, that the place was a desert. Moreover, it was quite time they were gone, if there was nothing for them to eat. Christ did not make the desert to blossom as the rose, but He brought a blessing into the desert. Why should the people go? The One who gave them bread is here. The disciples ought to have known that the Lord's power was at their disposal. Christian workers have always enough for every multitude. "Bring them to Me." There is not much comfort in counting the loaves; but that is all unbelief can do. There was an entry in Livingstone's diary on his last birthday but one—"My Jesus, my life, my King, my all, I again dedicate myself to Thee." You would not send the multitude away if you knew "my Jesus." Let us be in touch with Christ, so that we may use his power.

Mr. J. L. Stanley and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch having spoken, Mr. Arthur Eason, missionary from China, who is shortly about to return thither, gave a brief account of his experience in that country.

REV. ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D., although he has given up the regular pastoral care of a church, his state of health making the step advisable, by no means proposes to give up active ministerial work. He writes to The New York Observer: "I purpose, with God's grace, to continue preaching in London, as in many respects I am stronger than some years ago. I also hope to continue devoting myself to the Mission among the Jews, which is so full of interest and hope just now. I cannot do so directly, but by writing both for the Jews and on their behalf, by correspondence, and many other ways. I should be obliged if you would counteract the erroneous impression that I am ill, or have retired from preaching."

THE FOREIGN MISSION FIELD.

A FRENCHWOMAN'S ECONOMY.

In 1884 one of the Directors of French Foreign Missions, when at Montpelier, was taken by the pastor to visit an old servant (now at rest) in very humble circumstances. This woman had in the course of some years given to the Society 10,000 francs (£400), the result of careful economy. She loved missions, and regularly read the missionary journal, and never prayed without mentioning by name M. Coillard.

AMONG THE BASUTOS.

Sir Marshall Clarke, the British Resident at Lessouto, gives great praise to the French missionaries. It is, he says, greatly owing to their example and counsels, disinterestedness and absence of political intrigue, that the Basuto tribe has made such great progress in the last fifty years. On the other hand, the chief Massoupa has just given permission to the Roman Catholics to build a station in his village. He fears to become converted, and the Papists are accepted as a sort of medicine for a troubled conscience.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Pastor A. Haegert, of the Bethel Santhal Mission, writes:—Pastor Doman was killed on June 23 by two heathens breaking his head. Doman was an earnest and bold preacher. This year he saved many lives by attending the sick. He was my friend and fellow-worker for many years, and I had great confidence in him. Last month seven men confessed their faith in Christ, and were baptized. We have eighteen churches belonging to Bethal; fifteen years ago there was not a single Christian in our district. Our nine dispensaries continue to do much good.

LAY WORKERS IN CHINA.

A correspondent writes from Chefoo, calling attention to the Central China Wesleyan Lay Mission, formed a little time ago, which is a most useful mission, and is supplying a great need in China. Mr. J. R. Hill, St. Saviour Gate, York, will be happy to supply details concerning this work. "You will be glad to hear," says our correspondent, "that Rev. Thomas Champness is sending out two of his Joyful News evangelists to this mission, and a young man from New Zealand has also offered. I hear too that Rev. James Gilmour, of the London Mission in Mongolia, is most anxious to get out some laymen to help him in his growing work in that land. America also seems to be waking up to the idea of sending laymen abroad to preach the Gospel. Shall we see an American China Inland Mission?"

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.

These schools, which were originally founded by Mrs. Bowen Thompson, have done a remarkable work in the Lebanon district, since their inauguration in 1860. The number of schools is 29, with 3473 pupils, superintended by English ladies, most of whom do so free of charge. The results in the training of young girls are most remarkable; 90 are now at work in the schools, and of those who have married it is a most noteworthy fact, that not one has been divorced, nor has a second wife entered the harem. The schools are the centre of an extensive network of Christian agencies—Bible-women, work among the blind, the soldiers, and other classes. We regret to learn that this beneficent society is much cramped for want of funds; and that some of the schools will have to be closed unless immediate and efficient help is given. The hon. treasurer is Mr. C. H. Bousfield, 40, Elvaston-place, Queen's Gate, London, S.W.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on tent meetings at Chippenham, by Mr. John Elliott, during this month, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.——That open-air efforts and tent work at Scarborough and Maryhill, N.B., may be greatly blessed.——For tent meetings at Pontneywdd, Mon.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.*

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Morning Psalms: Meditations for Every Day in the Year. Whitaker & Son. These meditations will be valued by those who desire to take the Psalms as "a lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path." They are suggestive in matter, devout in tone, and orthodox in teaching. The book may be had in various editions from 3s. to 9s., and would form a very pleasing and profitable gift.

The Women of the Gospels. By E. M. Dewhurst. 1s. 4d. Marshall Brothers. These outlines of addresses are well suited to give interest at mothers' meetings. The matter is excellent, and the manner happy. Miss Dewhurst's suggestive treatment of some of the most attractive Gospel incidents cannot fail to be highly appreciated by godly women.

Bacchus Dethroned. By Frederick Powell. Marshall Brothers. James Teare, one of the pioneers of the temperance movement, left by his will a sum of £100, to be awarded in prizes for essays in defence and illustration of total abstinence principles. In this volume the essay which gained the first prize is presented, edited with a memoir of James Teare, by Dr. F. R. Lees. The book is a repertory of facts well brought together, and arguments ably conducted.

Samuel and Saul: their Lives and Times. By Rev. J. W. Deane. 2s. 6d. Essentially popular in style, this volume of Messrs. Nisbet's "Men of the Bible" series is deserving of high praise. Prophet and king alike stand out with an intenseness of personality which makes every page suggestive and very helpful in understanding portions of Scripture which are less read than they ought to be by many Christian people. Mr. Deane has achieved a large measure of success in the performance of a difficult task.

Bishop Patteson, the Martyr of Melanesia, by Jesse Page, and Griffith John, the Founder of the Hankow Mission in Central China, by William Robson, are two excellent additions to Messrs. Partridge's new series of Missionary Biographies (1s. 6d. each). Fully illustrated, and attractively got up, these are volumes of sterling value, calculated to serve an important purpose in stimulating in the young the missionary sense, which has at length come to be widely and rightly recognised as the true Christian instinct.

Re-incarnation. By E. D. Walker. Ward, Lock & Co. The author of this "Theosophical" work calls it "a study of forgotten truth." Filled with curious conceits, the book will, doubtless, have some charm for certain people; but we cannot allow that Mr. Walker has advanced one step in the line of proof that re-incarnation, used in the sense of transmigration, is a truth, to say nothing of showing, as he actually professes, that it "illuminates the darkest passages in the murky road of life." Only by Him who is the Light of the World—God incarnate—can the darkness which Mr. Walker thus recognises be penetrated or dispelled. Re-incarnation has no attraction to those who follow Him who said "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Jamaica's Jubilee. 1s. 6d. Partridge. In this neat little volume, "Five of Themselves" present the case and plead the cause of the Jamaicans. Briefly stated, the theme is "what we are and what we hope to be," and it is well discussed, and with very instructive references to the sad, sad past. Political prejudices and other motives still find opportunities and arguments for the detractors of the African race, and it is only fair that those who wish to form a sound judgment should have access to essays such as these. To persons interested in the cause of freedom "Jamaica's Jubilee" will have a peculiar charm. Friends of the Gospel of Christ will find its pages as informing as they are often truly eloquent.

The Religious Tract Society have published two very pretty little books (6d. each). "Heavenly Graces" provides a number of illuminated texts, with poems and pictorial representations to match. "Signals for the Voyage of Life" ingeniously introduces a number of flag signals beautifully printed in colours with appropriate texts, verses, and artistic illustrations.

Into the Light, by Jennie Perrett, and Benjamin Holt's Boys, and what they did for him, by an anonymous writer, are two volumes of a remarkably cheap and wholesome series of story books, now being published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. The tales have a moral purpose, and the attractive get-up of the books will make them specially welcome to boys and girls. The cost is only ninepence each.

"BLEST."

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."—Eph. i. 3.

Thanks for blessings on my way,
Light of the eternal day;
Glorious grace so full for me,
Lasting as eternity.

Blest in Christ ere time began,
Blest his chosen creature, man,
His adopted child of grace,
In his infinite embrace.

Blest with boundless blessing thus,
Who can stem its course to us?
Since in his Beloved 'tis given,
Pledged to us on earth, in heaven.

In the channel where it flows
Blood-bought pardon; thus his woes
And his righteousness divine
Make salvation ever mine.

Honour, power, and glory his,
Who devised such grace as this;
Whilst the Spirit seals for home
All that shall to glory come.

UTOPIAN, CHRISTIAN, OR WHAT?

My dear Brother,—This letter may be one of the results of the Missionary Conference, which at the time I am writing will be in full swing in London. Prayer will be rising to God for guidance. Some methods that have been in vogue for years may be discarded, and suggestions of many new lines made. My letter may be stale on the subject, as the bloom of the Conference will have passed; but it may come in, in what is spoken of as the "after glow," and make some one think and act. I have put that strange heading, so that the reader may not be altogether taken aback at the wildness (?) of the suggestion.

Some churches at home could spare their ministers, say for four, five, or even six years, in the Mission field. Godly elders and others, who are not requiring monetary recognition, could be carrying on the work. The minister could receive a salary at the same rate as he had done before going out to the field—that is, if he himself thought the whole necessary. Would not this bring a blessing to the Church for giving up her best to the Lord? Would not it be a blessing to the ministers, who, for the Lord's sake, would give up pet charges to go out into the darker places of the earth? Would not it prove a blessing to the people when their minister returned full of new ideas of God's greatness, new experiences of his goodness? Knowing the need of at least one part of the Mission field, would not the minister be a real practical guide to the young in his congregation, who might have (or soon should have), leadings towards the scene of the returned missionary's labours?

Along this line, do you not think that something might be done? I am certain there are connected with all the different churches in Lanarkshire (I mention that shire because I know it best) ministers—I could name not a few, praise God—who, were the Lord to lead them into this plan, would be a more mighty factor in the regeneration of the world, in the bringing in of his triumphant kingdom, than ever they had even dreamt of.

There are several little things in the working out of the plan, that would require to be gone into carefully and prayerfully. However, if you knew of a minister or a congregation disposed to consider the subject, you would assist in arranging details, I am sure. Praying for much blessing on you and your work,

I am, yours sincerely in Jesus,
Alex. Armstrong.

Taku-tang, Kiangsi Province, China, June 15.

MR. W. SPENCER WALTON.

We are now in the thick of a most blessed work of revival, having large crowded meetings, and many are being brought to the Lord, especially young men. The enthusiasm, unity, and love, amongst the various denominations are very encouraging, and our committee represents nearly all sections of the Christian Church. The Anglicans stand aloof from us. They have separated themselves from the English Church, and call themselves the Church of South Africa, and are getting more and more advanced.

The Cowley Fathers have a monastery here, but we do not hear much about their work, except that they do a little rescue work. There are a few earnest ones, I believe, in the South African Church, but the majority are bitterly opposed to anything not under their bishop's sanction. Transubstantiation and the confessional are rife.

I came out with one of the leading Roman Catholic priests, and we had several talks together. He said, with a very knowing smile, "They do us much good, and even now one of their leading clergymen said, 'I will stop where I am, for I can do more good to you here.' We laught at the way they imitate us, and use nearly all our books and manners." This will give you some idea how the Romish church progresses.

Drink is a great curse here, and no wonder, when you can buy a bottle of wine, fiery with alcohol, for 1½d. It is very bad among the blacks, and as wages are good—about 5s. to 6s. a day—and they live on fish, much goes to the canteen.

A "BODEGA" TRANSFORMED INTO A SOLDIERS' HOME.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to bring before your readers the acquisition by auction, for £1300, of a bodega which adjoined our garrison chapel for troops at Portsmouth, and which we propose to turn into a Soldiers' Home and Temperance Café. We have had, as Wesleyans, such Homes in the principal garrisons for many years.

There is plenty of room for such a Home; 150,000 beds have been let in a single year in five respectable establishments, and still many applicants are turned away. Such Homes are necessary factors in the promotion of sobriety, morality, and the fear of God. The soldier will not stay in barracks when he can get out, and there are plenty ready to prey upon him as soon as he appears.

What is wanted is a pleasant resort, where a soldier can feel at home, and where no evil influences will gather around him. His last "regulation meal" is at 4.30 p.m., so there must be the provision of light refreshments. A news-room and a modest library are essential; some games; and a large room, in which meetings of all kinds can be held. His friends come to see him (especially when he is so near the Solent), and for them he wants a respectable temperance inn where he can visit them with pleasure.

The "bodega" is a good-sized house, with thirty-two feet frontage, next door to the Garrison Chapel for troops. Within a short distance are the principal barracks in Portsmouth, and close by is Southsea Common.

The £1300 includes the licence for wine and beer, for which we have already been offered £300 twice, but we have decided not to sell the licence, but to sink it. We shall have a further expense, probably £300, for structural alterations and furniture. Possession has already been obtained, and we are most anxious that the £1600 required should be raised at once, in which case the Home should be self-supporting.

Further information will be gladly supplied by Rev. J. S. Hicks, St. Petrock, Victoria-road, Southsea, or by myself.

Yours faithfully, William J. Heaton,
Senior Wesleyan Chaplain, Portsmouth Garrison.
The Thicket, Southsea.

WORK IN CHINA.

Mr. John A. Stooke, of the China Inland Mission, in a recent letter gives an account of a visit to Ning-hai Cheo, near Chefoo:—

In a small room, called a chapel, Mr. Judd or Mr. Finlayson attends daily to give information concerning the "Jesus doctrine," and to answer questions which only a Chinaman could propose. The most troublesome part of the work is when two or three hearers break in upon a serious exposition by asking the age and name, and so forth, of the speaker. Happily, however, a gentle rebuke is agreeably taken, and order soon secured. In native dress, workers save themselves much interruption.

On the Sunday morning Mr. Judd conducted service in his own k'eh-tang, or guest hall. The proceedings were very simple, there being present two or three inquirers, in addition to the servants, and a few church members. Speaking of native Christians, one little knows the suffering and scorn that a man or woman has to endure in China, if he or she should profess Christ. The China Inland Mission avoids giving money, even in cases where people are subjected to much persecution; so the converts are tried, and the reality, or otherwise, of their profession is shown. The way the inquirers stayed behind and listened to instruction cheered me much.

After dinner I attended an open-air meeting. It seemed very strange to me, as trade was going on in the market place, and everyone seemed to have some business on hand. Afterwards we visited the official quarters of the magistrate. In this land access may be had to the prisoners, and I wanted to see for myself whether the reports of darkness and dirt were really true. Unfortunately we found a worse state of things than we feared.

The jailer, a tall, muscular Chinaman, showed us into the prisoners' quarters, and we there found, in a filthy room, nine men confined, chained to a log of wood fixed to the bare earth floor. The chain was heavy, and fastened round their necks: their hands were also secured, and one leg was chained in a kneeling posture—a painful fetter, I should think. At one end of this dirty den was a raised stone bed, or k'ang, and upon this lay two prisoners who were not chained; probably the jailer had been bribed not to chain them. Everyone seemed respectful, the prisoners especially so. To these Mr. Judd and Mr. Finlayson preached for half an hour. Afterwards two of the men pulled away the few rags they had on them, and showed us the wounds on their thighs from the blows given in punishment. Long bamboo rods are used in beating, and after five hundred or a thousand strokes they leave terrible injuries.

Anxious to practise as well as preach, I ordered a man outside to bring in some native cakes, and these I had distributed among the nine prisoners. Sometimes, if without friends or money, prisoners have to go without food for days together; no food is supplied gratis by the magistrate. In token of gratitude for the cakes, the men bent their foreheads to the earth, as we bade them farewell. Such is a faint picture of prison life, in this district at any rate. Only the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ can lift China from the sad state in which she is to-day found.

MR. HENRY VARLEY, who intends leaving England for Australia about the middle of next month, stated, in the course of a lecture delivered at Kennington a few days ago, that he has received, during the five years that he has been engaged in the advocacy of the cause with which his name has become identified, no fewer than 15,000 letters, expressing gratitude for instruction and counsel received from his public addresses and his books. An examination of the London Directory of last year revealed the suggestive fact, Mr. Varley incidentally remarked, that while in the Metropolis there are 1500 butchers and 2000 bakers, there are no fewer than 6000 beershops.

CONFERENCE FOR BIBLE STUDY.

The annual Niagara Conference for Bible study has closed its eight days meetings; truly days of heaven upon earth. Here many a weary pastor and tired evangelist, with a great company of believers, refresh each other, and are refreshed by the Word of God which they seek to know. Mr. Hudson Taylor was warmly received, with his son and Mr. G. B. Studd, and gladly did the the American and Canadian Christians also extend the right hand of loving fellowship to Mr. Reginald and Mrs. Radcliffe. It was with great joy on our part that we welcomed these fellow-believers; and their ministry was sweet and helpful. Mr. Taylor is pre-eminently a man of faith, and his faith was infectious. After his addresses, and those of others, several volunteered to go forth as missionaries, while the richer brethren promised to supply their need.

This Conference had scarcely closed when many of the Bible teachers started for Ocean Grove, New Jersey. This is a wonderful Methodist camp field. The tents of former years have given place to ceiled houses, and a city has sprung up with 20,000 summer residents. This town has no saloon, no cigar store, and no theatre. A religious atmosphere pervades its streets and groves. There is a tabernacle, a temple, and a great pavilion to accommodate the congregations, whether small or large, whether in storm or sunshine. The Bible Conference here was held in the pavilion; many attended, and great good was done.

MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

After nearly ten months' toil among the destitute little ones and the poverty-stricken masses of our East-end, it was with thankful hearts we started once more for the land of hope and plenty, with our 55th band of children. These, with the two previous parties, numbered nearly 300 children rescued, trained, and made ready for a start in life since the previous autumn.

For the first time we found ourselves on board the Parisian, with our party of little ones: a remarkably fine vessel, a favourite with those who are wont to cross the ocean for business or pleasure.

Many happy hours were spent below, after early breakfast, and in the evening, when together we thanked our heavenly Father for his mercy, studied his Word, and sang his praises. Many of the intermediate and steerage passengers joined with us, and lonely ones, going forth on an untried path, were greatly refreshed by the fellowship.

Neither fog nor storm hindered our progress; favourable winds day by day wafted us onwards to our desired haven, and early on the morning of Saturday, July 21, we landed at Point Levi, opposite Quebec.

We realised that many a prayer had followed us day by day on our journey, these 3,500 miles, but we still need the prayers of the saints, for our work is not yet finished; after a week or two comes the placing out among the farmers, and seeing many of our 4,700, coming and going, as they are growing up into manhood and womanhood. The constant care would overwhelm us elder members of our family, were it not that younger members take up the increasing details and share in the responsibility of visiting, counselling, and watching over the individual interests of each.

The eleventh day of our journey had brought us within fifty miles of our Stratford Home, but an unexpected cause of delay made our arrival seven hours late. A subway had been preparing under a railway-bridge we had to cross, and the men were hard at work making all safe before our train could venture over. About one in the morning of the twelfth day from leaving London, the dear Home at Stratford was reached, and deep was our gratitude to our ever-present Deliverer, all perils safely passed, for all the wondrous loving-kindness vouchsafed to us.

QUIET WORK IN BURMAH.

Rev. William Kidd, of Prestonkirk, Haddingtonshire, formerly minister of the Presbyterian Church, Rangoon, writes to us:—

There are two railways in Burmah, each of which is more than 160 miles in length. A great extension of one of them is now being made, from Toungheo to Mandalay. Most of the employés on the complete lines are Eurasians and Europeans. Their work is hard, their wages are small, their houses are bare, and their lives are dreary. The Government have given them a chaplain, who conducts Sunday services at a few of the chief stations successively, but seldom comes into contact or converse with the men individually. They need instruction, they crave sympathy, and they appreciate attention.

There is one who has heard the cries of their hearts for love, and of their souls for life, and has answered them in a humble but very welcome way—Mrs. M. B. Ingalls. She began by collecting papers and periodicals from friends and circulating them among the men along the lines. Then she conceived the idea of a library and a reading-room. Gifts of books were sought and obtained, and a case for keeping them was placed in the waiting-room of the central station on one of the lines. It attracted the attention and excited the interest of the chief commissioner of the country and the manager of the railway, who agreed that the effort should be encouraged. A neat little room has, therefore, been built and presented to Mrs. Ingalls for book-cases, reading tables, and social meetings. The cases contain nearly a thousand volumes, and the tables are covered with papers sent by friends. Lectures, concerts, and conversaziones are given in the room periodically. A similar scheme is being wrought out in the same way on the other line.

Mrs. Ingalls, of Thongzai, is a most successful missionary of the American Baptist Union. The library bears her name, and is entirely under her control. She is known by her character and work to many in this country, who help her greatly by their regular gifts of papers, periodicals, and books. These are all the contributions she needs and seeks. Her railway work is altogether voluntary, and quite independent of her work as a Baptist missionary. Mrs. Lundie, 6, Beech-street, Fairfield, Liverpool, who knows Mrs. Ingalls personally, and her work intimately, has kindly offered to receive any parcels of books, magazines, papers, or illuminated texts, that the readers of this letter may be induced to send not later than October 15, and to transmit them all together to Mrs. Ingalls.

For several years I had the pleasure of Mrs. Ingalls' friendship, and the privilege of helping her in her railway work, and I have given this brief account from direct knowledge.

GOSPEL LITERATURE FOR OUR SOLDIERS.—Sir,—Will you again kindly permit me to appeal to our many kind friends on behalf of the soldiers who shortly leave this camp for India (5th Lancers). Gospel books, &c., are very much appreciated; carriage and postage should be prepaid.

THE WEST MARYLEBONE MISSION was commenced in Lisson-grove in April, 1883. In addition to Gospel services, Bible classes, lectures, and conferences, there is a system of house to house visitation and tract distribution. The Mission also attends to the needs of the hungry and neglected. Public support is deserved, and just now greatly needed. The superintendent is Mr. James Sprunt, St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

REVIVAL IN JAFFNA, CEYLON.

The Misses Leitch, of the Training College at Jaffna, Ceylon, send us the following interesting extract from a letter written by a native catechist, describing the wonderful revival which is moving there, originating in the visit of Rev. G. C. Grubb and Colonel Oldham last winter. Letters from other parts report equally encouraging results:—

Chelliah, a native Christian of Jaffna, who is employed in India, came to Jaffna on a short visit. He was accompanied by an itinerant evangelist, a Madras man, well educated in English and Tamil, who went through the Madras Medical College, and was employed by Government for ten years in Tanjore. While there he was converted through the preaching of [illegible] Ammarl, met with persecution, went to Calcutta, and had the chance of going to London as a doctor in one of the ships which took some Tamil coolies to the Madeira Isles. He heard Mr. Spurgeon preach, and became personally acquainted with him. He was in London six months, and preached on many occasions. For the last ten years he goes, as he says, wherever the Spirit taketh him, and works to win souls for Christ.

Two or three meetings are held every day in churches, and are always full of blessing. The spiritual fire began on May 29 in Oodooville, and on the next day there was a meeting at Kopai, where the fire was imparted by the Oodooville Christians. Next day we had the annual meeting of the native Evangelical Society at Tillipally, and there the sparks were spread, and in all the meetings one hears only confessions and prayers. Every meeting has conversions.

One of the converts is the son of a former priest of [illegible] Temple. He has come out and out. His brother and relations are mourning for him, counting him dead. Another is from [illegible]. He lived at [illegible], and was at work in the Anti-Christian Society. His parents and relations have performed the final funeral ceremonies for him. He is in the training school.

Pastor [illegible] paid me a visit lately. He reports two interesting prayer-meetings in his field, on Saturday and Sabbath evenings.

Some young men who were scholars in the [illegible] English school are convinced of sin. There were six who spent with him three hours in prayer. Last night's meeting at Sangany was not closed until two o'clock in the morning. The pastors of churches have no time for anything else but to follow up and go on with the meetings.

Proctor Carpenter (a native Christian proctor) is doing a good Christian work. He does not practise much in his profession in these days, but he spends more time to win souls for Christ. Dr. [illegible] (a native Christian doctor) is doing the same. There are others, like Proctor [illegible] in Jaffna, who are doing this work. They feel it an important part of their lives.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE VAUDOIS VALLEYS.—The religious revival begun about three years ago continues, by the blessing of God. Many souls, perhaps a hundred, have truly given themselves to God, and are joyously walking in his ways.

PARIS.—A committee of ladies of high social position having requested the directors of some of the best shops in Paris to allow the young women to sit down in the morning, or when customers do not require their attention, have received from most of such [illegible] an [illegible]. It is thought others will speedily follow their example.—Le Signal.

DENMARK.—The Mission Intérieure of Copenhagen includes no fewer than fourteen branches, for, as in Germany, it is the centre and union of Christian activity under various forms. There are Sunday-schools with 5000 scholars and 335 teachers, [illegible] missions, weekly meetings for young women, street sellers, servants, &c. The members of a Centre Mission visit the [illegible] of the city, singing and preaching the Gospel, and a Midnight Mission [illegible] in the most [illegible]. The high police are hostile to this work, and have removed placards which the Mission has posted up. Some of the workers have had to brave insults and blows. Then there is also a Country Mission, with 71 lay missionaries and 46 mission halls.

Letters to the Editor.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY.

DEAR SIR,—I observe, by Dr. Gordon's address in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, that a Union had been formed in America of those who undertook to devote a tenth of their income to the Lord's work. Could not something of the same nature be begun in this country? Few things, I think, would be so likely to promote "Conscience and System in the Stewardship of Money" as some Union of this kind. Yours, &c.,

Edinburgh. GRANT JACKSON.

REMEMBER THE HOP-PICKERS.

DEAR SIR,—I shall be glad to be made the medium of communication between those who have garments to dispose of freely, and the many poor men, women, and children who will be coming to these parts in two or three weeks for hop-picking.

Many very touching cases of distress were met with last year. Our free teas gave us splendid opportunities of preaching the Gospel to them. Books, garments, and money for our campaign will be most gratefully received. Parcels per London, Chatham, and Dover Railway to Wrotham, and per South-Eastern Railway to Sevenoaks.

Yours, &c. G. GILLINGHAM.

Plaxtol, Sevenoaks.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

DEAR SIR,—As one privileged at this season of the year to enjoy a little rest and change in the country, I cannot help thinking of the very many left behind, in much weakness and weariness of mind and body, for whom no such portion is prepared. So I am moved to write to you suggesting a way by which, though we are not able to get such into the country, we may nevertheless send a little of the country to them.

New-laid eggs, tender chicken, ripe fruit and vegetables, sweet-smelling flowers, can be conveyed both swiftly and safely by the Parcels Post to the far-off tables and bedsides of our less favoured brethren and sisters. Every London pastor could furnish the names and addresses of such. I myself, on request, would send those of not a few "widows indeed" and confirmed invalids. Surely such a ministry of love must be acceptable to our Lord, and gain from Him in the day of his appearing his "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Very truly yours, FRANK H. WHITE.

Upton, Alresford, Hants, August 4.

"PRAYER FOR SUNSHINE."

SIR,—Doubtless many of your readers will have been much struck with Lord Robert Montagu's confident assertion as to the cause of the late inclement weather. That the unfaithfulness of the Church of God has brought about the late disastrous season is, I should imagine, a statement that will be received with considerable difficulty by no small number of your readers. Surely, sir, in the face of Christ's words, "For He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust" (Matt. v. 45), we cannot assume that the fixed laws of nature are suspended or abolished in particular instances in order that thousands of innocent persons may be punished for the unfaithfulness of a certain section of the Church, as exemplified in the conduct of our rulers and bishops.

Again, if the past rain has been sent to us as a punishment, why should fine weather have seemingly now set in, while the evils which caused it to be withheld from us still remain in our midst? If we are to wait for prosperous seasons until Ritualism and Romanism are abolished from our land, I fear we shall have to wait for many years.

Believe me, Sir, your obedient servant,
G. P. WOOLLCOMBE, B.A.

Y.M.C.A., TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a series of four addresses on "Christian Living," on the 2nd and 3rd insts. The meetings were well attended, and were of a very impressive character. Each evening, Mr. Meyer addressed young men only, urging them to purity of life and whole-hearted consecration to the Lord. Testimony has since been borne to blessing received from Mr. Meyer's visit.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

"AN APPARENT DISCREPANCY."

SIR,—The question raised in your "Inquirers' Column," August 3, p. 27, of the apparent discrepancy between Matt. xxviii. 9 and John xx. 17, is of more interest than appears on the surface. It reminds me that many years since I was anxious to harmonise the various statements regarding the events of the day of our Lord's resurrection. I took two fourpenny Testaments, and cut out all the passages from the four evangelists relative to the momentous subject. Placing these pieces in four columns, and adjusting them, with spaces, indicated by the time of each event, the whole was found to harmonise, and was satisfactory to us both. I have this now by me. Anyone can repeat this process, and judge of the accuracy.

Several points become distinct by such arrangement:—

(1) The unbelief of both the men and the women in what our Lord had repeatedly told them about his death and resurrection. The spices and ointments indicate this on the part of the more loving sex.

(2) The one who loved most was the first to apprehend the fact, but not till she saw Him and heard his well-known voice.

(3) The other women also saw Him, believed, and ran to tell the men, who regarded their statements as idle tales, and did not credit them.

(4) All this took place in the forenoon of the day.

(5) In the afternoon was the journey to Emmaus, and the return to Jerusalem, occupying several hours. In the meantime the Lord had appeared unto Peter.

(6) Cleophas and his companion then related their intercourse with the Lord to the eleven and others.

(7) While they were speaking the Lord personally stood among them.

(8) The eleven were terrified, supposing they saw a spirit, and could not be fully satisfied until they saw Him eat of their customary prepared food.

(9) Thomas, having gone out, would not believe that the Lord was alive unless he also were personally to see Him.

(10) Blessed are all those who, not seeing, have believed. ROBERT NELSON.

Waveridge-law, Malvern, Aug. 5.

DEAR SIR,—In the "Inquirers' Column" I notice "An apparent discrepancy between Matt. xxviii. 9 and John xx. 17," on which I offer a few words.

First, as to the translation. It should be: "I have not yet ascended" (perf. tense), as in John iii. 13, same mood and tense. The prohibition to touch was because Jesus had not yet ascended to his Father; hence the causal particle (gar=for). Were the disciples more worthy than Mary, that they might touch Jesus when Mary might not? By no means. The time when "Jesus met them, saying, All hail," was clearly after Mary had met our Lord, and in this interval Jesus had ascended and returned. W. HOWELL.

30, Kingsdown-parade, Bristol.

"B.," in a letter too long for insertion, writes from Eastbourne:—

SPECIAL POINTS OF NOTICE.

John xx. 1 says: "It was yet dark" when Mary Magdalene went alone to the sepulchre.

Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 2; Luke xxiv. 1, which tell of her visit there with the other women, say, respectively, "as it began to dawn," "at the rising of the sun," "very early in the morning," evidently having reference to a later hour.

Again, John xx. 2: Simon Peter and John went to the sepulchre, because "they have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre." It seems from ver. 8 that John believed, but not so Peter; hence, owing to his unbelief, Peter is ready to run off again, when the women (not Mary Magdalene alone) "told these things," i.e., "How He spake unto you when He was yet in Galilee," &c. (Luke xxiv. 6).

Matt. xxviii. 9: "Touch Me not" stands out in striking contrast with his invitation given later on that same day in Luke xxiv. 39: "Handle Me, and see." Does this bear out the suggestion that until He had gone in and presented Himself to his Father, in all the glory of his resurrection body, the proof of his accomplished work, no human hand might touch his person? B.

Eastbourne.

DEAR SIR,—I have examined various "Harmonies" of the events in the Four Gospels, arranged in chronological order, and would commend unto your readers who are interested in this question a little book, entitled "The Steps of Jesus" (published by The Systematic Bible Teachers' Depository, Paternoster-row. 1s. 6d.), which, to my mind, sets forth the circumstances attending our Lord's resurrection in the most lucid and consistent manner of any such plans which I have seen.

Yours truly, M. E. G.

SIR,—The question arises, Why did Jesus say to Mary, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father and your Father; to my God and your God"? In Lev. xxiii. 11—14, it is commanded, concerning the sheaf of the firstfruits of the harvest: "The priest shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it...Ye shall neither eat bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the selfsame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God." Compare Prov. iii. 9, 10. In accordance with this principle of honouring God first, it would appear that Jesus ascended on the resurrection day, and presented Himself before God. Later in the same day the women met Him, and, unforbidden, held Him by the feet; for the Lord had now been honoured by the true Wave Sheaf having appeared before Him.

Yours faithfully, C. M.

SIR,—Matt. xxviii. gives a general account of the earthquake, the opening of the tomb, and the fact that more than one woman met the Lord and worshipped Him; whilst John xx. goes into details, and gives the interview between our Lord and Mary Magdalene alone.

Careful perusal of all four Gospels shows that not only the two Marys and Salome, but other women wended their way early to the sepulchre, and communed amongst themselves, saying, "Who shall roll us away the stone?" Meanwhile an angel had done so. The affrighted keepers went to the chief priests, whilst the women, after communing with the angel, went and told the disciples generally (see Luke), who did not believe them. Mary Magdalene appears to have addressed herself more especially to Peter and John. These two ran off to the sepulchre, evidently accompanied by Magdalene, for after the two Apostles returned from the sepulchre, she remained behind weeping; then Jesus appeared to her alone, and we have the lovely episode given us by John xx. 11—17, showing the tenderness of our Lord, and how He reveals Himself to those who specially mourn, and long for Him; and the "touch," or rather "detain Me not," is not the cold repulse so many superficial readers take it to be, but a loving appeal to Mary not to wish to detain Him, but rather to allow Him to return to his Father. As an old man, let me urge upon anxious students of Scripture not to trust too much to commentaries and other long dissertations on particular or obscure passages. Nearly all the difficulties arise from reading the Scriptures with preconceived ideas, and trying to "make them" fit in with particular views. Far better go to the Word and look well into the details and the context.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOMES have been very much in want of funds of late. Sometimes there has been scarcely enough in hand to buy food for the children.

HOME FOR MOTHERS AND BABIES, 125, Ferndale-road, Brixton, S. W.—This has been a successful institution. During the three years it has been in existence, forty-eight friendless women have been cared for for longer or shorter periods. Mrs. H. Harrier is the superintendent. The accounts show £35 due to the treasurer.

Miss Whateley's Work in Cairo.—The scholars at the English-Egyptian Mission School are increasing, and the accommodation is inadequate. It is very desirable that a wing should be added to the building. £500 is wanted, and at present only a small sum has been collected. The scholars are between 600 and 700 in number, and consist of Coptic and Mahommedan children. The latter are the most numerous; it is hardly needful to mention that all are instructed in the Holy Scripture, as well as in the branches of a good secular education. A large Jesuit establishment, and many Moslem and other schools exist in Cairo, but in the English mission the children are shown the "old paths," and many show the fruits of this teaching in after life. Post-office Orders and cheques to be made payable to Miss JOURDAN, 21, Westbourne Park-villas, W., who will also gladly receive the smallest contributions.

THE DISHONEST STEWARD—WICKED BUT WISE.

LUKE xvi. 1—13.

WHEN Jesus uttered the application of this parable He spoke of honesty (ver. 10), wisdom (ver. 8), beneficence (ver. 9), and service (ver. 13). We shall note what there is in the parable to suggest thoughts concerning these four points. Note:—

(1) THE DISHONESTY OF THE STEWARD.—The history of the steward contains a lesson upon the importance of honesty. It will be well for us to be clear in the first place that there is nothing in the parable or its application, as is too often supposed, to give any countenance to what is wrong. The commendation of the steward (ver. 8), was not in what Jesus said of him, but in what his master said of him ("the lord," or, as it is in the Revised Version, "his lord"). Then, again, it is well to remember that it was not the dishonesty of the steward, but his wisdom, that was praised. It is possible to praise the dexterity of a burglar without approving of the burglarious acts in which it was displayed. The act of dishonesty appears to have been condemned by our Lord (ver. 10). Concerning the dishonesty of the steward, note that (a) It consisted in the first instance of wastefulness.—When the prodigal wasted his substance (Luke xv. 13), he misused what was his own; the steward misused what was another's. Here there was serious culpability. They are guilty of the same sin who waste time (Eph. v. 16), opportunities (Gal. vi. 10), money and strength (Isa. lv. 2). (b) The steward was found out.—Stewards often enjoyed the full confidence of their masters (see case of Joseph in Potiphar's household, Gen. xxxix. 6), and it may have been so in the case of this man. This perfect confidence may have created a sense of security, but there were observers of his conduct whom he had possibly not taken into his account. Have we thought of the greatest of all observers (Gen. xvi. 13)? (c) That one sin led to another.—From wasting the goods he went on to tampering with the accounts. So is it ever. Eve took the fruit, and then gave to her husband. Cain was angry with Abel, and then murdered him. (d) That the day of reckoning came.—The steward had to face his lord. Crime is revealed, and punishment is awarded, frequently in the present life (1 Tim. v. 24), and for all the wicked there will be a terrible reckoning in the Day of Judgment (Jude 6). (e) That the steward suffered loss.—He lost his character, his master's confidence, his home, and his position as a steward.

(2) THE WISDOM OF THE STEWARD.—We may notice in this connection: (a) A spirit of Reflection (ver. 3). "What shall I do?" Thinking in his case led to wrong doing, but it often leads to right doing (Ps. cxix. 59). (b) A sense of weakness.—He knew the limit of his capacities. It is well for men to take their own measure. Let those who do so use the standard measure (2 Cor. x. 13). (c). A strong purpose.—"Resolved" (ver. 4). Here is resolution born of thought. Such determination sanctified would have made a strong man. Such a man was Paul ("determined," 1 Cor. ii. 2; 2 Cor. ii. 1), and such men all believers are called to be (Eph. vi. 10). (d) Foresight. Looked to the time when he would be put out of the stewardship. Man has been well described as a being "looking fore and aft," but, alas, how few are influenced by the looking! The vision of the future ought to stir us to present activity, as it did the wise steward (2 Pet. iii. 14).

(3) THE FRIENDS OF THE STEWARD (vv. 4—7).—These friends were men whom he had known as "his lord's debtors." He secured their friendship, as we may infer, by the way in which he tampered with the accounts owing to his master. He made friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness. What he sought to do by base methods the Christian may do by right methods. He may use money in such a way as to secure the well-being of others, and those so blessed by his instrumentality will receive him with a glad welcome into everlasting habitations. Eternal friendships grow out of the wise use of temporal possessions (Matt. xxv. 34—40).

(4) THE SERVICE OF THE STEWARD.—The steward's service had this grave defect—it was a divided service. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." One master is enough, and the best Master is Jesus.

THE PILLAR OF CLOUD AND OF FIRE.

NUM. ix. 15—23; GOLDEN TEXT, Ps. xliii. 3.

THE central facts of our lesson are few, simple, but sublime. Picture the vast host, 2,000,000 strong, of men, women, and children, in the heart of a dreary, sandy desert, surrounded by perils known and unknown, such as hunger, thirst, poisonous serpents, and lurking foes. They have neither man nor compass to guide them; but God gives them something far better than either. The cloud that rests on the Tabernacle, and that rises above it like a pillar, is a shade by day, and a shining light by night; this, the visible symbol of God's presence and care, is to be their guide. So long as this sacred cloud rests upon the Tabernacle, they also rest; but as soon as it rose high into the air, hovering above the Tabernacle, they broke up the camp, and prepared to follow its lead without halt or question. Without such a guide they must have perished; they were entirely dependent upon it; and they had no thought or care as to a dwelling-place. The cloud might move at any moment, day or night; or it might tarry "two days, a month, or a year." It might lead them by unpleasant or seemingly dangerous ways, and to such resting-places as they would never choose; but they had simply to follow. "At the commandment of the Lord they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed." (Notice how emphatically this is thrice repeated; see vv. 18, 20, 23.) "What a spectacle! There were those millions of people moving along without any knowledge of the route by which they were to travel, as wholly dependent upon God for guidance as for food and all beside; a helpless, pilgrim host. They could form no plans for the morrow. They had to look up for guidance. Their movements were controlled by the wheels of Jehovah's chariot."—C.H.M.

LESSONS.

1. Our Dependence upon God.—We are just as much unable to choose our ways as the Israelites were to choose theirs. We never know what is best for us. God led the Israelites even more with a view to their education for the future than for their present comfort. So none but God can tell what is best for us, and for our education for the great future beyond this world.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) A few years ago the writer was talking to a Christian young lady about an event in her school life. She tried to pass the London Matriculation Examination—a hard task for a schoolgirl. She worked with all her might for many months, and went to the examination so well prepared that she got honours in every subject except one. But, alas! when the day came for her examination in that one subject she was too ill to work, and so she failed to pass the examination as a whole. "That must have been a fearful disappointment!" I said. "Yes, it was," she replied, "and yet it was almost the greatest blessing of my life." Till then she had carried off all the best prizes, and so was in danger of pride and conceit. God knew this danger as she could not: in kindness He sent this bitter disappointment. (2) A godly man was on his way to the ship that was to take him to France, when he broke his leg. This was certainly not the way he would would have chosen. But God, who knew the future, chose it, and it was the best, for the ship he intended to travel in was lost, with all hands.

2. There is personal, particular guidance for everyone who seeks it.—Israel was guided every moment as carefully as though there were no other creature in God's world and God's universe demanding his care. This is wonderful! But even more so that He has a plan for everybody's life. He wants to guide each one of us as particularly as if He had no one else to attend to. How do we know this? Answer:—"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, &c. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. iii. 5, 6). Show children that nothing is too small, or too secular, for God's care.

3. To acknowledge God in all our ways is a strict duty, as well as a great privilege.—No choice was given to the Israelites. They were bound to "keep the charge of the Lord," i.e., to follow the cloud. Once they dared to disobey (Num. xiv. 44, 45), and sorely were they punished. We, too, are commanded to acknowledge God "in all our ways."

4. Only those who love God, and really trust Him, can do this.—Though the Israelites followed the cloud, few of them really loved God, and so they were constantly speaking against God and his guidance. Though "He led them by a right way," it often looked like a very wrong way. His choice crossed their ideas and desires. So now, we shall often rebel against God's choice unless we have a new heart that has learnt to trust, love, and obey Him. The first and best step to take is to go to Jesus for forgiveness, and a new heart. He alone can teach us how to love and trust the Father.

5. But how can we find what is God's plan for us?—We have no visible pillar to guide us: no vision, no angel voices—nothing wonderful or miraculous. The question is most difficult; but the following hints must suffice:—(1) God never leads us to do what is wrong, or even doubtful. (2) He never leads us into opposition to Scripture. (3) He sometimes compels us into his way without our choice by the force of outward events. (4) He often guides through friends and neighbours; or (5) By the diligent use of our natural powers, e.g., our knowledge and our judgment. (6) Most of all, by prayer and Bible study. Prayer purifies, and the Bible instructs, and makes one wise. Everything depends on our spirit. God will find his own way of guiding us if only we are trustful, patient, and submissive. "The meek will He guide in judgment: and the meek will He teach his way" (Ps. xxv. 9). "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him."

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) "I will guide thee with mine eye."—Mr. Hammond, the children's evangelist, once visited Henry the Eighth's puzzle-garden. When he tried to get out, he couldn't. Every path he took was blocked. At length, looking up, he saw a man perched on a high place above him. "I've been looking for you to look up to me," said the man. "Go this way, now that," &c., &c., and so he directed him by word of mouth through all the windings of the maze. Happy they who look to Jesus, listen to his voice, and obey.

(2) A wonderful providence.—John Knox was accustomed to sit at the head of his table, with his back to the window; but one night he was deeply impressed with the idea that he should not sit in his own chair, nor allow anyone else to sit in it. So he took another chair, and sat with his back to the table. That very night someone shot at him through the window. The bullet grazed the chair in which he used to sit, and buried itself in the candlestick.

(3) A lad, Franz, who had been in the forest picking raspberries, was returning home, when a storm arose. Seeing a hollow oak beside the road, he took shelter in it. Presently he heard a strange voice call: "Franz! Franz! Come, come, be quick!" He started out to answer it, but had scarcely left the tree when lightning struck it. "Ah!" he said, "that voice came from heaven. Thou, O loving God, hast saved me!" Just then he heard the same voice calling again. It was a cottager who lived near calling her son, whose name was Franz. Then he told her what had happened, and how he thought it was really a voice from heaven. "Thank God, my child," she said, in reply; "for He appointed that I should call you by your name, without knowing anything about you."

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has, during the past fortnight, been giving addresses daily on the sands and in various chapels and halls in Margate and Broadstairs.

"LIFE AND WORK AT THE POPLAR AND BROMLEY TABERNACLE" is the title of a pamphlet descriptive of greatly blessed labours in the East End of London. The pastor is Rev. W. Knight Chaplin. Many agencies and approved methods have been adopted, and are in active development.

A MISSIONARY FAMILY.—Rev. J. W. Gardner, whose death is announced, was a missionary of the Free Church, and laboured in Poonah for many years. His daughter is a Free Church missionary in Bombay; his eldest son is about to sail for the same mission; and his second son left recently for Aden, where he succeeded the late Hon. Ion Keith Falconer.

RATCLIFFE HIGHWAY STRANGERS' REST.—On Bank Holiday sailors of many nationalities were invited to tea. The accommodation was straitened, so large was the company. Several Gospel addresses were delivered. It was a pleasant sight to behold those who on Whit Monday had been converted at the Rest, engaged on this Bank Holiday in pointing other to the Saviour.

LESSONS FROM EZEKIEL.

(1) The Book of Ezekiel opens with a marvellous vision of God—God in his glory, God in providence, God in grace,—till the wondering and awestruck prophet falls on his face, overwhelmed with a sense of the Lord's power and his own littleness.

In the Word of God many similar experiences are recorded. Isaiah (ch. vi.), before receiving a message from his Master, saw the Lord in his glory, and in that light saw himself as undone and unclean. Daniel, seeking to understand God's will, sees Him in a vision, and no strength remains in him, till a touch from the right hand of power revives him. John, too, before receiving the wondrous message to the Church of God in all ages, sees the risen and glorified Lord, and falls at his feet as dead. So now, before God's servants can speak his message with power, they must see Him for themselves. Men may speak very clearly, very logically, with sound doctrine, faultless language and style; but unless they have themselves come from the presence of the King, from having an interview with Jesus, unless their words are uttered as in his hearing, with a realisation that they are nothing but instruments, to be used at his will, there is lack of power, the hearers are not brought face to face with Christ.

(2) Ezekiel was a man anointed and moved by the Spirit of God (chap. ii. 2, iii. 24, &c.).—Many of God's servants fail through want of recognising and owning the ministry of the Holy Ghost. We lay our plans, choose our messages, go our own way, and wonder that results are so small, when there is for us the Holy Spirit waiting to lead us into all truth—waiting to reveal to us God's mind and will, only we are so full of ourselves that He has no room to work. Let us lay ourselves absolutely at the Master's disposal, seeking the Spirit's leading, power, and comfort!

(3) God gives the sphere of work and the message (chap. ii. 3).—"I send thee to the house of Israel." "Thou shalt say unto them, thus saith the Lord God" (v. 4). Very often workers seem to be in quite the wrong place, and very often it is because they have chosen their own work, instead of letting the Lord choose for them. We look at our capabilities, and wonder what we are fit for, and think what we should like to do, when our horizon is so limited, and the Lord knows all. Let Him choose; lay the responsibility of finding the sphere of work on Him; it is a burden He never meant thee to carry. And if He opens a way that seems unsuitable at first sight, trust Him; He knows the work and the worker fully, and in a yielded consecrated nature can bring out hidden gifts, develop unknown powers.

How often do we waste time in thinking what we shall say when called to speak, and then when the time comes and we have fixed upon a subject, we may not have the comfort of knowing that we are speaking the word God would have us speak. He will give the message if we will listen, and it will come with authority and power. "Thus saith the Lord God."

(4) Fear must have no place, circumstances no power (chap. ii. 6).—Unbelief is the root of fear. Our Master never calls us to any place of service where He Himself will not be with us. To all our fears his assurance is the same as of old, "Certainly I will be with thee" (Exod. iii. 12), "Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 20). We often say to friends, Do not fear, when we can give no solid reason for confidence, and feel that we should fear in the same position; but our Master always has a solid ground for saying, Fear not. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" What are circumstances to the Almighty God? If the way be hedged in with briars and thorns, can He not consume them? If a stormy flood bar the entrance to any land of promise, can He not make a way through the waters; yea, make the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over? If we see not one step ahead, He knoweth the way; is not that enough? If earthly resources seem to fail, all things are his, and He has promised to supply all our needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

(5) The worker must feed on the Word (chap. ii. 8—10, iii. 1—3).—The message must first be received into our own hearts (chap. iii. 10). If we read Ps. cxix. carefully and prayerfully, how many of us would be obliged to confess that God's Word is not to us what it was to David? How many can truly say, "Thy Word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart"? (Jer. xv. 16). We read plenty of books about the Word, and feed on what this one and that one has brought out of its treasures for us, but by many the Word itself is but little studied. And, after all, it is God's Word, by his Spirit's power, which works in men's hearts, and unless the Word is preached, expounded, taught, and magnified, we need not look for blessing.

(6) Every work has its own difficulties (chap. iii. 4—7).—"Not to....people.....whose words thou canst not understand....they would have hearkened. But the house of Israel will not hearken." Ezekiel had no language to learn to deliver his message, no new customs and habits to understand; his work was amongst his own people. But then, as now, those who knew most of God, and hardened their hearts, were most difficult to reach. It is a good thing to face the homely truth that "there is always something to put up with." "There are briars besetting every path," and we see our own difficulties, but not those of others. But our concern is not with the difficulties; our business is to deliver the Master's message, "whether they will hear or whether they will forbear." Success is in his hands, and we must leave it there.

(7) The message is not to be given in heat and anger.—Is it forcing truth to compare iii. 14 with iii. 25—27? God would not have Ezekiel speak with the strength of concentrated indignation and anger; He would not allow the force of passion to overcome his messenger, or mar the message. And so Ezekiel's lips are only opened when he gets a fresh commission; he is restricted to, "Thus saith the Lord God." May we not learn from this how displeasing to our Master is any dependence on feelings within, on the glow of enthusiasm, or the heat of passion, for the power to impress others? It must be all of God.

(8) The servant's responsibility (iii. 17—21).—We all need to learn our responsibility in the matter of giving the message. Though "no man can redeem his brother," yet we may lead him to the feet of the Redeemer; it is no good for any of us to try to lay the duty on others; the word is plain, "Let him that heareth say, Come." If we are not by lip and life echoing the heavenly "Come," which called us to the Saviour, we are in danger of having this terrible word said to us, "his blood will I require at thine hand."

(9) God's servants must be prepared for suffering (chap. xxiv. 15—18).—We pray, "Oh use me, Lord, use even me." But are we prepared for what that prayer may involve? The stone may need much polishing and cutting before it can fulfil the lapidary's design; the instrument may need much filing before it can do its work; the vessel may be many times on the potter's wheel before it is meet for the Master's use. Count the cost, but you cannot count the reward. Even here, on this side the vail, one of the choicest workers, who had many times passed through great tribulation, exclaimed, "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

Then what will the "light affliction" seem on the other side, when, "knowing as we are known," "his servants shall serve Him, and they shall see his face"? Janet Clark.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A writer in the Dublin Daily Express says that a recent attempt to hold a series of Children's Services on the Strand, at Howth, co. Dublin, has been frustrated by mob violence.

During the past month a series of evangelistic tent services has been held at Summer Hill, Dublin, a Roman Catholic quarter of the city, and has been attended with encouraging results.

Dr. Van Someron Taylor, medical missionary from China, is at present addressing a series of meetings in various towns of Ulster, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society.

A very blessed series of services, extending over the past three or four weeks, has been held in the Methodist mission tent at Inver, co. Donegal, and several persons have professed to have been led to the Saviour.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association, weather permitting, hold meetings every Sabbath evening on Glasgow-green.

Mr. George Blaiklock, who has been connected with the Hoxton Hall Temperance Movement since its commencement, has accepted an invitation to spend a year in the Australian colonies, and will leave England in February next.

The Inebriates' Acts—late the Habitual Drunkards' Acts—are made permanent. They now give increased facilities for admission to inebriate Homes, and also make provision for the treatment of persons unable to pay their own expenses at the homes.

Complaints continue to be made as to the drinking facilities at the Glasgow Exhibition. The stipendiary said recently that hardly a day passed but that some man charged with drunkenness excused himself on the ground that he had been at the Exhibition.

FOREIGN.

Kimberley, South Africa, is reported in a deplorable condition owing to drink and the illicit diamond trade.

The New Zealand Bill for last year was £69,813 less than in the year preceding, and £597,549 less than five years previously.

The Ottawa Baptist Association, while regretting the recent reverses of the Canada Temperance Act, has re-affirmed its faith in Prohibition.

During his projected visit to India Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., intends to try to form branches of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association lately founded in London.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Lambeth Conference has resolved that there are to be archbishops of Canada, the Cape, India, and Australia.

Lord Grimthorpe contradicts the statement that he intends to give £10,000 towards providing a Suffragan Bishop of Beverley.

An Encyclical Letter, containing a summary of the proceedings at the recent Lambeth Conference, has been issued by the Bishops.

An anonymous gentleman has expressed his desire to the Suffragan Bishop of Nottingham to give £2000 towards the erection of a church in the parish of St. Andrew, Grimsby, as a consequence of the warm interest the Bishop has long taken in the spiritual condition of that town.

The Church Missionary Society have recently accepted the following for missionary service abroad:—Mr. F. W. Browning, L.R.C.P.; Mr. H. J. Bailey, M.B., C.M., son of a former missionary of the London Jews Society in Palestine; Mr. C. F. Warren, B.A., son of Rev. C. F. Warren, of Japan; Mr. W. J. Humphrey, M.A.; Miss M. G. Smith; Miss E. C. Scott; Miss A. M. Elverson, as an honorary missionary for Palestine, making the fourth in response to Rev. J. R. L. Hall's appeal for ten. To these should be added Mr. C. T. Kelsey, engaged for the Niger as second engineer of the Henry Venn; and Mr. W. Carlile Fraser, lately gone out to Eastern Equatorial Africa to assist Mr. Mackay in boat-building, &c.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted a short series of special services at Sawbridgeworth, Herts. The services were well attended, and instrumental in turning some into the way of life.

Several of the Sunday-schools of the town attended Albion Chapel, Hull, on Sunday week, to hear an address by Rev. Dr. Samuel Macfarlane on Missionary Work in the island of New Guinea.

Rev. John Morgan and Mrs. Morgan, of Moorfields Tabernacle, have returned from their evangelistic tour in Devonshire. They have visited Shaldon, Bishopsteignton, Crediton, Sandford, Chulmleigh, Wembworthy, Hollacombe, Bridge Reeve, and Chawleigh, conducting services in each place. They have been cordially received; in several places earnest wishes were expressed for another visit.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The church at Highgate has decided to call Rev. W. T. Bankhead, of North Shields, to the pastorate.

Rev. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon, who has had leave of absence from his charge through sudden failure of eyesight, has been much benefited by the treatment of Dr. Pagenstecher, of Wiesbaden, under whose care he will remain for some time longer. He hopes to resume his pastoral work in the beginning of October.

Mr. James Gault, barrister-at-law, who has been appointed to the Professorship in King's College, in succession to the late Dr. Leone Levi, is, as was Professor Levi, a Presbyterian, being a member of Rev. Dr. Raitt's congregation at Woolwich. He has for years conducted a Bible-class for the young men of the congregation with much success.

Dr. Marshall Lang, at a meeting at which he was welcomed home on his return from Australia, remarked that the churches under the Southern Cross lacked what was a valuable help in this country to upholding the cause of God—the manifold appeals to what was reverent. They had not such appeals, and the new conditions of life, the intensified pursuit of happiness, made the spiritual aspects of religion more difficult to present to the people. He had found in the pulpits of the Highlands of Victoria men of scholarly culture, with but a very slender income, and far from the applause of crowds, doing their duty most faithfully.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends in England, as well as America, will regret to hear of the death, at 52, of Mary Whitall Thomas, of Baltimore.

Amanda Kirkpatrick, of Kansas, is going out to Nankin, China, in the autumn, to join Hattie Butler, who is longing for fellowship and a Friend companion. The Women's Missionary Board is sending her out.

After two years' consideration of the subject, Canada yearly meeting has decided not to abolish, or alter, the system of "Birthright Membership." Little ones belong to Christ until they forfeit their position by sin.

A legal decision in Ohio, eighteen years ago, by Judge Matthews, established the fact that a "recorded minister" among Friends can solemnise marriages the same as the minister of any other Christian Church, and hence the frequency of their service in America during recent years.

The Christian Worker, quoting from The Philadelphia Friend, states the remarkable fact that London, Dublin, New England, and New York yearly meetings all show more deaths than births; whereas, North Carolina, Indiana, Western Iowa, and Kansas yearly meetings have more births than deaths. Without evangelisation, therefore, the former must die out. The latter are composed almost entirely of working people.

BAPTIST

Revs. C. H. and James Spurgeon preached special sermons in connection with the jubilee of the Wellington-road Church, Hastings, last week.

On Sunday week special services were held at Duckpool-road, Newport, Mon. During the twelve years of the pastorate of Rev. A. T. Jones, over 500 have been baptized, and during the last two years over 160 have joined the church, which seats seven hundred people, and is crowded on Sunday evenings.

The Pastor of Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney-road, E. (Rev. W. Cuff), being away on a holiday, Mr. Henry Varley has been preaching in the Tabernacle with great power and much blessing, a number confessing their new-born faith in Jesus Christ. Mr. Varley will preach again on Sunday next, at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m,

At the meeting of the Welsh Baptist Union at Cardigan. a few days ago, it was reported that there had been an increase in connection with the Baptist denomination, during the period extending from 1872 to 1882, of 98 churches, 18,436 members, and 22,138 scholars. From 1882 to 1887 the increase was 53 churches, 7651 members, and 17,028 scholars. And comparing the year 1887-88 with the previous year, they had increased to the extent of 16 churches, 2953 members, and 5338 scholars. During last year 5448 persons were baptized.

METHODIST.

A Holiness Convention was commenced at Grimsby, on Monday, and will be continued daily till Sunday next.

The East London Wesleyan Mission, of which Rev. Peter Thompson is the superintendent, continues in active operation, and souls are constantly being saved.

The Primitive Methodists in Manchester are working earnestly for the spread of the cause of God, as is evident from the report of their work. In the city there are twenty-nine chapels; seventy-nine local preachers, besides a large number of other workers, are actively engaged.

At the Wesleyan Conference one or two ministers asked to be freed from circuit responsibilities, that they might uninterruptedly follow literary and scientific pursuits, and after some discussion on the subject Rev. Dr. Dallinger, Rev. R. P. Downes (editor of Great Thoughts), and Rev. N. Curnock (editor of The Methodist Recorder), were allowed to hold this permission.

On Bank Holiday, meetings were held on a large scale by the Wesleyan Mission Band Union, in several districts of the Metropolis. "A Curious Looker On" reports that at Stanhope-street Chapel, after a Gospel address by Mr. Josiah Nix, a large number of persons, one after the other, "flocked into the inquiry-room, until it was well-nigh filled, and they returned to the chapel rejoicing in the forgiveness of sins."

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. W. Roseman, of Bury, one of the oldest Congregational ministers in England.—Rev. J. W. Gardner, who went out in 1856 as an ordained missionary of the Free Church, to Poonah, and laboured there till 1871. —Rev. Wm. Bennett, of Normanton, for nearly forty years a minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. —Rev. William Coombs, an evangelical clergyman, for some years incumbent at Douglas, near Chorley.—Rev. John Nash, Methodist minister at Kenmare, in the fifty-fifth year of his ministry.—Rev. J. H. Moore, D.D., for the last twenty-six years minister of Elmwood Presbyterian Church, Belfast, an earnest evangelical preacher, a faithful pastor.

It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

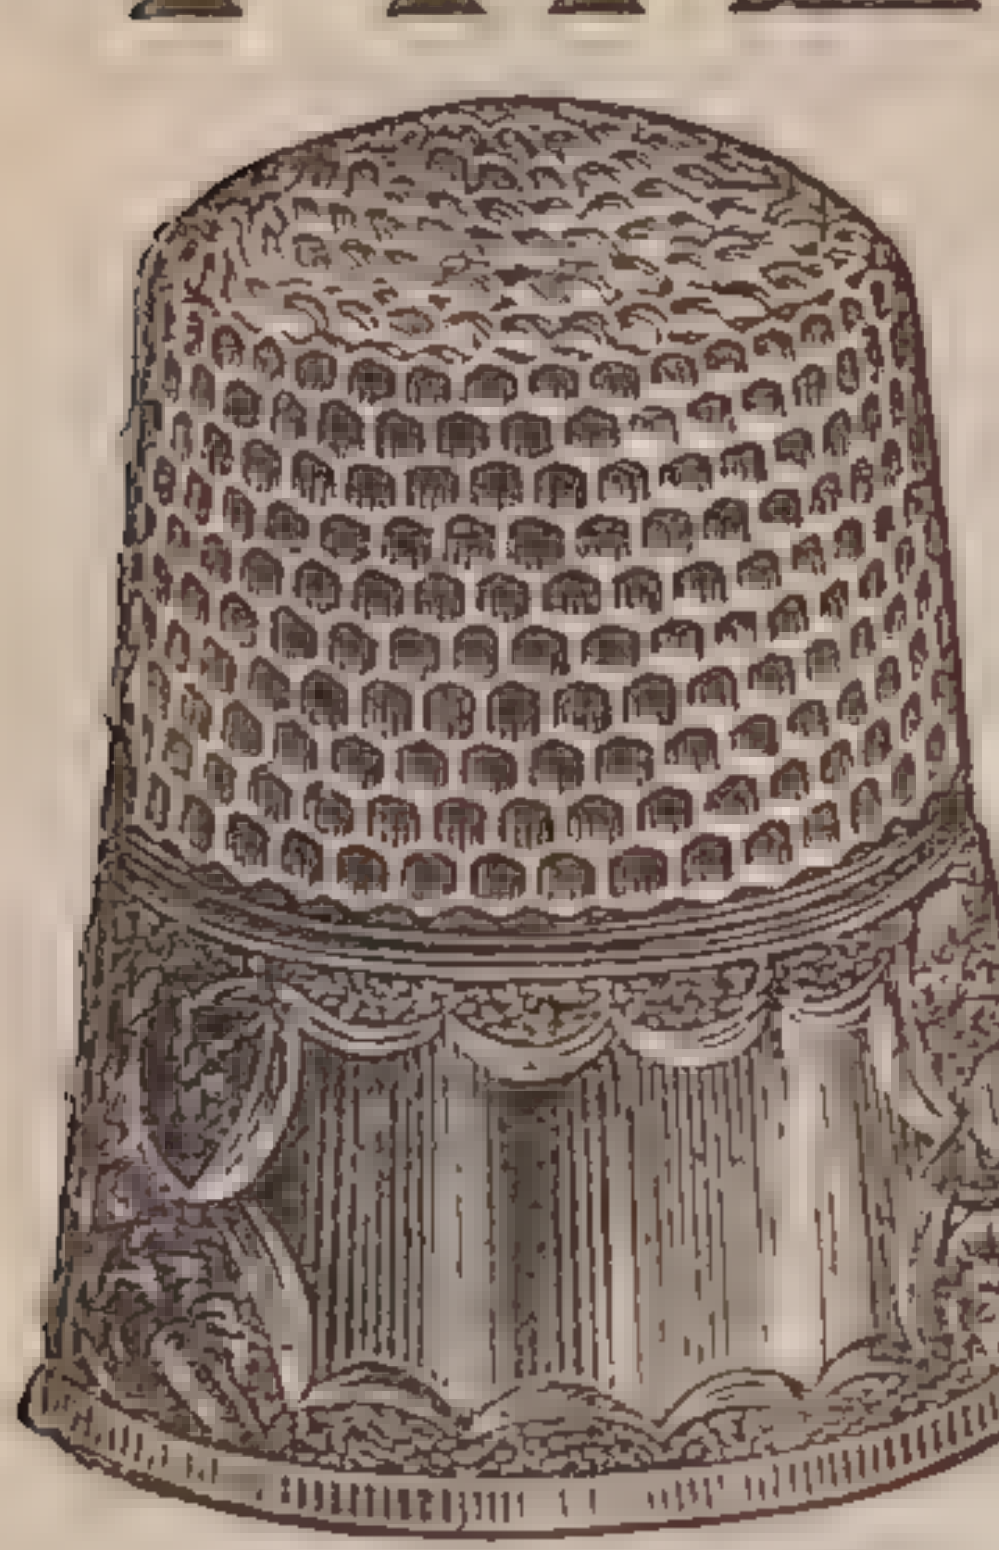
THE "DORCAS" THIMBLE.



(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

Extract of a letter from Fred. I. Mouat, Esq., M.D., late Professor of Medicine in the Medical College of Calcutta:—"For some time before I left India, I used your Carbolic Soaps with much advantage; indeed, I ceased to use any other. I found none so soothing to the discomfort caused by prickly heat, profuse perspiration, and other sources of dermic irritation."

N.B.—Many so-called "Carbolic Soaps" contain a very slight percentage of impure Carbolic, and are therefore not at all reliable. Carbolic Acid is the real antiseptic principle in Coal Tar, from which it has to be extracted:—consequently a true Carbolic Soap is much more effective than one prepared with Coal Tar.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE FULLER,

Of Sermon-lane Mission, Islington, London.

IN the sketches which have appeared in the portrait gallery of this journal, the biographies have been given of many individuals distinguished not only by Christian excellence, but by social position and literary and scientific attainments. We have now, so to speak, to alter the focus of the glass, and exhibit the portrait of one who, owing nothing to rank, and very little to education, yet showed by the usefulness of his life how a lowly position can be dignified by consecration to the service of Christ.

(From Copyright Photograph by Mr. W.F. Maltby, 176, Upper-street, Islington).

GEORGE FULLER had few genial influences smiling upon his birth. His father died before he was born, and his mother soon afterwards. Entering life as an orphan, he served a rough apprenticeship to the business of a tailor. In his early years he had drawings to serious things, for the writer remembers him forty-four years ago as a very young teacher in the Sunday-school of St. Mary's, Islington. After the lapse of some time, during which his spiritual life had many ebbs and flows, he married, and established himself in business opposite Sermon-lane, Liverpool-road, Islington. The name of this lane was somewhat inappropriate, for few sermons, we fear, were preached there save by that industrious bishop, as Latimer termed him—the devil. The place contained a population engaged in very rough pursuits. It had a public-house at each end, and swarmed with children. The spot, however, had not been altogether neglected. A ragged school had been erected and sustained by the efforts of some Christian people, who did a good pioneer work by classes and mothers' meetings. On the establishment of the School Board, however, the ragged school was given up, and the hall transferred to what was to be in future known as Sermon-lane Mission. Mr. Fuller attached himself as one of the superintendents of the Sunday-school belonging to the place. This brought him into contact with the parents of the children, and filled him with a desire that they should have the Gospel preached to them.

Surmounting difficulties, and regarding discouragements as incitements to renewed effort, Mr. Fuller succeeded in gathering a little company to whom, in untutored periods, but with a loving heart, he preached Christ. This was the real beginning of Mr. Fuller's labours. For three years he paid the expenses of his work himself, and then gave his services gratuitously; but eventually, finding the labour of the Mission growing at a rate that was incompatible with due attention to his business (which was in a prosperous condition), he gave up the latter, and became the modestly-remunerated agent of Sermon-lane Committee, a body which ever, we may observe, proved his zealous and harmonious co-workers.

A house-going preacher, says the old maxim, makes a church-going people, and Mr. Fuller found the truth of this saying. His visits often lay amid scenes of a repulsive character. He sought out the miserable, and at any hour of the night, and in any condition of weather, he was ready to attend upon the sick. It is not to be wondered that with such a system of visitation, the audiences at his meetings grew larger; so much so, indeed, that eventually the hall had to be doubled in size. The singing was bright and cheerful, and the service on Sunday mornings and evenings limited to one hour. The speaking was, as a rule, restricted to a quarter of an hour. Addresses given under this law of brevity probably did not comply with all the conditions laid down by rhetoricians for the composition of a sermon. There was no room for many divisions, and certainly no chance of reaching "fifthly." Still, just as Napoleon managed in a quarter of an hour to turn at Austerlitz a losing battle into a victory, so did these short addresses, steeped in prayer and given in the demonstration and power of the Spirit, prove effectual in many instances to the conversion of souls, and the building up of saints in holiness. Mr. Fuller was happy in securing the services of gifted laymen, and the Evangelisation Society sent him always, when he asked, a supply of earnest preachers. All, however, was undenominational. Mr. Fuller was fond of children, and under the efficient management of Mr. Lewis, the treasurer of the Society, the Mission had overflowing Sunday-schools, ripening eventually into an Institute for young men and women.

Mr. Fuller was also the friend of the city arabs, who in the vicinity of the Angel Hotel earned a precarious living by the sale of papers, fusees, &c. One of these youths was known by the name of "Dirty Jim," partly from his appearance and partly from some rhymes under that title which he could recite. He was the son of a drunken father. The boy earnestly begged Mr. Fuller to get him some employment, and, as the first step towards doing so, and at the same time in hope of appealing to the better feelings of his degraded parent, Mr. Fuller cleansed him, got a lady to furnish him with under-clothing, and himself made him a handsome suit of navy blue. In this transformed condition he then got him to recite a new piece at a meeting in the hall at which the father was present. The latter scarcely recognised his boy in his altered dress, and was charmed with the change. Alas! however, a few days afterwards Mr. Fuller met him in the act of taking the new suit to the pawnshop in order to buy liquor. Not discouraged, Mr. Fuller got the boy on board a training ship, and from thence he passed into the navy. Some years afterwards, as the writer and his wife were sitting at home together, a fine manly lad dressed as a sailor called on them. It was "Dirty Jim," now a thriving, good-looking young man in one of Her Majesty's vessels, clean in appearance, correct in principles, and having a goodly sum in the savings' bank!

On returning from a temperance meeting held by the late Mr. Smithies, Editor of The British Workman, Mr. Fuller was so impressed by what he heard that when alone in the railway carriage he implored God's aid to enable him to take up the cause in his Mission. He did so with great success among old and young. Many did he rescue from unutterable misery.

Of Mr. Fuller it may be said, with little exaggeration, that he did good in all manner of ways, to all manner of people, and at all manner of times. He fed the hungry. The poor boardmen who attended the Cattle Show had soup provided for them, with a word of Gospel cheer. The waifs and strays of the street had on Sunday mornings in winter a warm breakfast, which they ate with a [illegible]. The naked were clothed. Flannels, and warm underclothing worked by benevolent ladies were given away, especially to the aged. When the snow fell thick, coals were distributed—all done with a wise discrimination; while provident habits were promoted by a savings' bank and club subscriptions, enforced by Mr. Fuller's own example of thrift. The young, too, were taught to ply the shining needle and make their own garments, under the tutelage of self-denying Dorcases. The lapsed masses were not forgotten. The writer once attended with much interest a large meeting of thieves gathered in Sermon-lane Mission Hall, and the same building witnessed Mr. Fuller's pleadings with fallen girls gathered from the streets, and urged by kindly entreaty to leave a life of sin. Flower shows were also held, and refining recreations provided: summer excursions likewise, carefully freed from public-house attractions, were arranged for young and old.

All the Clergy and Nonconformist ministers of the district esteemed Mr. Fuller. Rev. Gordon Calthrop, of St. Augustine's, Highbury, and his congregation, were especially friendly. The present holder of the episcopate of Bedford, then Vicar of Cloudesley, near Mr. Fuller's district, humorously called him the Bishop of Sermon-lane.

Notwithstanding the estimation in which he was held, Mr. Fuller was truly humble in spirit. He was a most successful pleader for funds. Once, however, when a person whom he knew to be indebted to another, who was much in want of money, offered to give him a donation, he refused to take it, respectfully suggesting that it should be given to the creditor who so pressingly required it. He would make no compromise with wrong. He twice broke up a social entertainment where the programme had been departed from, and secular songs and doings had been introduced. In person, Mr. Fuller was small, with a kindly, benevolent expression.

His unremitting labours, and the impure air of the dark chambers which he visited, at last told on Mr. Fuller's health, and confined him to his room. From thence, however, like a general wounded on a field of battle, he continued his work, writing letters and conducting some of the business of the Mission from his bed of sickness. His illness, after many fluctuations, eventually assumed a fatal character. It was for [illegible] attended with excruciating pain, but amidst his groans of agony not a murmur escaped his lips. At last the end came. Waking out of sleep, he prayed with his beloved wife, the partner for so many years of his Mission labours, told her he felt his feet on the Rock, that all was light, and passed away. This was on July 19 last.

Mr. Fuller was but one of many estimable labourers in the mission halls of London, and we do not wish to exalt him or his institution over others. But surely his improvement of the one talent committed to him is a reproach to the man of the world, with his wasted capabilities of time, money, education, and influence, as well as a goad to the drowsy, somnambulistic Christian. During his lifetime Mr. Fuller provoked many to love and good works. May this little sketch of his career exert the same blessed provocation!

It is proposed by some friends of the Mission to raise a subscription for Mrs. Fuller, who has been put to considerable expense by Mr. Fuller's long illness, and for whom Mr. Fuller was able only to make a slender provision. It is her intention still to give her services to the Mission. Donations for this excellent object may be sent to the office of The Christian.

Y.W.C.A.—A few days ago, by permission of Lord [illegible], an open-air gathering was held in the grounds of [illegible], [illegible], Cork. [illegible] attended, as many as nine branches being represented. The proceedings were pleasant and profitable throughout, addresses being delivered by the Dean of Ross and Rev. Horace Webb Townsend.

CHRISTUS CONSOLATOR.

[illegible] at Tremont Temple, at the [illegible] Boston Monday Lecture, [illegible] 1888.

Holy, holy, holy Cross,
All else save I count but loss,
Sapphire suns are dust and dross
In the radiance of the face
Which reveals God's way of grace
Open to a rebel race.

Ransom He, and ransomed we,
Love and Justice here agree;
Let the angels bend and see,
Endless is this mystery;
He, our Judge, our pardon wins;
In his wounds our peace begins.

Looking on the accursèd tree,
[illegible]
Him as Lord we gladly choose,
Him as King cannot refuse.
Love of sin with grief we lose,
At the Cross the soul renews.

In his righteousness we hide
[illegible] of guilt and pride;
In his Spirit we abide.
Naught are we, but all is He.
Christ's pierced hands have set us free;
Grace is this beyond degree.

Glory his above all height;
Mercy, majesty, and might;
God in man is love's delight;
Man in God of God hath sight;
Love is God's throne, great and white;
Day in God hath never night.

TENT WORK.

SOUTH HACKNEY.

Mr. [illegible] has this year pitched his tent at the corner of Connor-street, Morpeth-road, South Hackney, a very needy neighbourhood. Great good has been done by the meetings already held.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

Since July 1, meetings have been held in a large wooden-sided tent, pitched near the Knightstone sea-baths. The attendances have been encouraging, and the Word has been preached, with much acceptance by Mr. J. A. [illegible] and Mr. F. Newberry.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

A new and commodious tent has been erected in a prominent position on "The Fort," opposite the Cliftonville Hotel, Margate, in which services are being held every evening by Messrs. W. H. [illegible], A. G. Andrews, and others. Much interest has been created. Christians visiting this popular watering-place are invited to co-operate in these unsectarian Gospel services.

Marquees have also been erected in connection with this Mission, at Woolwich, in the playground in front of the school, opposite the barracks, in which Mr. E. Wright is preaching every evening, and at North Woolwich, on ground adjoining the Gardens.

Another tent has been pitched at Child's Hill, in which Gipsy Smith and his wife are preaching every night. A village tent has been erected at Willesden, being worked by local Presbyterian friends. Meetings continue to be held in the tent at Percy-road, Kilburn, where the interest is increasing.

The tents belonging to the Mission, now being used in Oxfordshire and Cambridgeshire, are taken from village to village, for ten days or a fortnight's services in each place, and much blessing has been witnessed in connection therewith, the tents being often crowded with villagers, several of whom have been led to confess Christ as their Saviour.

Readers are asked to pray that during the remainder of the season increasing blessing may be vouchsafed with all these services.

The Priesthood of Christ.

II.

The Priesthood of Christ, then, is for those who are fully and unconditionally accepted. The aspects in which the Scriptures place it before us are very various; some of these we now turn to. View the subject of Priesthood in Exodus xxviii. Look at that man, dressed from head to foot, going into the presence of God. Is it for himself? No, but for the whole twelve tribes. They are all equally interested; none have a monopoly. He is going in to act for all and for each equally. Scan him from head to foot. Every part tells out the provision that God has made for his people. Their names are upon his shoulders and upon his heart; his strength and affections are all for them.

Hearken, for instance, to the minute and stringent directions touching the breastplate. Why was it square? Why not oblong or triangular? Because the entire twelve tribes should be placed in it. See Rev. xxi. 16. Again, why was it doubled? Why would not a single piece have done? Because that in our great High Priest we have the union of both the divine and human natures. All the majesty of Godhead, and all the sympathy of manhood, are combined in Christ. Take a New Testament sample of this. Look at Jesus in John xi.: so truly human is He that "Jesus wept," and yet He is divine, for He stands at the grave of Lazarus, and issues the omnipotent summons, "Lazarus, come forth."

Again, examine the kind of stones set in the breastplate. Are they ordinary and valueless stones? No; creation is laid under tribute to supply all that is rare and precious. (See Malachi iii. 17, and Matt. xiii. 45, 46.) Now, observe how they are arranged. Are they loosely and carelessly placed in the breastplate? Why, nothing can be more secure. They are embedded in gold. Take the breastplate and shake it: will any of them fall out? Nothing can displace them. They form part of the breastplate, and once upon the high priest's heart, he never can be seen in the holiest of all without the names of all the tribes being seen by the eye of the God of Israel. It is often in this typical form that the child of God sees the deepest truth, and is most fully established in the knowledge of his oneness with Jesus. (Eph. v. 30.)

And when we turn from the shadow to the substance, what are the New Testament statements upon the same subject? Hear John xiv. 19: "Because I live, ye shall live also!" Sometimes the Lord takes the most permanent things in nature to convey important truth to us: "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even for ever." (Psalm cxxv. 1, 2.) But in John xiv. 19, the Lord passes beyond all created things, and makes his own life the pledge and guarantee of the life of all his people.

In John xv. 9, Jesus tells us that He loves his people with the same love that He is loved of the Father; and in John xvii. 23, He declares that the Father's love for them is the same as for Himself. No wonder we should feel difficulty in crediting such amazing things.

In John xiii. 1—18, we have a symbolical picture of Priesthood. The hour had arrived for Jesus to go back to the Father; but He was leaving behind Him objects very dear to his heart. The intention of his action here is to show us how true it is that He loves his own to the end. He washes their feet and wipes them clean and dry with the towel. And what is the end and value of his priestly ministry now in heaven for us, but to remove the daily defilement that we contract in our walk here in the world? We need it to meet the defilement that we contract every hour, from the day we are first brought to rest upon the finished work of Christ till the last moment of our earthly journey.

The laver set at the door of the tabernacle and filled with water, that Aaron and his sons might wash their hands and their feet as often as they were soiled, is a fine typical picture of the truth we are now considering. (See Exod. xxx. 17—22, and xl. 30, 31.) The believer's need of constant cleansing for daily shortcoming is taught in 1 John i. 8, 9, 10. We should never forget that just as the Atonement of Christ has to meet and countervail all our guilt, as only known to God, so the Priesthood of Christ has to meet and remove all the defilement that God sees in our very holiest services. In either case, our estimate of the sin and the remedy is very defective. (See Lev. v. 17, 18, 19, and Exod. xxviii. 38.)

Who will best know the need of this priestly ministry of Jesus? Surely the Christian who walks most in communion with God; and it is only as a Christian thus walks that he can make the right use of the priesthood of Christ. In this thirteenth of John, Peter showed his ignorance of both atonement and priesthood. He did not see clearly that he had the full value of the former (ver. 9), nor did he see that he needed the gracious provision of the latter (ver. 8). How like many of us now. The full sense of acceptance is little known and enjoyed, and, therefore, the need of our daily cleansing by his priesthood too little known by the Lord's dear people. But how beautifully does Jesus here put each in its true place. There was a sense in which they were clean every whit; there was another sense in which they needed to have their hands and feet washed. The former was that of their standing or acceptance before God; the latter was that of their walk or service. Atonement secures the former; priesthood meets the latter. And that there should be no mistake on the matter, the Lord uses two different words in ver. 10. The former word means the bathing of the entire body; the latter only washing part of the body. Here, again, we have the two great and blessed facts of the Atonement and the Priesthood kept before us.

In John vi. 37, our blessed Lord uttered these wonderful words: "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." As this Scripture is full of comfort for believers, the correct meaning of it is of the very last importance. Few passages have been more turned aside from their primary meaning, both by commentators and expositors than this one. They almost all use it in reference to the unsaved. They tell them that if they come to Jesus, He will not cast them out, or refuse to pardon them. This is a blessed truth in itself, for He came into the world to save that which was lost (Matt. xviii. 11). The Gospel proclaims pardon to every lost child of Adam, upon the ground of the finished work of Christ. He invites all the lost to come unto Him (Matt. xi. 28). But that is not the meaning of John vi. 37. It primarily refers to the saved, not to the unsaved. It addresses those who have come to Christ, and are accepted in Him, and assures them that just as Noah was not cast out of the ark, nor Israel turned out from under the shelter of the blood, nor the manslayer turned out of the city of refuge, no more will Jesus cast out his people. The original word would be well expressed by any of the four following: "throw away," "part with," "give up," "surrender"; and the context itself should have prevented us from the misapplication of the passage.

The blessed Lord, after declaring that He will in no wise, or for no cause whatever, cast out those who have come to Him, adds a reason in the thirty-eighth verse: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." Then, in ver. 39, He tells us what is the will of Him that sent Him, as to those whom He has given Him: "And this is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." Observe in this thirty-ninth verse the word "it." Why does the Lord use the pronoun it collectively? Because his object is to show the security of his whole Church corporately. Just as in Eph. v. 25, 26, 27, the word it is used four times: "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it." Then look at the next verse (John vi. 40): "And this is the will of Him that sent me, that everyone which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." Here each child of God may take to himself the full comfort of all that is predicted of the whole Church. The whole corporation of believers are in the safe keeping of Jesus. He will in no wise part with what is dear to his heart. Whether his people are alive or dead they are his property. Jesus claims them as his for ever—he has given Himself for them. He gives his sheep eternal life, and will at the last day demand their dust from the tomb. That morn of immortality that will soon dawn will fully demonstrate the full meaning of "I will in no wise cast out." This whole passage then declares not the non-repulsion of the unsaved, but the non-surrender of the saved.

Rom. v. 10 teaches the same truth: "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved in his life." Here believers are said to be saved in his life. His life, when? It cannot be his life before He died upon the cross; it is clearly his life for us now in heaven. John xiv. 19—"Because I live, ye shall live also"—is perhaps the best key to Rom. v. 10. In Rom. viii. 33, the universe is challenged to charge the sin judicially upon believers that Christ once bore upon the cross, and that God blotted out, through faith in the blood of his Son. There can be no condemnation to such. The sin has been punished upon the Substitute. His resurrection proclaims the acquittal of all who trust in Him. He is also at the right hand of God—this is to the Christian, who is one with Christ, the virtual possession of glory. But Jesus also makes intercession for his people—this then is the Divine and needed provision for the saints, till they reach that glory where the Head now is.

THE SHADOW OF PETER.

A German legend is told of a man who, for a monetary consideration, at the instance of Satan, sold his shadow. It seemed an easy way to obtain money. The shadow, at all events, was no integral part of the man, and might, therefore, be sacrificed with impunity. But the deluded victim soon found out his mistake; for, passing a school as the children were at play, one of them drew attention to the startling fact that a man was before them who had no shadow, whereupon the children began to hoot him, and, finally, being joined by the villagers, to pelt with stones, and thus cause him to flee for his life. We may therefore say, appropriating the sentiment of the Latin poet, "I deem nothing that concerns man foreign to myself," not even his shadow. Even the shadow has value, as the case of Peter shows, whereof we read (Acts v. 17), "Insomuch as they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them."

(1) There cannot be shadow unless there be substance. While the shadow is nothing in itself, it never proceeds from nothing. A shadow ever stands out from some body, from some substance. Though in itself unsubstantial, it never has an unsubstantial cause. Whence we gather that it needs a body of righteousness to give stability to character. Without moral or spiritual fibre, how can the shadow of a true and noble character come into play? Peter's shadow is a sort of symbol for Peter's influence. A person's influence, like his shadow, cannot be grasped. And yet it is there, standing out from his person, a secret intangible something that tells for better or worse wherever it falls.

(2) Every substance has its own distinctive shadow. Peter's shadow could only be caused by Peter himself. And does not this show us, in a deep philosophic sense, that "no man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself"? Influence is determined by character. Our power to benefit or injure our generation depends on what we are, and never on what we merely seem to be. It is vain to imagine that we can cast the shadow of Peter unless we have the moral and spiritual build of Peter. There are men whom, as soon as we are in their society, we feel to be men of goodness. They may not speak, or what they say may be on as trite a subject as the weather, but their shadow is upon us, and it is to our souls as the sanctuary of Jehovah. Oh, if there is to radiate from us that subtle yet beneficent spirit, which shall heal whatever it may touch; if our lives are to tell, even unconsciously to ourselves, for God and his kingdom: we must, like Peter, be centres of celestial fire, vessels laden with the precious freight of purity and love.

(3) The shadow implies that the body casting it is itself standing in the light. This explains why David did not fear the valley of death (Ps. xxiii.). It was to him the valley of the shadow. The Lord his Shepherd was there, and his presence relieved the darkness and the gloom. To the believer there is light in the valley, for the Light of the world is near. "The best of all," said John Wesley, "God is with me."

(4) The depth of the shadow is in proportion to the strength of the light. Peter's shadow in its wondrous effect told of his standing place. He stood in the presence of the risen Christ, and his shadow in its rare depth and influence was owing to that better light, in comparison with which the sun is as darkness. If the shadow be obscure, and scarce perceptible, is it not because of failure in our relation to Him who is the life and the light of men?

(5) The shadow is mysterious on many grounds. You cannot catch it; you cannot take it to pieces; you cannot weigh it; nor can you either evade or invade it.

And does not this answer to the mystery in life? Who can escape from his own record? The shadow attends him wherever he goes, whatever he does. In the light of conscience and of Scripture he must needs cast his shadow. It is on this idea Horace seems to have fixed:—

Neque
Decedit aerata triremi, et
Post equitem sedet atra cura.

"Nor does gloomy care quit the brazen-beaked galley, and she mounts behind the horseman."

Finally, those who have their faces towards the light, cast a backward shadow, but those whose backs are turned to it, cast their shadows before it. Which is ours?

AGGRESSIVE ROMANISM.

A recent French publication, "Etudes Religieuses," gives some very instructive statistics of the wide extent and distribution of Jesuit missionary work throughout the world. As an instance of the wonderful method and activity displayed by the Romish propaganda, it affords material for serious consideration and searchings of heart. The central authorities at Rome are certainly adepts in the arts of organisation, and it behoves earnest Protestants to be upon their guard. The various missionary orders—Jesuits, Franciscans, Dominicans, &c.—are each allotted distinct spheres of labour, so that they may harmonise and supplement each other's work. The Jesuits, however, seem to be the most active, as they are the most crafty and dangerous. There is not a country, however remote, in all the four corners of the globe, to which their emissaries do not penetrate.

In America they have no fewer than 1130 agents: Canadian Jesuits among the Red Indians of Canada, Spaniards in Central and Southern America, English in the West Indies, Italians and Germans to preach to the Italian and German immigrants of Brazil. In Africa and China the Jesuits are mostly French, special efforts being directed towards Egypt, Madagascar, and the region of the River Zambesi. Throughout Oceania, in China, Australia, New Zealand, among the Philippine Islands, and in the Malay Archipelago, they are still to be found. In all, there are nearly 2500 Jesuit missionaries scattered over the face of the world, permeating the untutored minds of savage and barbarian tribes with their dangerous doctrines, and spreading the light of Christianity among the Gentiles through the distorting and obscuring glasses of man's invention. What a lesson all this perverted activity and misdirected zeal should be to faltering Christians; what a warning of the dangers and possibilities of neglecting missionary effort; what an incentive to do all and sacrifice all for the glorious work of furthering Christ's kingdom, and preaching his Gospel to the nations of the earth. Well may we still exclaim, "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few."

It is painful to note the growing tendency of the Press in many quarters to mimimise if not to ignore the very real danger which threatens England. In noticing a recent book, exposing and protesting against the advances of Romanism, a weekly critical paper condemns the writer's views as "altogether antiquated," accuses him of having exaggerated the dangers to civil and religious liberty which would result from Papal ascendency, and deprecates "intolerance in matters of religion." But it is not a question of mere numbers, and an easy-going neutrality towards what is dangerous is not tolerance. None but those who are either wilfully blind to, or too careless to reflect upon, the general drift of events, can fail to see that the Roman Church, knowing full well that "Protestantism weakened in England is paralysed everywhere," is ceaselessly plotting and undermining to bring this country once more to her feet. But the most lamentable symptom of the insidious disease which is gnawing at the national vitals is that so many of the bishops and clergy of the Church of England should be ashamed of the very name of Protestant, and should be doing their utmost to introduce Romish ritual, doctrine, and practices; and, moreover, should be hankering after reunion with or absorption in Rome, which is the arch-foe of civil and religious liberty.

Without intrenching upon the forbidden domain of politics, it may be allowed us to draw attention to a recent extraordinary proceeding at Manchester. The Roman Catholic members of the School Board in that city have demanded that the children of their faith attending one of the Board Schools should receive specific instruction in the dogmas and formularies of the Roman Catholic religion at the Board's cost, that Roman Catholic teachers should be engaged to give distinctive religious teaching, and that these children should receive secular instruction in a room apart from the other children. Strange to say, this demand has actually been acceded to by a majority of the Board! To set up a Romish or any other sectarian school at the expense of the ratepayers is a decided breach of public trust, and it is not too much to say that had such a proposal been made in the interests of any Protestant religious body it would have been strenuously opposed by the Roman Catholics. Apart from this, however, the above incident affords another illustration of the truth of the dictum that "in countries where the Romish priesthood are in a minority they constantly demand not only toleration, but equality; while in countries where they predominate, they allow neither toleration nor equality." It is to be hoped that the Protestants of Manchester will, at the next School Board election, record their emphatic disapproval of the above proceeding, which is opposed alike to the letter and to the spirit of the law.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—Dear Sir,—I hear from Pastor de Jonge that the distribution of tracts at our kiosk at Brussels goes on very well, and that the people receive them thankfully. The tent adjoining is open each night from 6 till 9, and is full nightly of eager listeners to the Gospel message. From Spain we learn that our tracts have been distributed at Barcelona, Corunna, Linares, Valencia, Cadiz, Burgos, Toledo, Bilbao, Granada, Castillon, &c., &c. Permit me to ask the prayers of your readers for a rich blessing on these efforts to win souls to Christ. Our funds are exhausted.—Yours faithfully,

THE NEW CART.

Well nigh three thousand years ago a goodly company of earnest people might have been seen bringing up to Jerusalem, with joy and music, a venerable object that had been the symbol and centre of their worship for nearly five hundred years. But there was something very novel in the procession, a thing quite unknown before in their religious history. The Ark around which their religious enthusiasm gathered them was "made to ride upon a new cart." Doubtless the contrivance was much admired. Such a cart for dignity and splendour had never been seen before. It had been made at the king's command, and the king was great, for the Lord had prospered him mightily; and it had been made as a chariot for the holiest thing the nation possessed. Who could forbid the most lavish expenditure of skill and money upon a vehicle so honourable, to be used in a service so sacred?

So this new cart, with its yoke of oxen was brought to the house of Abinadab at Kirjath-jearim; the procession formed around it, and "David and all Israel" played before God with all their might, with singing, and with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets, full of earnest zeal for the good work they were engaged in, to bring the Ark to the place that had been prepared for it.

Possibly some old-fashioned people did not quite like this new thing; perhaps they said, This is "not after the due order," (1 Chron. xv. 13), and may have hinted that Moses had not said anything about making the Ark ride on a triumphal chariot in this way. But these croakers were silenced; they were too conservative, and had no spirit of progress in them. Was not this new cart a vast improvement on the old slow method of progress?

But this procession never reached its destination. The Lord was displeased with this departure from the old "due order," and made such a breach upon them that day, as alarmed the king and disorganised the whole plan. One of the earnest but misguided processionists was struck dead beside the Ark "for his error," "and David was afraid of the Lord that day;" the procession was broken up, and the Ark left in the house of a Gittite, and there it lay till David repented of his rashness and adopted the method ordained by God Himself.

A painful ending this to a great forth-putting of religious energy and zeal, and the disaster all attributable to this ill-starred new cart, that never should have been there at all. No matter how beautiful the thing was, nor how serviceable it appeared, it was "not according to the due order," and in God's service man's many inventions bring no blessing or real progress. God would have nothing to do with it, and shame and defeat resulted from the use of this new device.

But where had such an idea originated? There was nothing about it in God's book. Who had set the fashion that had tempted God's people out of the old way? Who, but the Philistines, God's enemies? On a new cart they had sent the Ark up out of their land in all eagerness to get rid of it, and although this was a hundred years ago, the thing had not been forgotten; the novelty and success of this method in the hands of the Philistines was inducement enough to try it again.

It was not the last time that God's people thought they might judiciously borrow new methods of usefulness from the world that is at enmity with God, and we may well ask ourselves if they are likely to meet with God's approval and blessing now more than they did then?

God's Ark was to be borne by its staves upon the shoulders of consecrated men; and by kindred means alone is God's kingdom to be borne forward even in our own day. Many think the method slow and old-fashioned, and boldly go to the world to seek out new methods which have succeeded there. Men earnest and full of zeal of a certain kind are gathered around God's Ark still, seeking to make its place glorious according to their light, and in their eagerness for the needed means think nothing of directing all the energies of a Christian congregation perhaps for twelve months away from the work God gave it to do, and busily employ all in furnishing a bazaar or fancy fair. The church is in debt; money must be got; by buying and selling money is made in the world. Why should not the church buy and sell?

To the bazaar is added the lottery, another device copied from the Philistines. In this the church borrows from the worst traditions of a corrupt past, and in adopting the lottery uses, at least in principle, a method of raising money so depraving that the secular law has had to be put in action to arrest its mischievous course. The apostasy of Rome and Romish princes may use it in their Godless greed of gain, but what has the Church of Christ to do with such a thing? Where her commission to leave her saintly work and be found ignominiously driving a cart like Uzzah and Ahio?

Once open the flood-gates to man's inventions, and where will they stop? Now we find Christian congregations engaged in catering for public amusements to raise money. The concert and dramatic entertainment are employed. Men and women are hired for money to take part in these entertainments, and Christians are found justifying their action in this matter by the old Jesuit maxim of the end justifying the means. And these means involve the taking away of Christian workers from their true work: they involve a direct pause to that work, for when the church opens its hall for the concert, or dramatic entertainment, or any other form of public amusement, it, for the the time being, must cease to care for the souls of men, for it invites them into its house, but boldly declares that just now it wants not them but theirs—not their salvation but their silver. All and sundry are successfully gathered in; the music, and gay dresses, and decorations, and company, attract the ungodly, but every mouth is shut that would wish to speak for Christ.

All kinds of wares are offered at the bazaar stalls except the Word of God. No voice can be raised for Him in such a place, and the church for once succeeds in getting the world to come, but she makes no sign that she cares for aught about the world but its money. Truly this is a humiliating spectacle, and no church can thus betray her trust for one week, or day, or hour, without suffering in her spiritual life. Has the church a right to be engaged at any time in such a manner as precludes her from doing the very work that is the reason of her existence?

And what are all these other devices used in obtaining money but cuttings from the same bad tree? The money for God's work should be the gift of willing hearts. What a contrast the church report of the present day is to the church report contained in the Acts of the Apostles! Now all is judged by the amount of money raised, rather than by the work of salvation done. Does God require of us to build stately houses in which to worship Him, and then adopt such means of paying for them? Does He ask us to use such means to obtain money, even to send missionaries to the heathen?

Let us be careful not to judge of the rightness or wrongness of anything within the church by its novelty or apparent success for the time being. Has God allowed it? Would the Lord Jesus Himself have taken part in it when here among us as a man? If it is not according to the due order such as we can read it in his Word, let us have nought to do with it.

Uzzah and Ahio were priests' sons, and though commanded by a king were altogether in a wrong and humiliating place when they were engaged in driving the cart, although they were the centre of an admiring and enthusiastic crowd of worshippers. As fatally wrong are God's children now when they leave his work to engage in driving the money car, and are in danger still of perishing by the side of the Ark as Uzzah did; their spiritual life and usefulness gone by reason of engaging in things "not according to the due order." THE RESCUE SOCIETY.

There is much that is encouraging in the thirty-fifth annual report of the Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children. No fewer than 408 new cases were admitted to the Homes in 1887, making, with 134 remaining from the previous year, a total of 542 inmates enjoying the advantages afforded by the Institution. The percentage of those who, after several months' training, were satisfactorily disposed of, was higher last year than previously, and it is gratifying to know that spiritual results were plainly indicated in many cases. All that has been witnessed and rejoiced in by the workers cannot be mentioned, but much real fruit has been seen, whereby anxious well-wishers of the fallen and degraded have been constrained to praise Him to whom alone the glory is due.

The Homes are eight in number, and managed on the family principle of only a small number of young women being associated together. A brief history of each and all of the Homes is given in the report. Notwithstanding the fact that a special effort was made last year to secure new contributors, the amount received in subscriptions and donations was considerably less than in 1886. The earnings of the Homes, on the other hand, showed substantial improvement. By a careful classification, the young women are placed and cared for in surroundings most suited to their special cases.

To Christian people who take an active interest in rescue work, this report will be useful; it costs 6d. to non-subscribers, and may be had of the secretary of the Society, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

THE WANDERERS' HOME is a very useful branch of the work of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. It serves as a temporary asylum for inquiring and believing Israelites in distress or difficulty, and is under the direction of Rev. J. M. Eppstein. Since its foundation, in 1853, about two thousand Jews have enjoyed its advantages, and have heard the message of salvation under its roof. Nearly half that number are said to have become true penitents, sincere believers, and consistent Christians. The thirty-fourth annual report, which contains much that is deeply interesting, states that the Home is being conducted "on definite Church principles, and under strict episcopal supervision." Mr. Eppstein's address is 43, King Edward-road, South Hackney, London, E.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXIII.—MACHPELAH, AND ITS FIRST TENANT.

GENESIS xxiii.

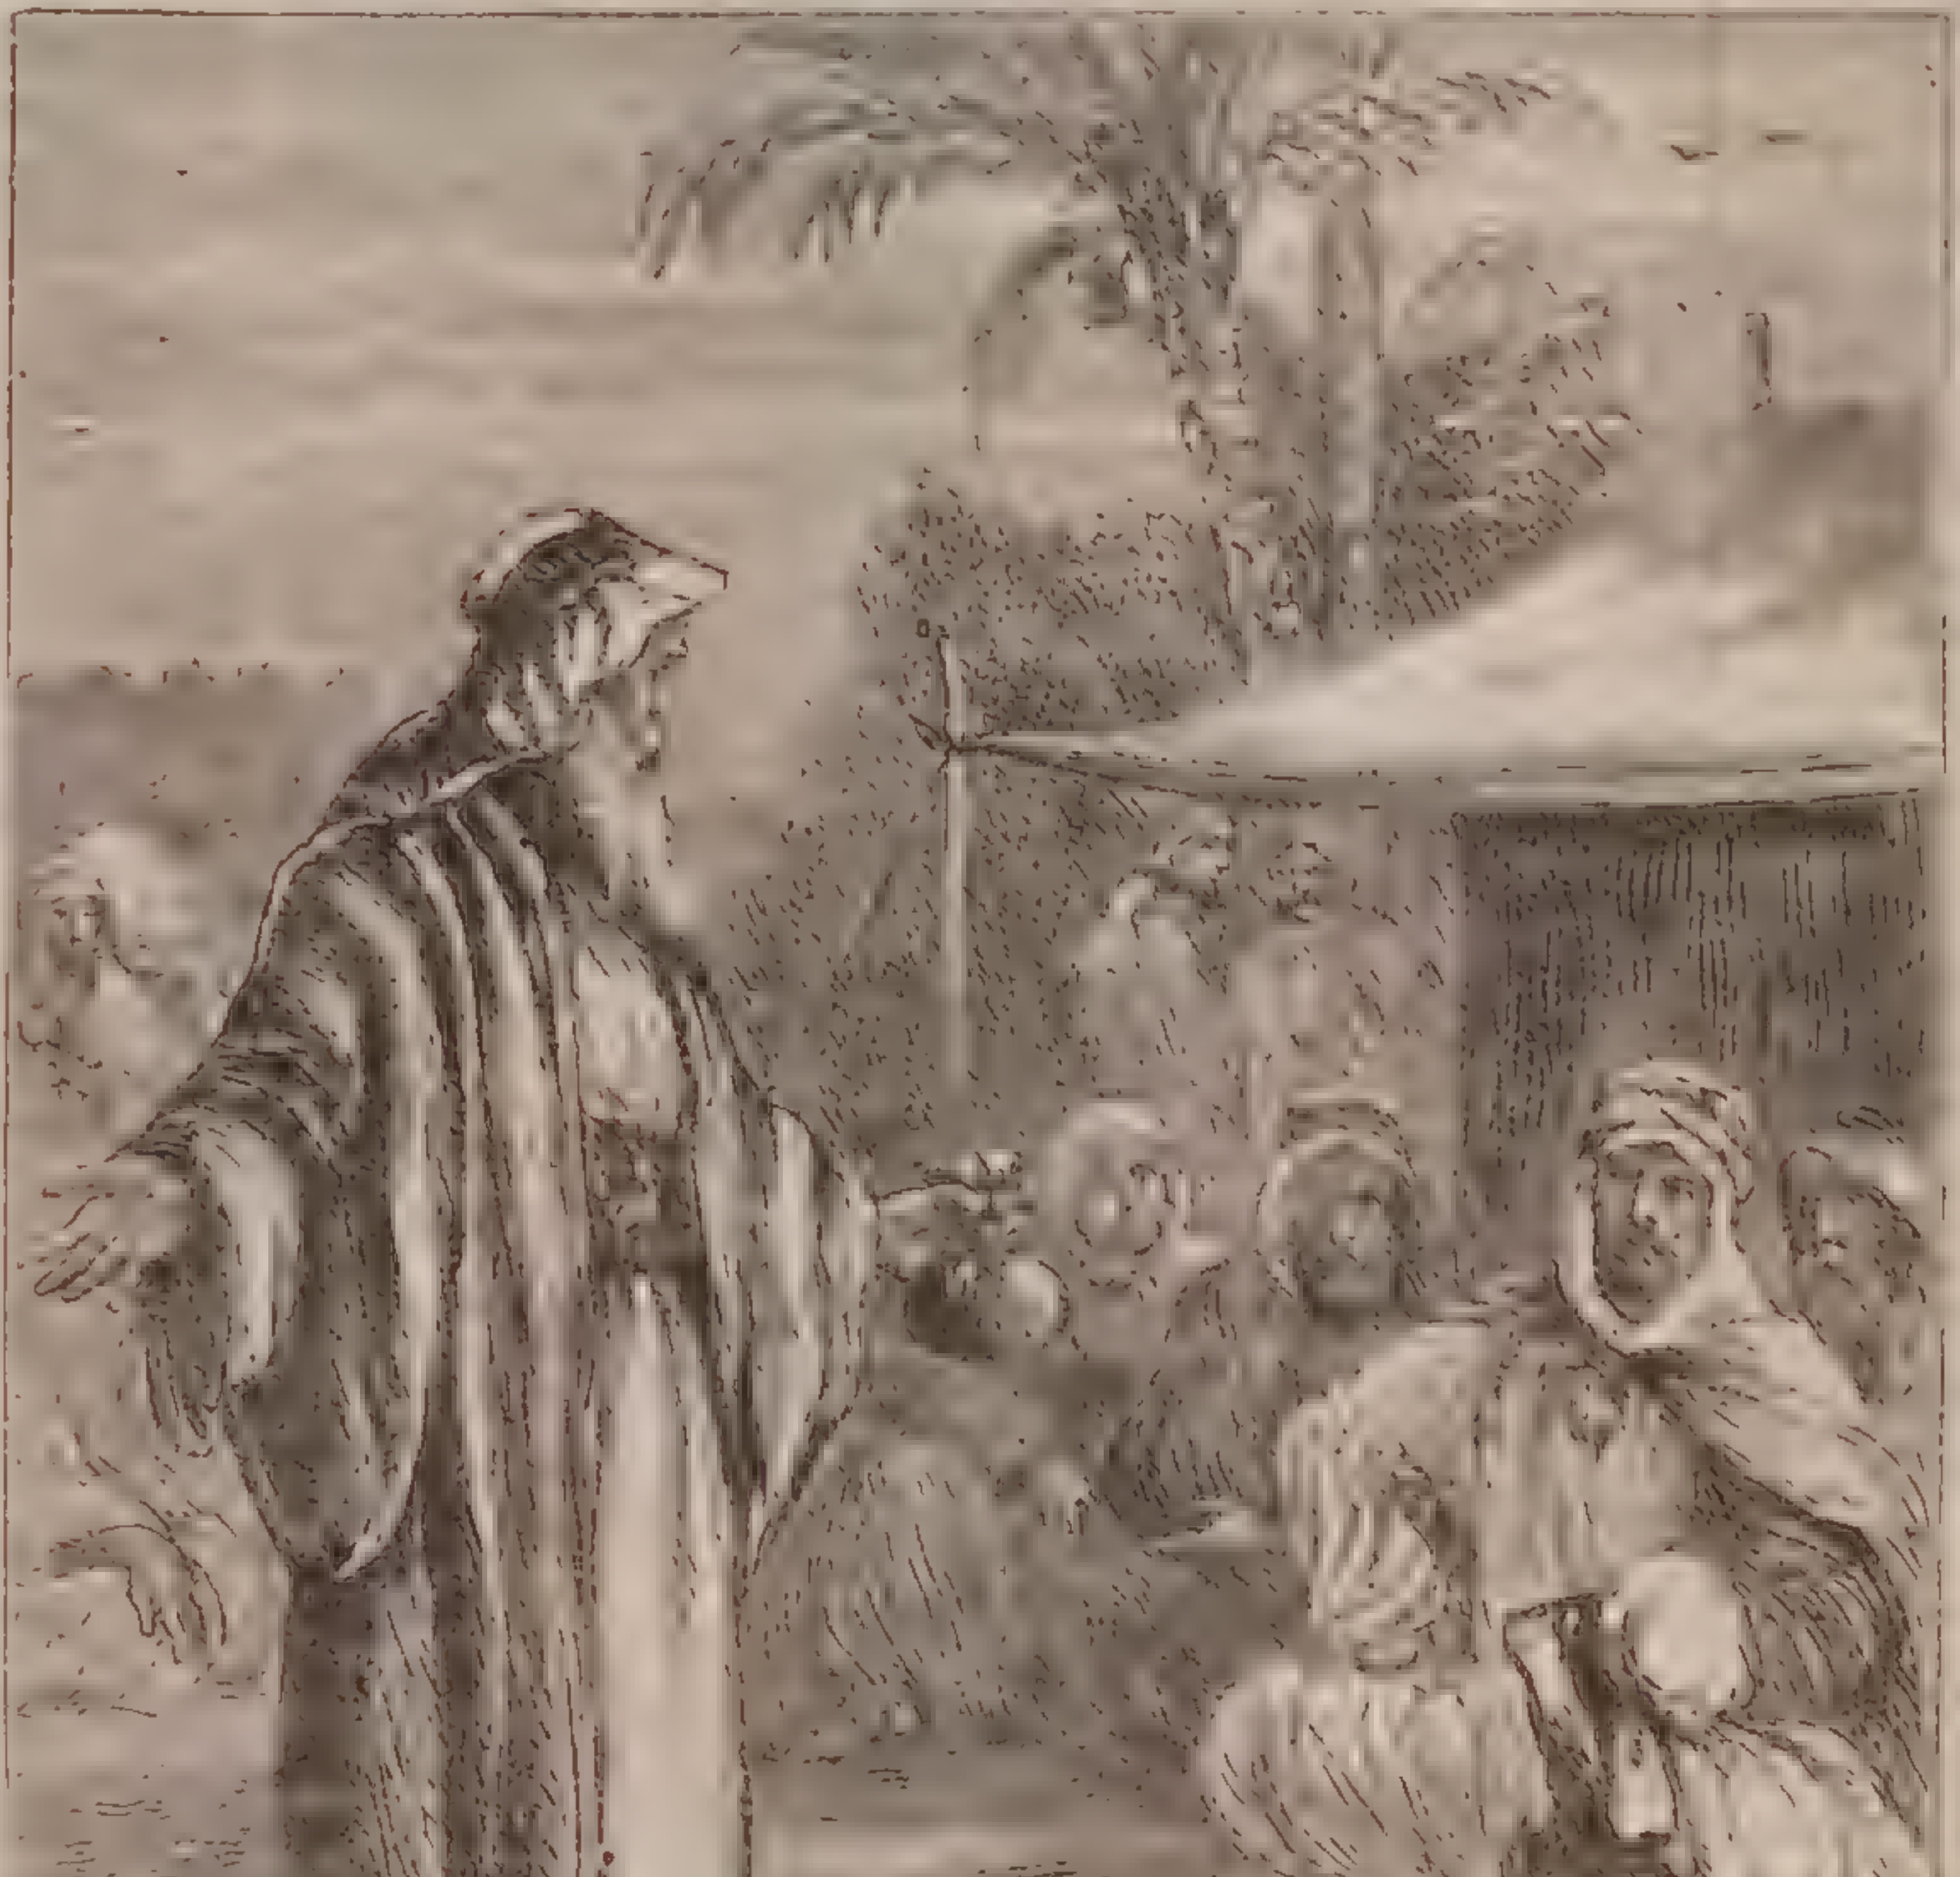
WHEN Abraham came down the slopes of Mount Moriah, hand in hand with Isaac, fifty years of his long life still lay before him. Of those fifty years, twenty-five passed away before the event recorded in this chapter. What happened in those serene and untroubled years which lie between these two chapters, as a valley between two ridges of hills, we do not know. In all likelihood one year was as much as possible like another. Few events broke their monotony. The river of Abraham's life had passed the rapids and narrows of its earlier course, and now broadened into reaches of still water, over which its current glided with an almost imperceptible movement.

The changes that mark the progress of our year are unknown beneath those glorious skies which rain perpetual summer on the earth; and the equableness of the climate is symbolical of the equableness of the simple patriarchal life. The tending of vast flocks and herds; the perpetual recurrence of birth, marriage, and death among the vast household of slaves; the occasional interchange of hospitality with neighbouring clans; special days for sacrifice and worship;—these would be the most exciting episodes of that serene and calm existence, which is separated as far as possible from our feverish, broken lives. And yet, is there so very much that we can vaunt ourselves in, when we compare our days with those? True, there was not the railway, the telegraph wire, the journal, the constant interchange of news; but perhaps life may more fully attain its ideal, and fulfil its purpose, when its moments and hours are not dissipated by the constant intrusion of petty details, like those which for most of us make up the fabric of existence.

Perhaps we can never realise how much the members of such a household as Abraham's would be to one another. Through long, unbroken periods they lived together, finding all their society in one another. The run of pastoral life left ample leisure for close personal intercourse, and it was inevitable that human lives spent under such circumstances should grow together as sometimes trees in the woods get so entangled and entwined that no human ingenuity can disentangle one from the rest. Thus it must have happened that the loss through death of one loved and familiar face would leave a blank never to be filled, and scarcely ever to be forgotten. We need not wonder, therefore, that so much stress is laid upon the death of Sarah, the chief event of those fifty years of Abraham's life; nor need we regret that such ample details are given of her death and burial, since they enable us to get a glimpse of the patriarch, and see if he has altered at all during the quarter of a century which has passed over him.

I. WE ARE FIRST ARRESTED BY HIS TEARS.—"And Sarah died in Kirjath-Arba; the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan." Abraham seems to have been away from home, perhaps at Beersheba, when she breathed her last, but he came at once "to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her." This is the first time we read of Abraham weeping. We do not read that he wept when he crossed the Euphrates, and left for ever home and kindred. There is no record of his tears when tidings came to him that his nephew Lot was carried into captivity. He does not seem to have bedewed his pathway to Mount Moriah with the tears of his heart. But now that Sarah is lying dead before him, the fountains of his grief are broken up.

What made the difference?—Ah! there is all the difference between doing God's will and suffering it. So long as we have something to do for God, whether it be a toilsome march, or a battle, or sacrifice, we can staunch back our tears, and bear up with fortitude. The multiplicity of our engagements turns away our attention from our griefs; but when all is over, when there is nothing more to do, when we are left with the silent dead, requiring nothing more at our hands, when the last office is performed, the last flower arranged, the last touch given, then the tears come.



ABRAHAM BUYING THE CAVE OF MACHPELAH.

It is not wonderful that Abraham wept.—Sarah had been the partner of his life for seventy or eighty years. She was the only link to the home of his childhood. She alone could sympathise with him when he talked of Terah and Nahor, and of Haran and Ur of the Chaldees. She alone was left of all who thirty years before had shared the hardships of his pilgrimage. As he knelt by her side, what a tide of memories must have rushed over him of their common plans, and hopes, and fears, and joys. He remembered her as a bright young wife, as the fellow-pilgrim, as the childless persecutor of Hagar, as the prisoner o Pharaoh and Abimelech, as the loving mother of Isaac, and every memory would bring a fresh rush of tears.

There are some who chide tears as unmanly, unsubmissive, unchristian. They would comfort us as chill and pious stoics, bidding us meet the most agitating passages of our history with rigid and tearless countenance. With such the spirit of the Gospel, and of the Bible, has little sympathy. We can have no sympathy with a morbid sentimentality, but we may well question whether the man who cannot weep can really love; for sorrow is love, widowed and bereaved; and where that is present, its most natural expression is in tears. Religion does not come to make us unnatural and inhuman, but to purify and ennoble all those natural emotions with which our manifold nature is endowed. Jesus wept. Peter wept. The Ephesian converts wept on the neck of the Apostle whose face they were to see never again. Christ stands by each mourner, saying, "Weep my child; weep, for I have wept."

Tears relieve the burning brain, as a shower the electric clouds. Tears discharge the insupportable agony of the heart, as an overflow lessens the pressure of the flood against the dam. Tears are the material out of which heaven weaves its brightest rainbows. Tears are transmuted into the jewels of better life, as the wounds in the oyster turn to pearls. Happy, however, is that man who, when he weeps for his departed, has not to reproach himself with unkindnesses and bitter words. We cannot always understand what makes people weep, when we stand with them on the loose earth beside the open grave. In many cases their sorrow is due to pure affection; in some cases, however, there is an additional saltness in their tears, because of unspoken regret. "I wish I had not acted so; that I could recall those words; that I had had another opportunity of expressing the love I really felt, but hid; that I had taken more pains to curb myself, to be gentle, loving, endearing, and endeared. Oh! for one hour of explanation and confession and forgiveness." Let us see to it that we may never have to drink such bitter ingredients in the cup of our bereavement, and that we may not, let us not fail to give expression to those nobler feelings which often strive within our breasts, but which we too often repress.

And if some should read these words whose tears are more bitter because unsubmissive, let such remember that where they cannot feel resigned, they must will to be resigned, putting their will on God's side in this matter, asking Him to take it and fashion it according to his own, and remembering that our only province is with the will. This is all God asks, and if this is right with Him, He will subdue every other thought, and bring the whole being into a state of glad acquiescence. "I delight to do thy will, O my God;" "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him!"

II. NOTICE ABRAHAM'S CONFESSION.—"Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you; give me a possession of a burying-place with you." See how sorrow reveals the heart. When all is going well we wrap up our secrets, but when sorrow rends the veil, the arcana of the inner temple are laid bare! To look at Abraham as the great and wealthy patriarch, the emir, the chieftain of a mighty clan, we cannot guess his secret thoughts. He has been in the land for sixty-two years, and surely by this time he must have lost his first feelings of loneliness. He is probably as settled and naturalised as any of the princes round. So you might think, until he is widowed of his beloved Sarah! Then, amidst his grief, you hear the real man speaking his most secret thought: "I am a stranger and a sojourner with you."

These are very remarkable words, and they were never forgotten by his children. Speaking of the land of promise, God said, through Moses, to the people, "The land shall not be sold for ever, for ye are strangers and sojourners with Me." When David and his people made splendid preparations to build the Temple, as their spokesman he said, "Who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly? for all things come of Thee, for we are strangers before Thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers. Our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding." And, further, in one of his matchless Psalms, he pleads, "Hear my prayer, O Lord! Hold not thy peace at my tears; for I am a stranger with Thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." So much so, that the Apostle inscribes these words over the cemetery where the great and the good of the Jewish nation lie entombed: "These all died in the faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

We may ask what it was that maintained this spirit in Abraham for so many years. There is but one answer: "They that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country." That country is never looked upon by the sun, or watered by the rivers of the earth, or refreshed by the generous dews. It is the better country, even the heavenly; the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God; the land that needs neither sun nor moon, because the Lord God and the Lamb are the light thereof. Uprooted from the land of his birth, the Patriarch could never take root again in any earthly country, and his spirit was always on the alert, eagerly reaching out its hands towards the city of God, the home where only such royal souls as his can meet their peers, and find their rest. He refused to be contented with anything short of this, and, therefore, God was not ashamed to be called his God, because He had prepared for him a city. How this elevation of soul shames some of us! In our better moments we say that we are "the burgesses of the skies," but our conversation is not in heaven, in our practical ordinary daily life. We profess to look for a city, but we take good care to make for ourselves an assured position among the citizens of this world. We affect to count all things dross, but the eagerness with which, muck-rake in hand, we strive to heap together the treasures of earth is a startling commentary upon our words.

III. Notice Abraham's Faith.—Men are wont to bury their dead beside their ancestors. The graves of past generations are the heritage of their posterity. By them rather than by the habitations of the living do tribes and races of men find their resting-place. The American loves to visit the quiet English churchyard where his fathers lie. The Jew elects in old age to journey to Palestine, that dying he may be buried in soil consecrated by the remains of his race; and it may be that Abraham first thought of that far distant grave in Charran, where Terah and Haran lay buried. Should he take Sarah thither? "No," thought he, "that country has no claim upon me now. The only land, indeed, on which I have a claim is this wherein I have been a stranger. Here in after days shall my children live. Here the generations that bear my name shall spread themselves out as the sands on the seashore, and the stars in the midnight sky. It is meet, therefore, that I should place our grave, in which Sarah their mother, and I their father, shall lie, in the heart of the land, to be a nucleus around which they shall gather in all coming time. What though, as God has told me, 400 years must pass of suffering, and furnace fire, yet they shall ultimately come hither again, and I will hold the land in pledge against their coming, sure that it shall be as God has said!"

It is very beautiful to remark the action of Abraham's faith in this matter; and to see its outcome in his utter refusal to receive the land as a gift from any hand but that of God. When the chieftains to whom he made his appeal heard it, they instantly offered him the choice of their sepulchres, affirming that none of them would withhold his sepulchre from so mighty a prince. And afterwards, when he sought their intercession with Ephron the son of Zohar, for the obtaining of the cave of Macphelah, which was at the end of his field, and Ephron proposed to give it him in the presence of the sons of his people, Abraham steadfastly refused. It was all his as the gift of God; it would be all his some day in fact; and in the meanwhile he would purchase the temporary use of that which he could never accept as a gift from any but God.

And so after many courteous speeches, in the dignified manner which still prevails amongst Orientals, "the field with its cave and its trees were made sure unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of the city." Their witness had the same binding effect in those rude days as legal documents have in our own.

There Abraham buried Sarah; there Isaac and Ishmael buried Abraham; there they buried Isaac, and Rebecca his wife; there Jacob buried Leah; and there Joseph buried Jacob his father; and there in all likelihood, guarded by the jealous Moslem, untouched by the changes and storms that have swept around their quiet resting-place, those remains are sleeping still, holding that land in fee, and anticipating the time when on a larger and more prominent scale the promise of God to Abraham shall be accomplished. Not yet has the Divine promise been fully realised. The children of Abraham have possessed the Land of Promise for but a little while. For long ages their adversaries have held sway there. But the days are hastening on when once more God will set his hand to gather his chosen people from all lands; and the infidel shall no longer desecrate those sacred spots; but once again shall the hills, and valleys, and pasture lands of Palestine come into the possession of the seed of Abraham, the Friend of God.

THE FOREIGN MISSION FIELD.

BULGARIA'S NEED.

In the capital of Bulgaria, Sofia, an evangelical house of worship was dedicated quite recenty. Being the first event of the kind, it created quite a stir. Prince Ferdinand and several officers of state were present, and expressed much satisfaction. In the crisis through which Bulgaria is passing, there is great need of public men of high character. Many have forsaken the Greek faith because no longer able to endure its ridiculous mummeries, as they call them. The State Church is also fast losing its hold upon the masses. A teacher in one of the Government colleges told Mrs. Mumford (Philippopolis) the other day that he was certain that the nation generally has a higher regard for young ladies who have received their training in her school, than for those educated in the native colleges, because of the superior moral training of the former.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

Rev. Benjamin F. Ousley, of the American Board's Mission at Kambini, Inhambane, East Coast, Africa, writes: "I write to thank you for kindly sending me your excellent paper, The Christian, which has now been coming to me here for more than a year. We have been stationed here three years, being twenty-five miles north of the Portuguese town of Inhambane, the seaport of the colony by the same name. The past three years have been largely spent in preparing our tools (in a sense) with which we are to work for the Master; collecting a vocabulary, learning the grammatical construction of the language, reducing it to writing, and translating the Word of Life for the perishing ones about us.. It is slow work, but there is none grander, because He that is with us is greater than all the foes of righteousness. It would seem that God is verifying his promise that his word shall not return unto Him void. During the past two and a half months about twenty have professed a hope in Christ. Pray that these babes in Christ may be sustained in all the temptations to which they are subject. I regret to say that the mass of the people as yet are indifferent to the claims of the Gospel. We have a school of more than forty. Many of the pupils have made considerable progress in learning, several being able to read the Word of God translated into their own language."

NEW GUINEA.

The work of evangelising the cannibal savages of this island goes on apace, and the Gospel makes headway amongst the people. Rev. James Chalmers reports that there are now thirty-three stations connected with the Port Moresby branch of the mission. Forty-four South Sea Island teachers are employed; of these twelve are natives of New Guinea. At eight of the stations small groups of converts have been formed into churches. On Murray Island, another branch of the Mission, eighteen teachers are at work. The churches on this small island alone during the past year have sent home the sum of £32 as a contribution to the funds of the London Missionary Society. Both at Port Moresby and on Murray Island, there are training institutions for native teachers. In the college at Port Moresby twelve young men are being prepared for Christian work among their countrymen, and there are several others who are anxious for training. From the theological institution at Rarotonga, six native teachers sail for New Guinea next month in the mission ship John Williams. The training institution at Raiatea, Society Islands, in recent years has sent forth eleven men and their wives to the foreign field—twenty-two in all, of whom twelve have already fallen in New Guinea. There are at present only five English missionaries at work in New Guinea; three others, however, have been appointed, and will leave for the scene of their labours this autumn.

For the Young.

"SOME DAY."

Have you met a winning fellow
Often coming in the way,
Coaxing creature, gay deceiver,
And they call his name "Some Day?"

"Ah!" he says (his voice is silver),
"Do not vex yourself, I pray;
Give yourself an hour of pleasure,
You can do your task 'Some Day.'

"Are your studies lightly broken?
O'er your books you seldom stay;
Never mind, you will be graver—
Will work harder—yes, 'Some Day.'"

Mark the sparkling, cunning fellow,
Many has he led astray;
Never one has come to honour
When enamoured of "Some Day."

If a task is hard this moment,
'Twill grow harder by delay;
'Twill be never more accomplished,
If 'tis left to that "Some Day."

Mark my words, O youth and maiden,
Many who are growing grey,
Bitterly regret they listened
To the whispers of "Some Day."

Up and doing—now, directly,
'Tis the only noble way;
Grasp the present, leave no project
To the merciless "Some Day."

A CHINESE TRIBUTE.

The following is a literal translation of the tribute written in the Chinese language by the scholars of the Sunday-school class taught by the late Charles Latimer, of Cleveland, Ohio.

"There was one man called Charles Latimer.

"This man was kind-hearted, loving, and more he loved other men than he loved himself. We Chinese men were so fortunate as to have him open a school to teach us the truth of God and Jesus, and we in his school have studied more than ten years. Alas! Mr. Latimer this year in the third month died.

"All men who saw, there was not one who did not weep, and the far away ones who heard, there was not one who did not grieve in his heart.

"But this good man having gone, there is not one who does not still hope that we from all places, kind men, good men, learning of Mr. Latimer to be good in heart, and to love men, may gain God's blessing.

"Certainly we have hope.

THE CALL OF THE PRISON.—Rev. William J. Balt, writing in the American Bibliotheca Sacra, thinks that students in theological seminaries should turn their minds towards the opportunities offered for evangelistic work in our penal institutions. "The man of Macedonia to-day," he says, "is standing inside the prison walls."

THE DRINK TRAFFIC IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—The traffic in intoxicating liquors is working much evil amongst the natives of the South Sea Islands. Rev. W. E. Richards, of Raiatea, Society group, writes that the island of Tahaa is being weakened and demoralised by the onward sweep of this gigantic iniquity. One Sunday in July last year no fewer than twenty-nine members of the church were expelled for drunkenness. Mr. Richards says: Drunkenness is our greatest foe; it seems to be invulnerable. When its flood rises suddenly as an eagre, and sweeps onward, it makes sad havoc of all that is before it, carrying down men, women, and sometimes even boys and girls before it. Just when all seems well, and when the people appear to have less craving for strong drink, then it breaks out again suddenly, and, like the plague, reveals itself in the apparently safest places.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XXI.—A SAVING GOD.

"What makes you say that God is a saving God so frequently?" I asked of a man who attracted my attention by his continued use of this phrase. He was a big and determined-looking fellow, full of zeal and enthusiasm.

He told me that when he was younger he had fallen in with a band of infidels and atheists who lived in the city where he was. He rather liked their talk, and all the more because they "scared the respectables" so much. "We were a terror to them," he said, drawing himself up, "and I thought we were a fine lot of fellows indeed. I read their infidel papers," he continued, "and primed myself with their arguments. I found that the generality of people who came to talk to us were not up with the subject at all, and it was a grand thing to floor these good men. We shut them up one after another; they could not answer us. I do think that you teacher-people ought to be better up with the controversy than you are, don't you?"

I replied, "I do not think I would trouble myself to get up controversial subjects. There are two sides to every question. I prefer stating God's truth."

"Ah! yes; but you have to prove to me that it is God's truth, don't you see?"

"No," I answered, "I do not see, or care to do so either. I am quite satisfied that it is God's truth. If its genuineness depended upon my establishing it, it would stand upon a poor basis indeed! I believe God, and therefore I believe what He says."

This man was evidently not yet free from his old entanglements, though there was no mistake but that he was in some measure changed from what he used to be.

I asked him to tell me how he came to know that there is a God, and that He is a saving God. "Has He saved you?"

"Yes," he replied, "He has, and I am on his side now!"

From his account of himself, I gathered that in days past he was a notorious and bold champion among the freethinkers. He could not say that he believed their talk altogether; but he saw the people stare when he boldly declared, There is no God!

Upon one occasion he had a crowd gathered round him at a street corner, where he stood holding forth. Seeing that he had gained the attention of the people, he waxed very bold. He had once read of a man who made himself notorious by asking God to destroy him, so he thought he would startle his audience by doing the same. Accordingly, he called upon the Almighty, and gave Him five minutes to strike him dead; then he gave Him five minutes more. Nothing happened, so he walked away triumphantly, as if he had proved to demonstration that there was no God.

This man went on like this, more or less, for three years, at which time he caught cold, and became very ill with rheumatic fever. The poor fellow suffered a great deal, and was so sensitive, that he could not bear anyone to come near him. It gave him pain even to think of being touched. But there was one kind, sympathetic lady who visited him again and again. She read and talked to him in such a voice and manner, that he could not help listening to her. She spoke so confidently of the love of God, and said, that she had it in her own heart! Indeed, she looked like it.

At length the man was persuaded to let her pray with him, and afterwards, he promised to pray for himself. He thought, that if he could be like that lady, it would be "a deal better than what he had been."

One day while the lady was singing about the love of God, he felt his heart melting, and the tears came to his eyes. He said, "I wish you would teach me to be like you!"

"Like me!" said the lady, "God is no bound to copy me. He can make you a great deal better. Give your heart to Him, and ask Him to do this for you."

He did ask God to take his heart, and to give him his Holy Spirit for Jesus Christ's sake. In a short time from this, he found that many of the words the lady had spoken to him were wonderfully true.

To make a long story short, this man became changed, and from being a notorious blasphemer, and injurious to many, he rose up from his bed to be a wiser and better man.

Now, it was his privilege to go to his old companions, and tell them how happy he was, and why. Some laughed at him, but others believed, and rejoiced with him.

He was not deterred by any discouragement he met with, but felt that his life work was to be amongst these people, to do them good.

One day, soon after his change of heart, and his recovery from his painful illness, he happened to be passing round the same street corner where he had defied God previously, in his conceit.

He said: "I stopped all at once. God seemed to say to me, 'Did you call Me? here I am.' Oh, I felt such a fool! I saw then and there how vain and arrogant I had been. God seemed to say to me, 'I am not a slaying, but a saving, God.' On my knees before the people who stood round me, I confessed what a fool I had been, and how God had forgiven and changed me altogether from what I used to be.

"Three years ago I stood here, and said, 'God Almighty, where art Thou?' and He did not answer me, because I asked Him to kill me; but now, when I called upon Him to have mercy upon me, He saved me. Sure I see that He is not a slaying, but a saving, God—that is his character. He willeth not the death of a sinner; but rather that he should turn to Him, and be saved."

"Oh," he continued, "I did pour out my heart, as the crowd collected round me in that old corner. How I did long to tell them of God's love. They were people who professed to believe there is a God; but they didn't know Him!"

"That's my message now," said the man, "God is love. He is a saving, not a destroying, God."

The Lord had dealt so bountifully with this man, that I could not doubt but that He would go on to melt him more and more; he had so much brag and boast remaining, that greatly needed to be cleansed. Notwithstanding this, wonderful was the change in his life; and very effective the testimony he bore to others.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The well-known institutions at Farningham and Swanley are shown, by the twenty-fourth annual report, to be in a gratifying condition. The death of Rev. A. O. Charles, the late secretary, is feelingly referred to in the report; and the appointment of Mr. Benjamin Clarke, as his successor, is mentioned with satisfaction.

The Committee regret to state that two of the Farningham Homes still remain unoccupied for want of funds. The inmates numbered about three hundred throughout the year, and they enjoyed good health, and made excellent progress in education and industrial training.

The Orphanage at Swanley is still filled with boys, whose friends contribute towards their support. The Admiralty continue to send lads for whose education and welfare they have made themselves responsible.

Open for inspection on any day excepting Sunday, the institutions have many friends and hearty supporters. Though the financial statement is of an encouraging character, the Committee state that the list of subscribers is not yet such as to relieve them of pressing anxieties. The Secretary's address is Bank Chambers, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Mr. Moody's Summer School.

TUESDAY.

At eight o'clock on Tuesday morning in the last week of the Summer School, a specimen Bible Training Class was conducted by Mr. J. L. Gordon, of Connecticut. It opened with a short discussion regarding ways of dealing with inquirers. An outline study of the Book of Genesis was then made, and the last few minutes were devoted to the consideration of a typical individual case.

TWO FAREWELL ADDRESSES.

The general meeting was held at 9.30, as three addresses were expected. Dr. Broadus and Bishop Hendricks bade us farewell, and Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackenzie, of Cambridge, Mass., one of the Harvard University preachers, gave his first address. Bishop Hendricks was the first speaker, and left with us as his farewell thought the idea of Christian manliness. Our religion, he said, must make men to whom place adds nothing. No amount of piety can take the place of manliness. It is your manliness that must float your piety, not your piety that must float your manliness. The manliness of Scripture is not the manliness of the prize-ring. It is ability to stand firm, strength of character. In this the first great achievement is to conquer oneself. The next thing is to organise and use all the trained forces of one's nature for the benefit of the world. The convent and hermit cell were a mistake. We cannot imagine an angel that is inactive. Why should it be different with regard to man? There must also be in manliness an element of courage, and perfect courage is perfect truthfulness. Cowardice and untruth go together. Further, the true man is always a considerate man, a man who has a right estimate of humanity, founded upon a true knowledge of man. It takes a man to know a man. Everything that has been done for the world has been done by love, born of recognition of what is good in man. Cynicism never did anything for the world. With illustrations of this manly gentleness in the character of Noah and Moses, the address came to a conclusion.

Dr. Broadus did not take any special subject for his address, but contented himself with giving us some parting practical advice. He began by pointing out the necessity for Christian men at college to stand well in their classes. We should be ambitious—ambitious to do our work well for the love of God and man. Ambition is dangerous; but so is everything powerful, and we must not let our emulation degenerate into envy. The habits of our early lives will measure our careers. We should be careful regarding them, for we don't know when we are forming habits. We recognise them only when they are formed. As to the difference between men in the matter of religious experience, the speaker pointed out that some people cannot learn from experience, some people can only learn from experience, and some people can learn from other people's experience. No two people have the same religious nature any more than they have the same face. No two people can be pious just alike. We should remember also our high privilege in being permitted to bring others to Christ. God only uses men to convert other men. Even angels cannot do it. The binding nature of God's call upon college students, Dr. Broadus emphasised in his closing sentences.

DR. MACKENZIE ON BIBLE STUDY.

The whole audience then sang heartily the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," and, after prayer by Mr. Moody, came Dr. Mackenzie's address, on Bible study. He began by pointing out how nowadays we specialise the study of the Bible, as we specialise everything else. Thus some study the language of the Bible; others submit it to the light of history; while others, again, try to fill it with meaning by antiquarian investigation. We, as Christians, ought to read it (1) for our personal help and edifying, and (2) for the imparting of its truth to others. In the doing of this there is no reason for dividing the Old Testament from the New, and if we would do it rightly, we must read the books of the Bible through, and not regard them piecemeal, as collections of chapters and verses. Further, in studying the Bible, we must read into it our otherwise acquired knowledge, whether it be knowledge of other parts of the Bible than that we are reading, or knowledge gained from other books. We cannot avoid doing this to a certain extent, and it is better to do it knowingly and fully.

We find that the truths of the Old and the New Testaments are identical. The leading principles of the Old Testament would form a table of contents for the New. In illustration of this, Dr. Mackenzie considered the relation of the early chapters of Genesis to the New Testament. The first three thoughts in Genesis are the same as the first three thoughts in the Gospel of St. John. In each case we have three mysteries—the mystery of time, the mystery of being, or God, and the mystery of creation. Genesis expands the idea of the creation; John expands that of the Creator. In this connection we should note, specially, how continually it is insisted, both in the Old Testament and in the New, that Christ was the Creator of the world. He says, "I am the beginning." All life is Christ's life. "I am the life of all that lives." Every flower that blooms is in harmony with every thought that redeems; and every star that shines has some vital connection with every truth that burns. All has the life of Jehovah—of Christ. This is not by any means pantheism, for it does not teach that the world is God, as pantheism does. In illustration of this, the speaker gave some wonderful astronomical facts as to the immensity of the universe, and, in an exquisite word-picture, showed that the feeble life of a humming-bird was the life of Jehovah. He concluded with a strong defence of the divinity of Christ, pointing out that in no part of his life could we find recorded of Him merely what was human. Angels sang when He was born as a weak child; He slept in the ship, and yet stilled the waves; He was weary and athirst by the well in Samaria, but He spoke words of wonder to the poor woman whom He met there; He died on the cross, yet in dying He took the soul of a penitent upon his breast, opening for him the gate of paradise; in the form of a man He went up the slopes of Olivet, and ascended from earth to heaven.

OPEN-AIR MISSIONARY MEETING.

At the missionary open-air meeting in the evening, addresses were given by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, of Brazil, and Rev. Ira C. Ross, of Brooklyn. Mr. Chamberlain spoke of his work in South America, pointing out the need for work there, on account of the dominant influence of Romanism, which denied the Bible to the people, and kept them in spiritual darkness. He himself had been so struck by what he had seen, that, having originally gone to the country for the sake of his health, he had been constrained to turn missionary, and he appealed strongly to the students to assist in the work. At the close of the meeting the volunteers for foreign service each received a decoration of pale blue ribbon as a memento of Northfield. Since the Conference began their number has increased from under twenty to about one hundred.

At the later meeting, after Mr. Sankey had sung "The Model Church," Mr. Moody devoted his usual hour to an address on the power of

THE HOLY SPIRIT FOR SERVICE.

We do not want numbers, we want workers with power: not men who, having no power, stand in the way of God's work while they wish to do it. The first thing the Spirit does is to convict a man of sin: not of gross sin merely, but of unbelief. Very often people won't go where the Spirit of God is, because they are afraid of this. I wish I had the power to make people think I'm speaking to them. But one man passes it over his shoulder to his friend Brown, and Brown says it is good for Smith, and Smith thinks it just hits off White, and in most cases they pass it right out of the window, and sermon, text, and everything are gone for ever. In the second place, the Holy Spirit sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts. This love includes all other virtues; for joy is love exulting, peace is love in repose, long-suffering is love untiring, gentleness is love in society, goodness is love in action, faith is love on the battle-field, meekness is love at school, and temperance is love in training. The Spirit of God, further, gives us hope and liberty. And let us remember that want of liberty is not always due to want of the Spirit in the preacher. It is often caused by unspiritual criticism on the part of his audience. If this building were full of men who had come to criticise, I doubt whether an angel from heaven would have liberty. The Spirit also testifies of Christ and glorifies Him, and He teaches us all things, impressing upon us even what seems simplest. There have been three dwelling-places of the Spirit:—The tabernacle in the wilderness, the Temple, and the body of the believer. So there are three ways in which the Spirit may be in us, and only the last of these is worthy and with power:—"He shall dwell in you"; "He shall abide in you"; "He shall be in you." You may be a son of God, but without power; and nothing can be more humiliating. Thus there may be said to be three types of Christians, of whom the representatives are Nicodemus, the woman of Samaria, and the man whom Christ pictured, "out of whose belly should flow rivers of living water." The last of these should be our ideal. The trouble with us Americans is, that we can't wait. If we did less work and did it better, ten times more good would be done. We must pray for a "double portion" of the Spirit, following Elisha's example of persistency, which the speaker graphically recounted.

WEDNESDAY.

AN AMERICAN METHOD.

On Wednesday morning at eight o'clock the discussion had regard to methods of reaching new students, and the most interesting experience given was that of the University of Wisconsin. At this University a reception is given at the beginning of the session, to which all the professors and students are invited. Everyone of the 500 or more who attend is required to wear a badge, framed within which is a card with his name clearly written, in order that names may not be missed at introduction, or forgotten after it. These receptions, it was said, are a great success; but some of the British students were greatly inclined to wonder what would be the effect of a similar proceeding at home.

At the regular morning meeting

MR. MOODY ANSWERED QUESTIONS.

He told us that he regarded as the twelve fundamental doctrines of the Bible, to which he had referred on Monday night: Sin, judgment, repentance, atonement, conversion, justification, sanctification, the resurrection, the office and work of the Holy Spirit, the kingdom of Christ, the coming of Christ, and prayer. Dealing with some questions on the subject of prayer, Mr. Moody pointed out that we must not think our prayers unanswered because we do not get just the answer we want. We must always say, "Thy will be done," and we should then always see the answer to our prayers in something that was best for us. Again, as to confession of sin, he said, there are three kinds of transgression, and three kinds of confession. (1) Public transgression requires public confession. (2) Transgression against another man must be confessed to him. (3) Transgression against God must be confessed to God.

The speaker of the morning was Dr. Mackenzie, who continued his

of the relation between the Old Testament and the New, filling his audience with admiration for his eloquence, and yet so setting their minds to work as to lay up for himself trouble for another day. With the creation of man, he said, we enter into a new order of things. Before this there had been the fiat, "Let there be"; now we have the resolution, "Let us make." And, further, although the body of man was formed, there was not yet a man. "The Lord breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." So Jesus breathed upon his disciples when He gave them the Spirit, and so now He breathes into each one of us the breath of his own life. We need the Spirit for the first life as well as for the second life. We are "partakers of the Divine nature." We are not worms or grasshoppers. We are the children of God, because we are born of God, not because we are adopted. The life that is in us is the life of God, and we are just as truly spirit as God is. The Gospel is a Divine dispensation of encouragement. We have not parted with the Divine nature, we have perverted it. Man is sent into the Garden of Eden under law. He is to care for it and sympathise with it, as coming from God. God has not given the earth over altogether to man. He retains his rights of ownership. The source of the law of God is not his exceeding power, nor his rights as the Creator. Law rests upon what God is, and what He does. God has a right to rule over us, and ought to be obeyed, because He is the best, the absolutely good, and not merely because He has created us.

Now the Spirit of God in a man ought to do what the Spirit does in God. No man can inherit glory who does not enjoy what God enjoys, and no man who is not like God can enjoy what God enjoys. But the incitement to sin begins without. Before a man has any lusts, he is not drawn away by his lusts. This is seen in the case of Eve, who from innocence was led astray by the devil. Sin and suffering go together. The first thing that followed sin into Paradise was suffering: not pain. So the breaking and wounding of the fig tree was typical of the suffering which followed sin. So "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together." And, again, "the Son of Man came to seek." So, after the Fall, God's first utterance was: "Adam, where art thou?" Compare this with the command of Christ: "Zacchæus, come down." Adam was hiding behind the tree: Zacchæus was in the tree. That was all the difference. Christ sought out the first man that ever did wrong. There is nothing of threatening or punishment in what God says to Adam and Eve. What comes, comes as the natural consequence of what they have done. Having traced the general course of Bible history, in order to show how Christ appeared throughout it, Dr. Mackenzie concluded by speaking of the Atonement.

A heavy shower of rain compelled the missionary men to leave their knoll, usually so bright with the sunset glow, and accordingly they gathered for their

MEETING IN STONE HALL.

News had got abroad that one of the speakers was to be Dr. N. G. Clark, Secretary of the American Foreign Missions Board, so that, by a few minutes after 7, the hall was well filled, at least 300 being present. Several of the English representatives, including Messrs. Studd and Kempson, and Dr. Howard Taylor, spoke of the manner in which they had been led to volunteer for foreign service. Thereafter, Dr. Clark made a stirring appeal for more volunteers, and more material support for the Foreign Mission campaign. He spoke specially of Japan, where there are now so many openings for both direct and indirect mission work; but his remarks covered the whole field, and included many interesting and suggestive facts and counsels.

As we had had so many powerful addresses during the previous days, Mr. Moody gave up Wednesday evening to a lecture on Egyptian antiquities, with limelight illustrations, by Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, who brought before us the remains of ancient Egyptian pomp, showing how little all their colossal monuments had succeeded in preserving the memory of their builders, while the words and acts of those whom they oppressed and despised were to-day studied throughout the world. All recent discoveries, he showed, tended to confirm, even to the least details, the narrative of the Bible.

THURSDAY.

This morning Mr. S. M. Sayford, of Boston, addressed the students on the subject of faith. He took as his text the definition of faith in Heb. xi. 1. Faith, he said, is made up of three things—knowledge, assent, and affiance. Knowledge is in the Bible, assent is in the mind, and affiance is in the heart. Faith consists of three acts—assent, acceptance, and assurance. The justifying act of faith is acceptance—not mere assent, on the one hand, nor necessary assurance on the other. Affiance is the union of hearts. The outgrowth of faith is faithfulness, which is the condition of Christian success.

Mr. Moody had promised that Dr. Mackenzie would have an opportunity of explaining himself, and making clearer what he had said on the previous day, and accordingly he was subjected to a keen cross-examination, which lasted for about an hour and a half. The arrangement was a bad one for the speaker, as the questions were handed up one after another in a steady stream, and there was thus every facility for wandering from the point. But Dr. Mackenzie, with the utmost good-nature, strove to give satisfying answers to all the questions sent in to him, although the subjects extended over the whole of theology. The chief answers were somewhat more complete statements of the ideas which Dr. Mackenzie had previously expressed, and the speaker concluded with an application of the Wordsworthian distinction between "liking" and "loving," which very aptly summed up one of his main positions. There is a difference between loving and liking. Christ always loves us, but does not like us till we have received his redeeming love, and are regenerate by his Holy Spirit. You are never truly God's child till you turn to Him lovingly, confidingly, to take up the life that He gives you, and live the life of God.

At the missionary meeting the need of Africa formed the subject of an earnest address by Mr. Ireland, of Oberlin. But Africa was not to have it all its own way, for when inquiry was made as to the number of men intending to go there, Mr. Sho Nanoto, a Japanese student, rose and spoke earnestly on behalf of his native land. The remainder of the evening was occupied with short speeches from some of the volunteers, who told simply and earnestly why and how they had decided to go abroad.

In the evening Mr. Moody spoke of SIX QUALIFICATIONS OF A CHRISTIAN WORKER.

We briefly recapitulate. The first qualification is faith—not merely faith in God, but faith that God will use us. Faith has been called a cheque that God always cashes at sight. The next thing is courage, such courage as that of Jeremiah or of John the Baptist. Christ's servant must speak out his convictions, let the world say what it will. They say. What say they? Let them say. Further, we want enthusiasm. Better zeal without knowledge than knowledge without zeal. Another necessary qualification is perseverance, such as that of the four men of Capernaum who bore to the feet of Jesus the man who was sick of the palsy. It was by the faith of these men that he whom they bore was cured. Then, again, we must have love for the work. You cannot do much with a man until you have won his affections. The love of God must be our motive power. Lastly, there must be compassion and sympathy, personal interest. We must not stand afar off, and help a man coldly and mechanically through some agency or other. Too many people try to raise the dead with a ten-foot pole. Let us preach with our hands and feet.

FRIDAY.

On Friday morning Mr. Hudson Taylor expounded the first portion of

THE SONG OF SONGS.

It would be impossible for us, he said, to pick out the most helpful book in the Bible, but the Song of Solomon was, in his opinion, its most holy book. We cannot get a glimpse of its teaching without being immensely blessed. It teaches the duty of heart-culture, as well as head-culture, and the necessity of a close and constant communion with Christ. Work without communion is merely ciphers in a row, but communion puts on the integer, and gives value to the whole. It teaches also complete self-surrender and self-restraint. Mr. Taylor expounded the passage in the orthodox way, giving, however, original interpretations of several of the verses. Mr. Hastings, of Boston, followed with a long address on the state of the world without God, without the Bible. He accumulated statistics in an amazing manner, and presented a powerful plea for missionary work and a vindication of the power of the Bible.

AT THE MISSIONARY MEETING

stirring and practical addresses were given. One of the speakers, Mr. Beall, of Kingston, Ontario, left for Japan within a week of the close of the Conference. General S. C. Armstrong, of Hampton Institute, Virginia, was the first speaker at the evening meeting on Friday. He had been brought up among missionaries in the Sandwich Islands, and he had thus been strongly impressed with the need for mission work, with the labour of it, and at the same time with its many encouragements. The work must affect the natives, not on one side merely, but on all. It must affect them physically, intellectually, and spiritually. There must be shown hard work, common sense, and, above all, devotion. Ours, he said, is the least religious of the races. You devote most of your time to your business: the heathen devotes most of his time to his religion. Heathenism is not to be despised. It is like the weeds that grow in rich soil, showing the possibilities of development.

Several short addresses were then given by some of the members of the British delegation. Mr. C. M. Douglas, of Edinburgh, spoke of practical work among the poor, instancing the work done in connection with the University settlement in Edinburgh. Mr. H. Kempson, of Oxford, described the work of the Seaside Mission to Children. Mr. J. C. B. Geddes, of Edinburgh, spoke of the personal influence of young men, and especially students, upon their fellows. Mr. Wingfield Digby, of Oxford, emphasised what had been said at the meetings regarding the Holy Spirit; and Mr. N. H. Smith, of Oxford, urged American students to visit England rather than Germany, because of its better religious influence. Mr. G. B. Studd, formerly of Cambridge, closed with some remarks as to possible dangers in student life.

SATURDAY.

At the early meeting on Saturday morning the missionary department of the College Association work was discussed, and many valuable suggestions were given. A committee of English and American students was formed to issue a circular to the churches, calling attention to the movement and asking their sympathy and support. At 10 o'clock Mr. Moody spoke on the subject of "Overcoming." When I was converted, he said, I thought that the battle was won; but I soon found that there was a battle on hand. No man can fight this battle in his own strength. Everything human in this world fails. Every man has been a failure at some period in his life. It was so with Abraham, Moses, Elijah, and Peter, who fell at the strongest points in their characters. The most faulty Christians are those who want to walk by sight. Joseph was greater than Jacob, Abraham than Lot, because they walked by faith. We must walk by faith, live by faith, stand by faith, and fight by faith. We must not under-estimate the strength of the enemy. Satan is quite ready to try flattery when persecution fails. I don't believe we have enough of persecution nowadays. If the world has not much to say against us, Christ will have very little to say for us. For either we must overcome the world, or the world must overcome us. Mr. Moody concluded by remarking briefly on the eight "overcomes" of Revelation.

The next speaker was Dr. Mackenzie, who spoke in the line of his previous addresses. The theme of his remarks was that our life is the life of Christ, and that we should repeat that life. The life of all things is the life of Him whom we love best, and so our life should be conformed in all things to his. We should work, not so much because the world needs it, as for the sake of Christ. He will always tell us his will, if we sincerely desire to do it.

There were meetings at three, four, seven, and eight o'clock, and these were addressed by Mr. R. P. Wilder, Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Moody, and others. At the eight o'clock meeting Mr. Moody spoke on the subject of "Grace," mentioning three different degrees of grace: (1) grace for saving, (2) grace for living, and (3) grace for service. Speaking of the second of these, he said: We must get fresh manna every day. A man doesn't want Lake Erie. He would not know what to do with it if he got it. All he wants is to keep up a communication. So it is with the grace of God. The meeting concluded with a large number of brief prayers from students in the audience, followed by an equally large number of requests for special prayer.

CONCLUDING DAY.

On Sunday morning at six about 200 students gathered in Stone Hall along with Mr. Moody, and spent an hour in earnest prayer for the gift of the Holy Spirit. At half-past eight General Armstrong spoke on mission work in Polynesia; and at eleven o'clock the crowded audience which had assembled for the morning service was addressed by Mr. Moody on the doctrine of the Atonement. He passed from book to book, and from chapter to chapter, of the Bible, showing that the doctrine of substitution, of atonement through the blood of Christ, was taught throughout.

In the afternoon Mr. Chamberlain, of Brazil, spoke of work in that country, and Mr. Hudson Taylor gave an address on the inspiration of the Bible; his position being that not only every word was inspired, but all the moods, tenses, numbers, persons, and cases. The mind of God could not be conveyed except by words. It could not certainly be conveyed in the form of unclothed ideas. In closing, at Mr. Moody's request, he referred briefly to his work in China.

The final meeting was held at 7.30 in the evening. On the previous Sunday we had five sermons in one day; but on this closing evening we had as many as twenty sermons in two hours. Men from the leading colleges in England and America, as well as from Holland, gave addresses of five minutes' length, which ended generally in the most abrupt way on a sudden call of "Time!" by Mr. Moody. A resolution of sympathy with the parents of Mr. Griggs, the Cornell student who was drowned, was unanimously adopted, and special prayer was made for them. With the hearty singing of "God be with you till we meet again," and the benediction pronounced by Mr. Moody, the Northfield gathering was brought to a close.

Next morning most of the students left, full of deep gratitude for the many blessings which the fortnight had brought, and heartily echoing the sentiment of good omen which had greeted them from the carved mantelpiece of one of the halls on their arrival, "Well befall hearth and hall."

At the railway station, Mr. and Mrs. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Prof. Towner, and many others were gathered to bid us farewell. Hymns were sung, and hearty college cheers were given as the train moved off, carrying us once more out into the world which we had left for a time.

The British students have since made a tour, including Niagara and the St. Lawrence and Hudson rivers, and have addressed large audiences at the great Chautauqua Summer College, at Niagara Falls, at Montreal, at Saratoga, and at New York.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

Having recently witnessed the result of free speech in the park, Toronto, on a Sunday afternoon, I am free to confess that I am in accord with the law of our American cities. I do not, of course, endorse the abuses of that law, but is it not a moral gain that no one shall utter blasphemies in public, without applying for a permit to preach? I have not heard that infidels, Socialists, or Spiritualists, so apply to city authorities for permission to harangue the crowds on the Lord's Day. Only evangelistic preachers, as a rule, take the trouble. But, as in Toronto, where every man can speak his mind freely, the consequences are extremely harmful.

. . . .

As I watched the boys and girls, the young men and maidens, waiting for the coarse joke, or vulgar story, which infidels are ever ready to retail, I knew that moral wounds were being made which may never, never be healed. A thoughtful brother, who has watched this work for years, assured me that the mischief done is incalculable, and a frightful brood of young blasphemers are being hatched by this sort of licence. Evil doctrine must result in evil deeds, and it would be a wise move for Toronto legislators to shut out from her beautiful park all who poison her moral atmosphere, and degrade her youthful citizens. A policeman informed me that fights were frequent, and that now the enemies of the Cross are so many and so bold, that evangelistic preachers make little headway.

And yet Toronto is a privileged city. The Christian people there are strong enough to stop the running of Sunday cars, and entrance of Sunday trains. Her Sabbaths are peaceful, her ministers are faithful, and her workers for Jesus very numerous. I can only account for the scenes in the park on this basis—that the sentimental idea that everyone is entitled to the exercise of free speech is a cherished tradition. A word may be sharper than a sword, and coarse blasphemy more destructive than a bludgeon. Why should my children, or anybody's children, stand in danger of moral murder from the hand of some reckless highwayman? Are not the morals of our fellow-men to be guarded, and, if possible, shall not legislation bind the enemy that sows tares among the wheat?

[Notwithstanding, we confess that we are on the side of free speech. The great commission is to preach the Gospel to every creature. We are not responsible for shutting the mouths of infidels. We are responsible for preaching repentance and remission of sins to all nations, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.—Ed.]

Open-air Mission.—This useful Mission is greatly hindered by lack of funds, at a time when it ought to have the most liberal help, for this is the height of its "season." Contributions may be sent to the secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

The hope that others may be led to go and visit the hop-pickers of Herefordshire and Worcestershire, is my reason for sending you a few incidents of our work in those districts. Our annual visits are preceded and followed by some ninety miles of general village work. Entering the first yard, one of the visitors said to a picker, "Friend, if you cling to Jesus, like the hops cling to the pole, you will be quite safe." The prompt answer was: "I am safer than that; Jesus clings to me." Near by was an old woman, leaning on a crutch. On being spoken to of Jesus, she replied, "I trusts Him, I believes Him, and I loves Him."

A little farther on is a farm; in the yard, one moonlit evening, we collected the "pickers." It was a time of blessing, but soon one of their number came forward, and briefly pictured her home, as it used to be when Johnny came home drunk most nights; then showed the contrast in cupboard, clothes, &c., when husband and wife were converted. When in full muster we make up a walking party, of those especially suited. We leave a wide margin for Hereford, Leominster, and Malvern workers, and then cannot nearly cover the country we wish to. One or two workers had a talk with a group of pickers, and there, in the moonlight, we believe one woman found the Lord.

Going to a farm, we called at a cottage, where both husband and wife appeared to receive the Kingdom of God as a little child.

But there is a gloomy side to the picture! Men and women congregate who have sunk so low socially, that they cannot well go lower. Sometimes a poor unfortunate man confesses he has lost heart; sometimes they seem desperate. One poor fellow, apparently educated, remarked that the Lord Jesus was a carpenter on the tramp. It gave an opportunity to tell how "although He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor."

Occasionally a farmer will try to stir up the roughs to disturb us, but although some get a wonderfully rough party together, from the "Black Country," the sympathy far outweighs the opposition.

One afternoon over a hundred pickers were just changing fields. This gave us a splendid meeting. At the close, seeing a mother carrying her child, we asked if the child was afraid she would drop it, or starve it. Learning that it trusted her altogether, we showed that when she trusted the Lord Jesus thus, she would be saved. Some standing around smiled, but, if we mistake not, the mother learned what salvation was, and, like a mother nearer home once said, "If that's salvation, I'll trust Him now!"

Sickness and suffering are often found, and we remember being ushered into a barn, where a poor woman was lying on some straw, covered with sacks (apparently near her end), to tell of the "Mighty to save."

One evening we were returning to our lodging, after a long day, and met two "pickers." One had a child lying dead, nine years old, which would be left behind in the graveyard. As we gathered round in prayer, we believe the Spirit led the mother to the "precious blood." Often we hear the remark, "We have been talking about you, and hoped you would come this year." In most places we find anxious souls, even in what seem most unlikely spots, and in many a quiet nook we have told of a Saviour waiting to save. T. S. Heley.

SOUTHSEA MISSION BIBLE-CARRIAGE.—Messrs. F. Seal and Jas. Coster have completed a very successful mission with No. 1 Bible-carriage, visiting Clacton-on-Sea, Walton-on-the-Naze, Dovercourt, and Ipswich. Many Bibles, Testaments, tracts, &c., have been sold and given away, while thousands have listened with great interest to the Gospel as it has been preached from the carriage.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Ossian Davies.

Our zealous brother, Rev. William Cuff, pastor of the Shoreditch Tabernacle, contemplates building a new Sunday-school, which is urgently needed, as many poor children are constantly turned away for want of room. He says: "I am deeply convinced that Sunday-schools are the hope of the future." There is no doubt as to the truth of this; and the hope can only be fulfilled by converted teachers, apt to teach. One great object of ministerial endeavour should surely be to prepare and train a competent band of Sunday-school teachers.

The wisdom of God is foolishness with men—to Gentile and Jew alike. This is forcibly shown by the present-day attitude to the atoning work of Christ. That the doctrine of substitution is opposed to the spirit of the age has, however, been recently shown in a striking manner. All down the centuries, orthodox Jews have prayed for the time to come when acceptable sacrifices may be offered to God, as of old; they have looked forward to the return of God's good pleasure to Zion. Losing hope, while refusing to recognise in Christ the Sacrifice which was offered once for all, the Jewish people are now revolting against the thought of a restoration of those ordinances, implying atonement, which Christians regard as having served as shadows of good things to come. The action of the Berkeley-square Synagogue, in expunging the time-honoured petitions from the prayer-book, has, however, scandalised some of the less rationalistic members of the community.

Without assuming any authority over the clergy on the matter, the Archbishop of Canterbury has expressed his approval of the free opening of churches during the week for private prayer. The only serious objection is this: among many Roman Catholics there is the superstitious notion that the only place for private prayer is in the presence of the so-called Host over the altar; and by lighted candles and other objects it would be the policy of the Romanisers in the English Church to foster the idea that prayer was specially acceptable in Ritualistic churches. This is a real danger; otherwise there is no doubt that many of the poor find no suitable place for prayer elsewhere, and that the associations of an open church, where people might withdraw from the fret and turmoil of the streets would be useful. Priestism could, unhappily, spoil a real boon, and a forewarning of the danger is needful.

Before attention to the late lecture of Dr. Boyd Carpenter on "Novels" passes away, there is a feature of modern works of fiction which some reviewers very painfully observe, and on which it would have become the Bishop of Ripon to speak sternly. In novels that have a fair repute in circulating libraries it is becoming common to imitate French literature, and to represent men as making love to married women. The thing is revolting to the last degree, violates the best English traditions, and is unspeakably corrupting. No father ought to allow such books to enter his house, and in a matter that must seriously undermine our national morals, a bishop might have been expected to utter a firm protest.

The Guardian is our authority for the assertion, that when the subject of Home Re-union was discussed in the Lambeth Conference an attempt was made to carry concessions to Nonconformists much further than the colourless statement of the Encyclical went. We can scarcely wonder if Colonial Bishops, with their larger views, should have pressed a practical recognition of "non-Episcopal orders." Let not the commonness of the spectacle blind our eyes to the scandal to Christianity that one party do not seem to care for recognised union, and the other refuse to admit even the best men of the contrary section to their pulpits; and let ecclesiastics of both schools learn that godly laymen, all through the land, are increasingly refusing to follow in this matter the example of their teachers, and are happily working side by side in the Lord's work, and in meeting the urgent demands of the age.

A recent pulpit utterance of the Bishop of Salisbury, in regard to the Lambeth Conference, certainly gives ground for a query as to why there is not at least one more pervert to Rome; for, in expressing regret that the Conference "did not approach the Roman Catholic Christians in this country with a greater amount of hopefulness than it did," the Bishop is reported also to have expressed the opinion that "we cannot expect them to receive us as a body," and to have gone on to say:—

> But we can, I think, by showing our own Catholic position, by affirming our own right to the full heritage of the Church, by openness and frankness, and perfect truthfulness and confidence, and by expecting such openness and frankness in return—from individuals I mean, not from the whole body—we can make a great impression, and I very much wish the Lambeth Conference had said something hopeful in that direction.

It is not out of place again to ask, whither are we drifting? Surely, with the open Bible in our hands, there is no need to take an apologetic position in "affirming our right to the full heritage" of those who believe that there is but one Mediator between God and man. We want no union such as that which the Bishop seems to be pining for; and, in fact, light and darkness cannot unite.

The possible and desirable union which many Christians are to-day inquiring for was referred to by Dean Perowne, himself of Huguenot descent, a few Sundays ago, in preaching at the French Church in the Crypt of Canterbury Cathedral, at the commemoration service of the 338th anniversary of that church, when he said:—

> In proportion as the struggle against Rome grew less intense, we have forgotten our ancient allies. . . . A large and dominant party in the Church of England would deny them (the Protestant Dissenters) the name of Churches, and openly advocate communion rather with Rome, or with the Greek Church. . . . For myself, I would cultivate the views of the High Church prelate, Archbishop Sancroft, when he enjoined the bishops and clergy of his day that they "warmly and most affectionately exhort our brethren, the Protestant Dissenters, to join with us in daily fervent prayer to the God of peace for the universal blessed union of all Reformed Churches, both at home and abroad, against our common enemies, that all they who confess the holy name of our dear Lord, and do agree with the truth of his holy Word, may also meet in one communion, and live in perfect unity and godly love."

It is anticipated that whereas there were 2000 members at the Manchester Church Congress twenty-five years ago, there will be 6000 this year. Three large halls are taken for the discussions, and it cannot awaken surprise that the sectional meetings done away with last year at Wolverhampton will be revived at Manchester. Surely this immense number of persons, many of whom travel far, and all of whom give up time to be present, is a sign of the times. We hope it is an evidence of an awakening to a sense of the duty of the Church of Christ to this age, and to the grave moral and social questions which now confront Christian men. May God in mercy grant that there may be some valued outcome of endless papers and talk, and that the earnest religious reformers in the land may, as a result, find a more courageous and efficient co-operation!

Mr. W. P. Frith, R.A., in his autobiography (vol. ii. p. 212) says:—

> Artists know how constantly persons unaccustomed to sitting, or rather standing, in the fatiguing attitudes required, are attacked by fainting fits so suddenly as to require a constant lookout on the part of the painter for the premonitory symptoms that he knows so well; a deadly pallor overspreads the face, the lips become colourless, and, unless a change of attitude is afforded at once, the model falls to the floor. On the occasion I speak of, a boy was standing in an easy position, with his hands in his pockets. I saw no sign of change in his complexion; when, without moving his hands from his trousers, he fell like one shot. I have known soldiers, boxers, and the like, powerful-looking men, unable to endure the strain of standing still in one position, though the action may be simple and easy enough, for a quarter of an hour, without sensations, which they declare they have never felt before, incapacitating them for a time. In one of my friend's studios, a girl fell into a stove and disfigured herself for life.

In vol. ii. page 276, we also read:—

> Many of the young students of the present day will perhaps be surprised to hear that it was my custom, and that of my friends, to make nude studies of all the figures in our pictures before we proceed to clothe them, the advantage of the method being a safeguard, to a great extent, against disproportion and false action. I regret to say I have discontinued the practice.

It would be scarcely possible for two paragraphs to be written more condemnatory of the practice which Mr. Frith regrets that he has given up. They also suggest a sufficient reason why the prophet declares that the day of the Lord of Hosts shall be upon all "pleasant pictures;" "works of imagery," "pictures of desire." Mr. Frith, also, here supplies a very valid argument, which common humanity cannot disregard, that young women in shops should be allowed to sit when disengaged.

We do not doubt that when the scope of the Parliamentary Committee's inquiry into the Sweating System is extended so as to include the provincial towns, the revelations will not be less startling than were those in regard to the condition of labour in the East-end of London. Recently at an "Operatives' Union" meeting in Dundee, Rev. H. Williamson referred to the painful case of an operative in that town who had been spinning ever since she was nine years of age, and who, after twenty-three years of labour, could earn only six shillings and tenpence per week. Details of this woman's expenditure upon necessarily very scanty food were given, and the pathetic statement was made that "she paid a penny weekly for insurance, in order to provide for her burial." We are not disposed to disagree with Mr. Williamson in his opinion that it is a disgrace to the nineteenth century that such a woman should be living deprived of nearly all the privileges of civilisation, and that the state of things referred to makes a large number of women paupers, for we have frequently urged that starvation wages are unfortunately responsible for worse evils and sorrows than pauperism. The remedies, however, will be somewhat difficult of application, but there is no valid reason why they should not be brought to bear upon a condition of things which is so radically opposed to the first principles of the Gospel.

Apparently, the labour question must soon take a prominent position in India, for it is stated that whereas the value of the total exports reaches over eighty-three millions per annum, only about twenty-seven millions reach the producers and earners, i.e., about three shillings per head of the entire population; the income of the Indian agricultural labourer, and his family, for instance, representing in "a good year" only threepence per day. That even the Government officials speak of the condition of these people as "deplorable, and a disgrace to civilisation" is not surprising, and the question naturally arises, How long can it last? The responsibility is indeed a great one, and, unfortunately, as a nation we do not appear to be sensible of its magnitude.

Our valuable contemporary, The Hospital, calls attention to a want which possibly will not remain long unsupplied now that publicity has been given to the need. Referring to the fact that many cases are inadmissible to a seaside convalescent home, and in giving a list of the "ineligibles," the writer says:—

> Just the very saddest and most deserving cases are thus precluded from most of the homes. True, it would never do to take in numerous epileptics, dumb people, children, or consumptives, but then they ought to have special homes built for them. If only some millionaire would build a home for these poor outcasts! But what a large home it would have to be!

Suppose, however, some Christian man or woman of means, not necessarily a millionaire, begins by building a seaside convalescent home for one class of these deserving sufferers?

Lord Meath has already done much good service in the cause of acquiring and preserving various open spaces for the use of the London public, who are too often at the mercy of those whose only care is to enrich themselves, and it is hoped that he may be successful in his present endeavours to rescue from the builders' hands, for the purpose of a recreation-ground, five acres out of the twenty-three which comprise the site now occupied by Milbank prison. It appears that there is an undertaking on the part of the Government to reserve a large portion of it for artisans' dwellings; but eighteen acres are ample on which to build houses for many thousands of workmen, and the physical and moral health of them and of their children will be much improved if an oasis be thus secured for them in the midst of the surrounding wilderness of bricks and mortar. It often happens that the sites of old "rookeries" are completely covered by scamped buildings, which, except in outward appearance, are little better than those which they have displaced. A sufficiency of light and air and reasonable privacy are factors not to be overlooked in efforts to better the condition of the poor, and it would be well if out of every twenty acres which the building speculator takes he were compelled to give up one acre to the body public for breathing space.

The first report of the Mansion House Conference on the condition of the unemployed renders valuable help towards a thorough understanding of the labour question. It expresses the deliberate conviction of some of the best authorities upon pauperism in England that relief works "are in the long run an injury instead of a benefit to the community, by discouraging the real spirit of work, and thereby diminishing self-reliance and enterprise." But the most striking part of the report is that which sets forth the result of a most careful investigation, made by a competent sub-committee into the individual case of each unemployed person to whom work was offered on gardens and pleasure grounds in December last. This analysis discloses the startling fact that of the four hundred and fifty-six men thus employed on relief work, only 17 per cent. were men to whom it was found possible to do any permanent good, and that nearly three-fourths of the whole number had fallen to their present condition by reason of their own misconduct, incapacity, or improvidence.

In the melancholy and almost disheartening remainder of eighty-three per cent., whom the Committee were thus powerless to raise, are included thirty per cent. who were dismissed for incapacity or misconduct, described by the Committee as "but paupers under another name"; and thirty-six per cent. of casual labourers, who, though respectable and willing to work, "had no capacity for continuous exertion, and were become by habit undisciplined." It is this latter thriftless class, many of whose members have become what they are from want of a suitable education, which presents the greatest crux to philanthropists and reformers. But, as Mr. Peek has pointed out, much may be done to remove this by condemning and repressing the hasty, and almost criminally improvident marriages, which are more numerous in this class than in any other, and by altering and adapting education, especially industrial education, to the special needs of the children, so as to save them from sharing the same fate as their fathers, and becoming a burden and a danger to the public.

The question of framing remedial measures of a more permanent nature was referred to a sub-committee, whose report is also set forth in detail; and, as the result of their deliberations, a scheme is being prepared somewhat on the lines of the mendicant colonies, or agricultural training farms of Holland. Several offers of farms have been received, and it is probable that after the recess the plan will be submitted to the public with an appeal for their pecuniary support. Although there is room for grave doubt whether these Dutch associations, however adapted to English requirements, will solve the problem of how to deal with a body of men who have neither self-reliance, foresight, energy, nor thrift, yet the experiment, at all events, deserves a fair trial, and the result will be awaited with great interest.

A serious defect in our present system of elementary education, largely attributable to the principle of payment by results, is that it too often induces a mechanical cramming of useless subjects and facts into the heads of children, and furnishes no scope for the gradual development and discipline of their perceptive faculties. In his recent Presidential Address, before the British Medical Association, at Glasgow, Professor Gairdner drew timely attention to the physical and mental harm resulting from such mechanical and inelastic modes of instruction, and pleaded that children should be taught the methods and some of the simpler processes of science, for which he held that no child was too young:—

> Our present programme of school discipline, he said, is still too largely founded on the idea that at six or seven years old, as the case may be, a child may be withdrawn, in a great measure, from the strictly natural, wholesome, and all-round education of the faculties, to have his nose buried for ten long years in books and papers, and mental and other arithmetic, till his little eyes become myopic, and his little brain suffers a corresponding deformity.

While, however, thus training the tender mind to observe and understand the varied wonders of science or natural history, the opportunity should at the same time always be seized to lead the learner "from nature up to nature's God," and to draw him onwards, beyond the observation of processes or phenomena, to revere the Author who "in wisdom hath made them all."

MR. ALLEN'S HOMES, FOLKESTONE.

THE work done in these Homes needs only to be better known to be more widely appreciated. To carry out the work in the way and on the principle adopted, quite needs persons like-minded with Mr. and Mrs. Allen, who seem to have laid themselves on the altar of self-sacrificing love and devotion to their work, which seems to stop at nothing that is required to make their guests happy.

Pembroke House answers a double purpose. It accommodates sixty-five young men, who are enabled to enjoy a holiday at the seaside at a moderate expense. All the year round it is open to candidates who are recommended by Y.M.C.A.'s, and at all times of the year there is a goodly number in residence. Many young men have come simply for an agreeable change, but have returned in possession of the new life. No fewer than eighty-four have testified to conversion since last Easter. The profits arising from Pembroke House enable Mr. Allen to prosecute an extensive mission work in the neglected villages around Folkestone. In this work many of his young visitors join, and as a result something like 200 persons have professed conversion during this year.

The Home in Dover-road, known as Grove-end House, is of a very comprehensive character, and sadly needs extension, to enable Mr. Allen and his daughter, the hard-working matron, to carry on their never-ceasing work. The Home was publicly opened by Mr. Sidney Weston on March 31, 1887, for the reception of homeless and friendless children, and for fatherless little ones whose mothers are unable to keep a home together. The resolve was to receive such cases without payment, and also, as far as possible, to take in little children and young servants from London for change of air. Christian friends support the institution, and God has greatly honoured the prayer of faith.

Mr. Allen turns his boys into shoeblacks, messengers, window-cleaners. They also distribute tracts and sell penny story-books. The Home is always open for inspection. With all this work, Mr. Allen is cramped for more room. The adjoining property, once a large boarding school, with ample grounds, is offered him freehold for £2500. He wants to make the Home self-supporting, and contemplates taking an adjacent farm to train the lads in. H. H.

The Lord's Day at Gibraltar.

Dear Sir,—Last year I forwarded to The Christian some information concerning a lion and bull fight which took place just outside Gibraltar on a Sunday afternoon; also of a band contest at Malaga on the following Sunday, in which three military bands from Gibraltar took part. I regret that I have now occasion to bring to your notice another scene of Sabbath desecration, not this time outside Gibraltar, but within the garrison, viz., in the Alameda. It was notified in last Thursday's local paper that a "Spanish Opera Company," which has been drawing crowded houses for some weeks past, would, with the sanction of the Governor, give an extraordinary performance on Sunday evening, and the paper, which is a Government one, added, that "they hoped there would be a full house."

I accordingly waited upon all the chaplains of the various denominations, after having drawn up the enclosed protest, and each one readily signed the same, together with sixteen English tradesmen and others. This I presented to the Colonial Secretary on Saturday morning, so that His Excellency the Governor might receive it in time, if he chose, to reconsider his sanction, and prevent the performance taking place. He received the protest the same morning, and on Saturday afternoon the enclosed reply came. Although not expecting the performance would be postponed, still we thought the Governor would certainly give us reason for hoping that in future no such sanction should be given. But such is not the case, and, as you will see by his reply, he may at any time sanction a repetition of the same, or even allow a bull fight to take place on Sunday, if he is guided by the plea that, because Spaniards see no harm in such things, being Roman Catholics, therefore he is justified in bowing to the majority, whether the thing is right or wrong. We therefore think the matter should not rest here, and therefore forward you the whole correspondence.

Does not the law of England apply to Gibraltar in this respect?

Yours very truly, George Holmes.
Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar, Aug. 7.

COPY OF PROTEST.

August 3, 1888.

To His Excellency Sir Arthur Edward Hardinge, K.C.B., C.I.E., &c., &c., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar, &c., &c.

May it please your Excellency.—We, the undersigned British and Protestant residents of the city of Gibraltar, having heard from The Gibraltar Chronicle of last night's issue that it is the intention of the "Spanish Zarzuela Company" to give a performance on Sunday evening next in the Summer Theatre, Alameda, hereby most respectfully submit to your Excellency our united and humble protest against the Lord's Day being thus desecrated, and the creation of a precedent which, in our estimation, is likely to lead to further public acts of secular amusement being introduced. We therefore trust your Excellency will cause our protest to be placed before the promoters of this scheme, for the purpose, if possible, of its postponement, or that a recurrence of the same may not receive your Excellency's sanction.

We have the honour to be, your Excellency's most obedient and respectful servants.

[Twenty-one signatures followed, including three Church of England chaplains, the Wesleyan and Presbyterian chaplains, also several leading tradesmen and others. Many more would have gladly signed, but the time was too short to see more before presenting the protest to the Colonial Secretary.—G.H.]

THE GOVERNOR'S REPLY.

No. $\frac{289}{88}$ [COPY.] Colonial Secretary's Office, Gibraltar, August 4.

Sir,—With reference to a petition to the Governor, handed into this Department by you, I am directed to inform you that His Excellency, bearing in mind that the majority of the population of this fortress belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, which sees no disrespect in theatrical entertainments being held on Sunday, has no reason to depart from the precedent established by Lord Napier of Magdala.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

Cavendish Boyle, Colonial Secretary.
Mr. George Holmes, Soldiers' Institute.

On Winning Souls to Christ.

By GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

I.

Israel's king and royal philosopher, writing by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, declared, "The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life; and he that winneth souls is wise" (Prov. xi. 30).

There is in this Divine utterance both a logical and vital connection between the fruit of the righteous and the work of winning souls.

They who are truly righteous, who are in Christ, as the branch is in the vine, will assuredly bring forth this kind of fruit. For the Christian believer in whom the Christ-life dwells will bear fruit corresponding to the nature of that life. As it is a faithful saying that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, it is also a faithful saying that the Church has come into the world for a like purpose; viz., to seek and to save that which is lost. "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, so have I also sent them." The commission given to the Church has never been recalled: the obligation resting upon the Christian has never been cancelled. May our ears still be attent unto the authoritative command, "Go ye therefore into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." It is by the preached Gospel that men are saved: for how can they hear without a preacher?

In the presentation of this subject, "Winning souls to Christ," I confine myself to motives. Methods will in great measure take care of themselves. If the real incentives to soul-winning possess us, we shall readily acquire such methods as each occasion demands. Individual souls require independent treatment. In physical life, the specific remedy proving successful in one class of disease, may with different subjects prove valueless. In the spiritual world, there is but one remedy for every diseased soul, but in diagnosis and application there must needs be variety of method. Jesus had no fixed rules; He adopted no inflexible system. The variety of his miracles, and continued adaptation of his sermons to the needs of each case, are worthy of study. When healing one blind man, He used clay and spittle; while to another He commanded the light to shine into the darkness, and it was done. On one occasion He lifted a sufferer by the hand; on another He imparted the healing power through his garment's fringe. So also in preaching He obeyed no stereotyped law of homiletics. His sermon preached to Nicodemus condemned the flesh, while that to the woman of Samaria condemned the sins of the flesh. And though He offered life to both, one was bid look and be saved; the other to drink and be satisfied. Our Lord preached righteousness to Simon the Pharisee, and grace to the contrite sinner. He reminded the parents of the child raised from the dead to give her food; while He commanded the friends of Lazarus to loose him, and let him go. Thus Jesus ministered to the bodies and souls of men in divers ways. Anointed and led of the Spirit, He was not hampered by custom, nor hindered by methods. And yet his work was neither lawless in its independence, nor fanatical in its tendencies.

The special aim of a consecrated ministry is that of winning souls. Not indeed seeking to save the soul as a distinct entity, but, the rather, to save the entire personality. Soul-salvation necessarily includes the salvation of the body; but there is a bodily salvation which leaves the soul in its sinful state. There are schemes of reform which seek to save from poverty, intemperance, prison, misfortune, sickness, and habit. But the Gospel of Christ takes hold on the inner life and elevates the entire man. It penetrates to the interior spirit and renews the whole being. The divine remedy brought to light through the Gospel saves from sin's penalty, guilt, power, and consequences. For as sin ramifies every department of our nature, moral and physical, affecting the intellect, corrupting the affections, searing the conscience, perverting the will, so the Gospel announces pardon, brings purity, assures victory, renews, elevates, and invigorates all the man; nay more, gives promise also of final and everlasting redemption from sin's dire curse in all its universal woe. Spirit, soul, and body, shall be fully and finally saved in the day of Jesus Christ.

This, then, is the delightful and inspiring task before every true Christian believer—winning souls to Christ. Winning the child, weaning him from evil, and welding him to the good; winning the ignorant, in order to make them wise unto salvation; winning the heedless that they may receive the Gospel, and live soberly, righteously, and godly; winning the fallen, and lifting them from pollution to purity, from hell to heaven. Not to angels is this royal service given. Swiftly would they fly on such an errand; yet, alas! how slowly we move in this work; how leaden are our heels, how insensible our hearts, how insipid our speech, so that our words become as idle tales? Surely we need the Spirit of God to arouse us from apathy, to startle us from slumber, to constrain us by an infusion of the tender, mighty love which filled the heart of Jesus, who stooped so low, and who suffered so keenly, in order to bring many sons unto glory. The fires through which He passed could not consume that love, neither could the floods drown it. And it is this potential, irresistible love, possessing the Christian worker, which will arm him with courage, and move him by constraint. When filled with love divine his face will be like the face of a lion, and his feet swift as the roes' upon the mountains. Winning souls! Who can estimate the worth of a soul. Revelation alone can give us any adequate conception thereof. Who else can conceive its possibilities for good or evil; its exquisite capabilities for pleasure or pain; its immortality and final destiny? Truth regarding the soul is not to be had from philosophising speculators, nor from sentimental dreamers. It is a Divine communication—a secret imparted to the thoughtful mind receiving instruction from God's sure word of Holy Scripture.

From the same source we are also enlightened in the secrets of sovereign grace. How God the Father yearns in love for the recovery of human souls; how Christ the Son, in deep compassion, laid down his life for their redemption; how the Comforter, the Spirit of the Father and of the Son, searches for the lost until they are recovered. Therein also we learn of the soul's downward plunge from God and holiness; of its utter debasement by reason of sin; of the battle for its eternal possession between the powers of heaven and hell; of its continued existence in the fires of Gehenna, or its everlasting life in the fields of Paradise.

It is when we are imbued and impressed and inter-penetrated with the value of the soul, when we shall be aroused from our spiritual lethargy, and be spurred on to its rescue. Then shall we save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire, knowing that their judgment is deferred because the long-suffering of the Lord is salvation, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

MORMONISM AS IT IS.

At the annual meetings of the Association of Female Workers, among other narratives of deep interest, Service for the King reports the following :—

Miss Sybil Carter, one of the delegates sent by the American Episcopal Board to the Centenary Conference on Missions, said: The work is the same all over the world. Since I have been in England I have heard missionaries from India, Japan, China, and other parts of the world, and the work is everywhere one with ours in America. In our country there is immense scope. There are eight millions of blacks emerging from the degradation of slavery—there are many tribes of Indians that have never yet been reached by the missionary —there are the Mormons—and there is the vast flood of European immigrants which all our Church organisation cannot overtake.

I know something of all these, but I have been asked to speak to-day about because it is less known perhaps than any other department. People think it must be very difficult, but oh, it is so blessed to carry the Gospel to these poor, sad, dark hearts, that I can only echo the words of the great Apostle, "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."

I went to a Mormon village, and planted a mission and school there, though I did not call them by these names. I invited the people, in the first place, to come up and have some singing; and they came for three months, without any idea that it was a Sunday-school, though they always got Bible teaching. Before long we had eighteen grown men and women, besides boys and girls, and at last one day they asked me, "What's your religion, teacher?" I was prepared for the question, so I just turned round the blackboard, where I had written the text, "Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you." "There's my religion," I said. "My home and friends are two thousand miles from here, and I have come all this way to live among you out of love. This is my religion, and let it be yours, too. Let us love one another, because the Lord Jesus Christ loved us all, and gave Himself for us." Then I told them that I should like to begin a day school for them, and I heard one of the girls say, as she went out, "The Gentile woman is real nice—I guess I'll go to her school." Twelve came the first day, and as I was talking to them about God, one tall lad asked, "But which God do you mean, teacher? Is it a God down in the States?" I was startled, for I could scarcely believe there was such real heathenism in my own country, but he asked in sheer ignorance, for the Mormons are taught that Brigham Young, Joseph Smith, and other dead leaders are all gods now. You will not wonder that my next day's lesson was on that sublime first clause, "I believe in one God, the Father Almighty," and after that, day by day, and step by step, we went through all the truths of the creed. Four months later the very lad who had asked the question, came up to me one day with a beautiful little blue feather in his hand, and said, "Isn't it lovely? and our God made it." "Then, Nelson, you believe in one God now?" I said. "Yes," he answered, "and I'm thinking about Him most all day long, aren't you, teacher?" It was easy to work among them then; they drank in every word, and one could see their intense interest in their faces.

Another day, I was busy with my housekeeping, for you know one has to learn to do everything for one's self in these out-of-the-way corners. Often and often I have burnt my fingers with my cooking, and got into all sorts of difficulties; but when anybody begins to commiserate the hardship of a missionary life, I always say, "Please don't throw away your pity on me, for if ever there was a woman happy in her work, I am one." However, I was very busy that cold Saturday morning, when an ugly, defiant-looking woman came to the door. I opened it, and she began with a voice and manners as hard and snappish as her looks, "I guess you don't know that this used to be my house? Didn't know you were going to keep school here, or you should never have had it." It was not a promising introduction, but I found she wanted to take up some roots out of the garden, so I let her go in. Presently, when my lunch was ready and I had made some good hot coffee, I thought, "That poor creature must be cold," and though I can't say I liked the idea of her company, I went out to her, and said, "You must be cold, come in and have some coffee with me." She was stooping over her work, and I shall never forget her bitter, defiant look as she straightened herself up, and snarled out, "And what business is it of yours, if I was to freeze to death?" "Why, Mrs. Taylor," I said, "perhaps it mayn't be any business of mine, but if you were to freeze to death, I should be real sorry." Her face changed in a moment, and her lips quivered—she got up and followed me in without another word, and I put coffee and food before her, but she could not eat.

She said at last that she had not had a decent word spoken to her for so long that she did not know how to bear it; and you will scarcely wonder when I tell you the story of her life. Her mother died when she was eleven years old, and she had never known her father. She was picked up by a Mormon elder, and carried to Salt Lake City, and married to an old man who had two or three wives already, and treated her like a dog. Then a younger man persuaded her to get a divorce, and marry him, and she did so, but only found that she had changed from bad to worse.

Years passed, and she became the mother of five children, but his brutality only increased, and at last, when he had beaten her till she could not stand, some neighbours took her away, and allowed her a shelter in their outhouse. She worked hard for herself and her children, and they did what they could, and by degrees she saved a little money, and bought this house. Then her husband put in a claim to it, and when she would not give it up, he stole away her children one by one. To their eternal disgrace the Mormon elders abetted him, and at last a party of them came at night and held her down in bed while he carried off the last, a boy of six years old. Then he offered, if she would give up the house, to let her have her children back; but Mormonisn, which crushes so many, had roused up all the evil in her, and she swore with bitter oaths that he should never have it—sold it to the Mission, which happened to make the first offer, and let herself drift into a life of abandoned wickedness, defying and hating everybody. Now the one little kind word I had spoken had touched her heart, and she told me all with tears running down her cheeks. She began to come to the school, and soon one would scarcely have known her, the softening power of the Holy Spirit had so changed her face. Oh, the Bible is as grand as ever, and its sanctifying power as wonderful! The difficulty is to get it into people's hands and into their hearts.

One more story I must try to tell you quickly. I was closing school after a hard day's work, when one of my scholars said to me, "Guess you're about tired, teacher? You wouldn't go just now and see a sick woman right away down by the depôt?" "Oh, yes," I said, "tell me where she lives, and I'll go—never mind being tired." Down in a very low part I found the cottage, and was surprised on entering it to see a fair-faced, delicate-looking woman, quite unlike most of the rough people around. She was evidently far gone in consumption, but she welcomed me gratefully, and soon told me her tale of sorrow. When only sixteen she had started with her mother from Liverpool, the Mormons having deluded them, as they do thousands, with promises of a happy life on their own land in the New Jerusalem beyond the sea. The mother died on the voyage, and the simple, helpless girl was left in the hands of elders, who told her on landing they had had a revelation from the Lord that she was to marry a certain man. Friendless and terrified, she dared not refuse, and after the ceremony she was taken 2000 miles into the interior to Salt Lake City. There he introduced her to two middle-aged, hard-faced women—"This is my wife Jane, and this is my wife Elizabeth." The poor girl had never heard of polygamy before, and when she realised what her lot was to be, she just pined away. "Why did you not run away?" I asked; and she answered, with a hopeless look that I can never forget, "Lady, where could I go?" Yes, indeed, where? With no friends, no law, no public opinion to appeal to, thousands of miles away from her own country—what escape was there? She had lived in wretchedness for seventeen years—seven little graves held all her children—and now, forsaken in her weakness, she earned a scanty living braiding straw hats. I told her of a Saviour, and took her a Bible, and little by little her heart was opened to receive its teaching. In the weeks I visited her, I can truly say I got more than I gave. One day I told her that I was going away for some time, adding, "I hope I shall find you better when I come back." She shook her head, and said, "I shall never be better—I shall die soon—but when I see Jesus, if He speaks to me, I'll tell Him how you came out here to look after us poor folks."

I cannot tell you how often those words have cheered and nerved me since. Of course He knows—He sees all these poor wandering souls, Mormons, negroes, Indians. I could have gone on for hours telling you about them. And then there are the millions of the heathen world! Oh, dear sisters, when you pray for them, pray for yourselves too; for, indeed, it seems to me not so much that they cannot be saved unless you help them, as that you cannot be saved if you hold back, when the need is so vast and the labourers so few!

SAILORS AT CIVITA VECCHIA.

The following letters received by Mr. Stephen Burrowes from workers in Rome bear their own message :—

Mrs. Searle writes from S. Antonio, Tivoli, Rome, May 5:—It is most horrible to know that these dear sailors at Civita Vecchia are laid wait for, and robbed of their money and their souls. What can be done for them?

Mr. James Wall writes :—The ships which entered at the port of Civita Vecchia last year were 1476. We have a preaching room there which may be of use. I am glad you are anxious to go forward. May the Lord guide your way in so important an effort.

This is a loud call. As soon as the means are forthcoming, a Sailors' Rest will be opened. Meantime, I shall go and start the cause. Rome is an increasing and important port. Tracts and papers (chiefly English, but foreign will also be required) may be sent to me.

SEASIDE PREACHING AT EASTBOURNE.—Complaint having been made of seaside preaching, the matter was recently discussed in the Eastbourne Town Council. The Children's Mission services were denounced as "an intolerable nuisance," and as "giving offence to thousands of visitors;" and the Council decided to authorise the police, on complaint being locally made, to request the preachers to move on. The friends of mission work in Eastbourne greatly regret that hostility to Gospel effort should have taken this form.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE.

WORLD'S MEETING AT STOCKHOLM.

Amongst the earliest manifestations in London of the approach of this important triennial gathering, was a meeting held in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, July 31. A numerous company of members and friends responded to the invitation of Mr. George Williams to assist at a reception of delegates from America, Australia, and Canada, who were passing through London en route to Stockholm. After united praise and prayer, words of greeting and welcome were spoken by the President, followed by brief testimonies, given by representatives of the various nationalities. All the glory of the success realised in the work of saving young men, in many climes, was given, with one consent, to the Lord Jesus Christ. On the following Thursday evening a large party left London by one of the East Coast Night Expresses to join the s.s. Sirius, at Leith, for

A CRUISE AMONGST THE NORWEGIAN FIORDS.

Little did the most sanguine traveller realise how far his expectations were to be exceeded by the scenes of surpassing grandeur and beauty which awaited him in the Land of the Midnight Sun. Reaching Edinburgh at seven o'clock the party were met at the Waverley station by Mr. Archibald Kennedy, the Scotch National Secretary, and were conducted by him to the adjacent Association rooms. Here they received a warm Scottish welcome. Amongst other friends present were Principal Cairns, Mr. David Shaw, who presided, Bailie Walcott, Mr. Charles Guthrie (son of the famous doctor), Rev. J. M. Sloan, of the Chalmers Memorial Church, &c. Count Pückler, an active worker in the Berlin Y.M.C.A., was also present. With kindly bounty, a substantial breakfast was provided, after which hosts and guests united in worship. A few hearty speeches gave expression to the brotherly love and mutual goodwill which filled every heart.

The forenoon was spent in sight-seeing; and the afternoon was devoted to visiting the Forth Bridge. Words fail to convey any adequate idea of its gigantic proportions. Henceforth (for the present at any rate) America will take second place, in the matter of big bridges; for the Forth Bridge, in its widest span, exceeds that of the Brooklyn Bridge by 150 ft. At nine o'clock in the evening exactly one hundred members of the Y.M.C.A. party—including forty from America and Canada—had stepped on board the yacht-like Sirius. By half-past nine she was clear of the docks, and steaming full speed down the Frith, outward bound for Norway.

During the evening the passengers gathered, according to what became daily practice, for family worship. After a quiet night, and a somewhat troubled Saturday, in the experience of some, land was made at three o'clock on Sunday morning. All rose with bright faces and happy hearts to enjoy in the land-locked Norwegian waters. Public worship on deck was conducted by Rev. Dr. King, of New York, participated in by Rev. Louis H. Jordan, of Montreal, Mr. David Walker, of Sydney, and Mr. Henry Thorne, of Derby. In the afternoon the ship let go her anchor at Eide, in the beautiful Hardanger Fiord. While lying at rest, the party gathered under the awning on the promenade deck for a very profitable Bible study, conducted by Mr. W. H. Mills, of London. In the evening the Sirius moved round to Odde, its destination for the day. At this charming little town an English service is conducted twice every Sunday, in the Lutheran Church, by the courtesy of the resident clergyman. While many of the travellers joined the congregation, others extemporised an open-air meeting on the little quay, and preached the Gospel through an American-Swedish gentleman, one of the party, who not only gave personal testimony, but also interpreted for the English speakers.

Subsequently to this, day by day, waterfalls and other striking features in the several neighbourhoods were visited as the ship moved from point to point, the party either rowing, walking, or driving in carrioles. When the important town of Bergen was reached, the local Y.M.C.A. was found to be en fête. They had arranged to lay the memorial stone of their new building on the day the Sirius was timed to arrive. The stone was in due course well and truly laid by Rev. C. G. Winsnes, Dean of the diocese, and of prayer and song was celebrated in Norwegian and English. After the company had been photographed, the travellers were entertained at a sumptuous feast in the Freemasons' Hall. At last, after a week of great enjoyment, sanctified by the sense of God's presence and blessing, the cruise was exchanged for an equally pleasant journey by rail. A special train, consisting of new and beautiful corridor carriages, was placed at the disposal of the party by the State Railway Administration.

Leaving Trondhjem at one o'clock, accompanied by a member of the Reception Committee, who had travelled from Stockholm to Trondhjem to receive and conduct the friends thither, a royal progress began. The Swedish people gathered at every station en route, and demonstrated their kindly interest by cheers, and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs. At the stations where the train stopped for traffic purposes, opportunity was seized first to sing a sweet Gospel hymn, and then to explain the object of the journey, but, above all, to preach the Gospel and to encourage the Christians. The first stop for the night, and for the Sunday, was made at Ostersund. The Swedish Committee, ascertaining that the hotel accommodation would be insufficient, had arranged with many local families to receive the travellers into their private houses. On the arrival of the train at 10.30 p.m., the excitement was intense; the station yard and surrounding roads were crowded with the inhabitants. On Sunday meals were served in common in a spacious hall. The interest excited was overruled for good. Two thousand people crowded into the Good Templars' House to morning service. This lasted from half-past ten to one o'clock; yet hundreds stood in the aisles, listening with deepest interest, and not a few with moistened eyes. Delegates from the various countries gave testimony, and the prayers and hymns were alternately rendered in Swedish and English. All the preaching was interpreted. At the close of the meeting hundreds of people followed the delegates to a suitable spot, twenty minutes distant from the hall, where open-air preaching was permitted. Here, again, many gave testimony to a crowd of Swedish residents, fully two thousand in number.

In the afternoon a congregation of gathered into the hall to listen to some of their fellow young men, who expounded to them the Way of Life. This meeting was conducted by a popular American Secretary, Mr. David McConaughy, of Philadelphia.

FIVE OR SIX HUNDRED YOUNG MEN

In the evening the large hall was again crowded. Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, presided, and many of the delegates spoke. After service a few of the friends walked out a mile and a half to inspect a Lapp encampment, secluded in the woods which surround the town.

The second day's journey brought the travellers to Bolluäs, a town twice the size of Ostersund. An open-air service was held on the crowded railway platform, adjacent to the hotel where the visitors were quartered. Later in the evening the Rector placed the parish church at the disposal of the delegates, and he himself joined the congregation, which, at the briefest notice, filled the large and handsome building. Mr. R. R. McBurney, of New York, presided, and an earnest and exceedingly appropriate address was given by Rev. Dr. King.

Throughout Norway and Sweden

A REMARKABLE SPIRIT OF HEARING

was manifested. On the morning of the third and last day's railway journey, a halt of fifty minutes was made at Storvik for breakfast. Here, in the beautiful restaurant, the party gathered for its last united devotional service, which was conducted by Rev. David Allen Reed, of Springfield, the founder of the Y.M.C.A. Training School. A final halt of three hours, before reaching the object of this long and delightful pilgrimage, was made at Upsala. This beautiful old University town teems with interest. The cathedral, which is under repair, is full of memories of Gustavus Adolphus, and many other notables. The new University building is magnificent in its style and proportions. The chief interest, however, centres in the celebrated Library. The signatures of Luther and Melancthon elicit a thrill of emotion in the most stolid beholder. At Stockholm hundreds of people were awaiting the arrival of the special train. Amongst others was Mr. George Williams, who had arrived across the Continent earlier in the day. The travellers proceeded to the rooms of the Association in Kungsgutan, where they received a warm welcome, and were in due course dispersed to their temporary homes in the beautiful city of Stockholm. They had been preceded by many other delegates, English, American, and Continental, and many others arrived subsequently, making in the end a total of nearly six hundred delegates from nineteen different countries.

In our next number we purpose giving a full account of the proceedings of the Conference from day to day.

WORK IN THE HOLY LAND.

In these days of increasing activity in Christian work, and interest in missionary enterprises, there seems to be a danger that quiet, unobstrusive, unsensational agencies may be permitted almost to slip out of mind. The claims of the immense empire of China are tellingly brought forward, and labourers go forth, one might almost say, by fifties and by hundreds. Murder and fever have their martyrs in Central Africa, and volunteers press forward to fill the gaps thus made; the people willingly offer themselves, and gold and silver is poured into the Lord's treasury. All this is well; one rejoices over it, and would not have it otherwise: but is there no other land that possesses special claims upon the Church of Christ? Is there not the Holy Land, a land upon which the eyes of the Lord are always, "from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year," whose people are now lying in the darkness of the delusion of the False Prophet, and in the shadow of death of various corrupt churches? Ought not they, too, to see "a great light"?

Quiet woman's work has been carried on in this land for many years by the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. Native teachers have been trained, children have been received into schools, orphans have been "brought up," women gathered into mothers' meetings, and, visited in their own homes, have been cheered by the good tidings of the Gospel, free alike to male and female, and now a medical mission, also, has been undertaken for their benefit. These various branches of work need help, at the present time, not only for extension, but even for maintenance. Yours truly, (Miss) Rosamond A. Webb, Secretary.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

Dear Sir,—As a Scarborough visitor, greatly interested in the seaside services being held here, I would indeed echo Mr. Bishop's words, in your issue of August 10, and say to your readers, "Brethren, pray for us." No one who has not really worked amongst the children of the visitors during "the season" at one or two of our largest and gayest watering places, has the least idea of the appalling Gospel ignorance of these dear little ones. "I have about Jesus in my picture books," remarked a sweet child of seven the other day, "but I thought He was dead, and put in the grave!" And hundreds of children of double that age are practically as ignorant of Bible facts and truths.

Most certainly God is blessing his work here, and in other seaside places, for which we ask your readers to praise Him, while in faith asking Him for "much more." Also asking that He will incline the hearts of worldly parents to allow their children to come to the services. "There's one good thing; he is too young for what he hears to do him any harm!" said a fashionable lady to-day, of her boy when she saw him inside the circle of bright young folks listening to "The Old, Old Story." A gentleman remarked, "My niece went to these services two years ago, but I hope, thank goodness, she's forgotten all the rubbish she learnt then; it's not my fault if she has not."

But, thank God, He has spoken in years past to the hearts of young and old on this gay seashore. And He is still speaking through his servant here, though at times the messenger's voice is drowned for a few moments by the conflicting sounds of "Punch and Judy," the niggers, "the violin girls," and the Spa band. One of the most encouraging features of the work is, meeting those who have received blessing here in former years. Consistent lives, and bright, happy faces are the best answers to the oft-repeated question, "Is the work real? does it last?"

Thank God, it does! And we appeal to your readers to join us in it, by "helping together by prayer for us," also, if possible, by personal help.—Yours truly, F. E. T.

Scarborough, August 16.

Mr. T. B. Bishop sends us reports of services all round the coast. In some places the congregations have been very large, and, on the whole, the weather has been favourable.

A friend writes from Blackpool:—"I am glad to be able to tell you of blessing during Mr. Josiah Spiers's mission here. The week began with a pouring wet Monday, when it was impossible to hold a service; Tuesday set in as wet, but the town was astonished by hearing the bellman crying from end to end: 'All Christians, young and old, are invited to a special prayer-meeting, at the Christ Church Schools, to ask the Lord to send fine weather.' Many people laughed, but the prayer-meeting was held, and immediately afterwards a meeting was commenced on the sands. During the first hymn the sun came out so brilliantly that umbrellas were put up to protect the people from its great power. The weather continued fine for the week, and beautiful services have been held twice a day. Sometimes as many as a thousand children and adults were there, but never less then five or six hundred, and large numbers besides have stood above on the promenade listening attentively. I am thankful to say that great blessing has attended the work during the week; many children that we know of have decided for the Saviour. Last night (Sunday) was a very happy time, many children staying to be spoken to, and one little girl who had received Jesus into her heart was sitting by two others leading them to Him. In the afternoon Mr. Spiers addressed a large congregation of children in Christ Church."

Mr. Newton Jones, and others, have been much encouraged at Margate. They report: Our meetings, which began June 1, and which have been held every afternoon opposite the Marine-terrace, on the sands, have been crowned with great success and much blessing; the attendances have increased daily. On Thursday last, we had a flower service on the sands, when the contributions in fruit and flowers were numerous. There was an attendance of about 700, including adults. A procession was formed afterwards, taking the flowers to the infirmary. On Friday we had an evening meeting on the beach, followed by a Chinese lantern procession. The letters received from the children are an interesting feature in our work; also the formation of a morning Bible reading on the sands amongst Christians. This has created a deep interest, and found us valuable workers in these services. A band of earnest workers from Shaftesbury House, Y.M.C.A., have also rallied round us, and, with the prayers and efforts of all, we have been enabled to be a blessing to many.

AMONG LONDON JEWS.

Of the many efforts that are being made to bring the Jews of London under the influence of the Gospel, one of the most interesting is the quiet work carried on at the Old Home of Industry, Commercial-street, E. It is directed by Mr. Paul Ashkenazie, who has all those qualifications which are required by the Christian missionary to Israel. Not only is he fully prepared for the arguments of those who, in "zeal for the law," follow "the tradition of the elders," which "make void the commandments of God," but, like the Apostle of old, "his heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved."

As opportunity offers, Mr. Ashkenazie goes in and out among the Jews of the East-end, and on the evenings of Saturday and Sunday he preaches Jesus, that He is the Christ. It is pleasing to witness the readiness with which working-class members of the Jewish community attend the meetings, and the earnestness with which they listen to readings from the Hebrew Scriptures, and expositions of the Gospel, for the most part in the Judeo-German speech, with which they are generally familiar. It has been no uncommon thing for months past for fifty or sixty Jews to attend, and it is by no means a bad sign that they are allowed to exercise the right, which they claim, to interject remarks of dissent, more or less after the spirit of Nicodemus's inquiry, "How can these things be?" Forbearance is decidedly called for under the circumstances, and the writer of these lines was much gratified on Saturday last to observe the very winning effect of the kindly manner in which Mr. Ashkenazie presented Christian truth to his kinsmen.

Not in vain has the Gospel been thus preached. Several converts have sealed this unsectarian and promising effort. During the past winter four were baptized, and two or three others have made up their minds to thus confess their faith in Christ. It is well known that Jewish converts to Christianity generally find that their foes are they of their own household. Mr. Ashkenazie has held out no temporal inducement to his hearers to accept the Gospel, but yet some have believed unto salvation, at the peril of incurring loss, obloquy, and persecution. It will, therefore, be apparent that there are still among the Hebrew people some followers of the Great Apostle, who "counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus."

CONVERTS FROM ROMANISM.—In a single Protestant Episcopal Church in the city of New York there were twenty-five communicants received at a recent confirmation who had been baptized in the Roman Catholic Communion.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

A very dear friend writes us from Africa, with a remittance from himself and others for various objects at home:—

My dear wife and myself are now far advanced in years, and no longer able to do active work for our Lord, but we feel it a privilege to be employed as the medium for conveying some little help from Christian friends around us to some of the dear workers in London and elsewhere, who are bearing the heat and burden of the day. Our hearts are ever with those who are thus employed, and I feel assured that, although so fully occupied in their own fields of labour, they sympathise with us, nay more, they are calling down blessings upon us by their prayers. Oh that we could bear them up more efficiently, by sending pecuniary assistance; but this cannot be. The little mite we are able to send, must go with our fervent prayer that the blessing of the Lord may ever sustain them, and the work of their hands.

Our work in this mission field needs every exertion in order to support its ever-increasing requirements. Every year we are called to send forth more native evangelists and schoolmasters, and we are not able to find men fitted for this calling to fill up all vacancies, and some of our European brethren are laid aside by reason of age or illness. Sometimes we are tempted to say, how is it possible to meet the demands of the work? All this is seen by our Lord, and we wait on Him to send forth more labourers. At the same time we ever remember that He can work by the most feeble means and the weakest instruments, and none can hinder Him. I am happy to be able to add, that notwithstanding opposition, which the enemy of souls never fails to raise up to keep poor sinners from Christ, we still rejoice in seeing, week after week, some of the heathen brought to the Saviour.

It is not only the opposition from the heathen that we have to contend against, but the Roman Catholics are doing their utmost to gain over the people. It has been our practice not to allow cattle to be given by a Christian for a wife. It is a species of slavery. The woman has little choice in the matter. Her relatives compel her to take for her husband the man who gives the highest price; but I cannot enumerate all the evils attached to this heathen practice. Now the Catholics proclaim liberty to their converts to buy their wives—provided a man only has one—and they pretend that what is given is not a price for the woman, but merely a dowry to her relatives. This is a scheme they employ to attract the people; but the Lord can thwart their plot. To Him will we look, and not be afraid.

Believe me, ever yours faithfully,

H. M. Dyke.

AN AMERICAN ABOMINATION.—Miss Frances E. Willard, in a letter to The Philanthropist, writes: "We have much to say about the abominations tolerated under the forms of law by the British Government. Is it not high time that we should look at home, and guard the white slaves of our own lumber camps, and on the Pacific coast?" After the painful revelations made public a year or more ago, concerning the enticing of girls to the lumber camps of Michigan for immoral purposes, their cruel enslavement, their escape being guarded against by brutal men and savage dogs, a repressive law was passed by the Michigan Legislature, which, it was hoped, would be the means of putting an end to a great and scandalous crime. It now transpires that, despite the passage of this law, these shocking barbarities continue. A public meeting was recently held in Detroit, under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, to take action in the matter; strong resolutions were adopted, and also a memorial to the Governor, appealing to him to officially intervene for the protection of outraged girlhood and womanhood.—Vigilance Record.

AMONG THE FISHERMEN.

The following interesting letter has been received by Mr. E. J. Mather, from Rev. Frederick Hastings, of Tolmer-square Congregational Church, N.W.

On Board the "James Knott" Mission Yacht,
Ostend, August 6.

Dear Mr. Mather,—We have had several days among the fishermen of this Belgian seaport. The tremendous thunderstorm burst over the town as we entered, and on Sunday a fearful gale raged. We have, while here, been able to hold four distinct services among the Belgians, as well as among the English. I went among the fishermen, and asked them to come to the service on the James Knott. I received various promises, and met with some peculiar expressions. For instance, when I said to one fishermen, "I want you to come and hear words from the Bible," he replied, "The Bible, the Bible; what is that?"

I don't wonder at such ignorance among the Catholic population, for, as I had, unfortunately, no French Bible on my arrival, I found I could not obtain one in all Ostend. I went into shop after shop, and could get nothing of God's Word. I met a priest, and had the temerity to ask him where one could be obtained. He said, "You will not get one in Ostend; people don't sell it here." "Can I not find even a Roman Catholic translation?" "No, I think not. You might possibly get a Protestant Bible at the Evangelistic Church, but, you know, that is not the true Bible. You would find one at a shop in Bruges."

I went to the Evangelical Hall, but the Flemish pastor was away, and I could only get a Bible by journeying to Bruges. It was probably an advantage that I read to the people from their authorised version. How they listened! When I explained it to them, they seemed delighted. My imperfect French they did not even smile at, but told me afterwards that they understood easily all I had said. I put the truths of the Gospel—definite forgiveness for sins through faith in the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus—as plainly as possible before them. To-night we had about three hundred to listen. Our deck was covered, and the wharf was lined with long rows of men, women, and children. They were held by the singing. Our crew sang some English sacred melodies, and then we had some solos, by ladies, from Sankey's book in French. It was surprising how readily they took up the choruses. They begged to have them over again. The "Jesus of Nazareth," and "The Ninety and Nine," were the favourites. We had just one or two copies of hymns, and so were able to teach them and explain the subjects to the people. Oh, what a work there is to be done here! How eager they are for the Word of Life; they crushed one another in their eagerness to get the French tracts we distributed.

Our congregations have increased every evening. If we could only remain, we believe we should see some fruit. As it is, we can only "cast the bread upon the waters." It seems to me that your Society will have to take up mission work to foreign fishermen as well as to those of the English fleets. We had one splendid prayer-meeting in our cabin. How the sailors and some strangers prayed! They took hold of God's power. They watered the sown seed with fervent prayer. While here one of the "copers" that have wrought such damage to the fishermen of the North Sea, has been towed into port a sailless, disreputable derelict. She was found without a man on board. What has become of them is not yet known. As we looked at her, we could not but wonder at the marvellous way in which God has answered the many prayers, and blessed the earnest efforts of the Mission. When I, three years ago, saw the black, ill-shapen, sneaking craft pursuing the fleet in the North Sea with the devil's drink, I could not have believed that so soon the English and Belgian, and other Governments, urged on by the Mission, would combine to prohibit the sale of the alluring alcohol among the men, and so prevent the loss of many precious souls.

A man just now came on board from a Ramsgate boat, with one of those frightful sea-sores on his arm. Our splendid skipper soon prescribed for him, and gave him books to feed his soul as well. Standing with the English Consul by the dock side, he pointed to one spot where as many as twenty-five English sailors and fishermen had been drowned, during his consulate, through over indulgence in the alcohol sold so cheaply and promiscuously here. They have stumbled into the dock, and been drowned in darkness and silence. How many poor fellows have fallen from that derelict coper into the depths of the North Sea, and been carried downwards by their heavy boots, and drink-saturated brains!

To-morrow we hope to get away if the weather is at all suitable, and we intend to visit the various fleets, to speak and sing the Word of Life. Our mission is greatly aided by the singing of Miss G. Davies, who is the sister of the well-known soprano, Miss Mary Davies. How the men appreciate the sweet solos, and join in the choruses! It is an interesting phase of the mission work to have ladies go among the toilers on the vasty deep.

Yours for aye in Christ,
Frederick Hastings.

SERVICE IN EGYPT.

It will interest your readers, I hope, to hear of the Solders' and Sailors' Institute at Alexandria, with the work at which I became acquainted during a sojourn of several weeks' duration in Egypt. The Institute was established four or five years ago by Miss Sarah Robinson, of Portsmouth, and is supported almost entirely through her exertions. She is fortunate in having for its superintendent Rev. Mr. Lawrence, assisted by Mrs. Lawrence, a true helpmeet for him in the Lord's work; and with both the spiritual welfare of the men frequenting the Institute is the first object, whilst they are unwearied in their efforts to make it attractive to them on secular grounds also. The building is in itself well adapted for its purpose, but, unfortunately, at an inconvenient distance from any of the barracks. It has a large and very cheerful reading-room, fully supplied with newspapers; a good library; and a refreshment bar well stocked with eatables and drinkables, so readily served by happy-faced George that it is a pleasure to deal with him. I visited the Institute frequently, and was very glad to find, from soldiers in it whom I questioned, how highly its advantages were appreciated, and how much Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence were esteemed and respected among them. Besides the services in the hall every Sunday, each week has its Bible-class and its prayer-meeting, as also a temperance meeting, and a concert or some other entertainment is provided as often as volunteers can be found to conduct it.

I found but few of the bluejackets at it, as there was only one of H.M. ships in port at the time, and I never happened to visit the Institute on a day when the men got leave to go ashore, but I was glad to learn that on such occasions they find their way to it in considerable numbers. There is a large recreation ground on the beach, very near the Institute, solely for the use of the men frequenting it; it is being nicely laid out, and will, it is hoped, prove very attractive. I was so pleased with what I saw of the work carried on in it, that I cannot too strongly recommend the Institute to the support of your readers, and particularly to those of them specially interested in the welfare of our soldiers and sailors. Very few, if any, large cities present greater temptations to vice, and facilities for indulgence in it, than Alexandria; and when it is considered that places for rest and refreshment, in which the men will not be exposed to allurements to vice, are scarcely to be found in it, the value of the Institute, even upon purely secular grounds, to our soldiers and sailors, will be readily admitted. But I plead not only for pecuniary help for it, but for personal co-operation, when possible, and Christian sympathy with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, on the part of the Lord's people who may be visiting Alexandria, if not residents there, as I know how much they appreciate such help in their arduous work.

I cannot leave the subject without some mention of a small party of soldiers of the North Irish Rifles, who used to attend the Sunday evening services at the Institute, though they had a walk of two miles to get to it, from their barracks at Raseltin. With these men, and some others, I had very happy meetings for Bible study, with prayer and praise, in an outhouse near their barracks, and found it very good to be with them, so hearty was their fellowship as believers. Some of them used to speak most gratefully of the labours of Colonel Doran, who commanded a regiment at Raseltin, not long ago, and used to hold meetings in this very outhouse, the use of which he had procured for the men; and he was specially remembered in their prayers more than once when I was with them. It was a poor little place to look at, but consecrated by the Holy Spirit, as not a few souls had been "born from above" in it; and I shall always remember with thankfulness the evenings which I had the pleasure of spending in it, with those dear soldiers of Christ.

I went on shore at Port Said, on leaving Egypt, hoping to obtain at the depôt of the Bible Society a supply of tracts for use on board the vessel in which I was a passenger for London. I found the depôt in charge of Mr. W. H. Taylor, "a brother," who deplored that his stock of tracts was wholly exhausted, and entreated me to do my best, on my return home, to induce Christian friends to send him out supplies, not only of tracts, but of wholesome literature of the periodical class (back numbers of The Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, and such like), for distribution amongst the emigrants on board vessels bound for New Zealand and Queensland, calling at Port Said.

Mr. Taylor particularly wishes a supply of good tracts in large variety. He cannot pay for them, but will undertake to distribute them judiciously, and as widely as possible, on board the vessels calling at Port Said; and I will undertake to forward, free of charge, such parcels of these as may be sent to me for him. He is indefatigable in his labours for the Lord, and holds a very trying position: like that of a sentry on outpost duty in an enemy's country, so isolated is he from Christian fellowship. Should any one of your readers have it in his power, therefore, to find Mr. Taylor out at Port Said, and give him a word of hearty encouragement and sympathy in the Master's name, it will be very grateful to him, and, in the Master's eyes, as the cup of cold water given to a disciple, which shall in no wise lose its reward.

FORFARSHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.—A Conference was held on August 11, at Newtyle, the subject considered being "Resurrection," in three aspects: (1) "The Lord is risen indeed" (Luke xxiv. 34); (2) "Ye are risen with Him" (Col. ii. 12); and (3) "Walk in newness of life" (Rom. vi. 4). Colonel Oldham presided, and Messrs. Henry Lakin and John Climie, evangelists, took part, as well as several ministers and friends. There was a goodly attendance, and believers were much refreshed.

GENERAL BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The seventy-second annual report, just published, though it does not record many or startling accessions from darkness to light, yet speaks of much loving and persevering toil, which will, it is fervently prayed, issue, sooner or later, in very blessed results. The Society's work is, for the most part, carried on in India and Rome, and in the prosecution thereof last year a good deal more money was spent than was actually received, the income amounting to £8100. The secretary is Rev. William Hill, Mission House, 60 Wilson-street, Derby.

SALVATION ARMY WORK ABROAD.

In Switzerland a man set fire to his enemy's house. Months passed by, and he was not discovered; but, being convinced of sin, and finding pardon and peace at a Salvation Army meeting, he delivered himself up to the magistrate, and was condemned to twelve months' imprisonment. From his prison in Lausanne he wrote two letters to the "Captain," in which he says; "I thank God I am saved: I have been praising Him that circumstances are nothing to Him. He keeps the soul that confides in Him, no matter where. I ask Him to keep me humble, childlike, and to make me more and more obedient to his voice." The man hoped to have been liberated before the end of his term; but in this he was disappointed, and writes: "Let it not be as I should have liked, but as He wills. God grant that I may always accept his will joyously, humbly, with love."

An old Jewess in Paris is another convert. One day she found herself in an omnibus, sitting by a Salvationist, who spoke to her, and invited her to go to their meeting. Living in a bad quarter, the woman did not like, at her advanced age, to go out alone at night. "Oh, if that is all!" said the lassie, "I will come and fetch you, and bring you home again." This was done, and being interested, and finding that the Salvationists were not Roman Catholics, the old woman went several times, with the result that she accepted Jesus as her Saviour. This poor old ouvrière, by dint of working from five in the morning to seven in the evening, is able to earn 75 centimes. Out of this pittance she joyfully gave a franc, and often puts small gifts into the collection.—En Avant.

MR. PASCOE'S WORK IN MEXICO.

Recent news from Mr. J. Pascoe has prepared his friends for disquieting tidings as to his bodily health. An "Occasional Record" recently received gave particulars of troublous times in Mexico, and closed with the intimation that Mr. Pascoe was about to cross the Channel in the hope of securing medical treatment for a very painful affection of the face. Accompanied by one of his daughters, Mr. Pascoe arrived in England on the 12th inst. Reaching Southport he presented a distressed appearance which greatly shocked his friends, who, however, were still more grieved, shortly afterwards, to hear Mr. Pascoe's case declared, after medical examination, to be one of inveterate and incurable cancer.

In a circular letter to his friends, Mr. Pascoe says: "Let the Lord do whatever seemeth to Him good. It seems that the real cause of the cancer was not the broken teeth which gave me so much trouble, but long, intense mental strain; and certainly our mission history of the past two years shows how intense that strain was. Whilst I have strength, I hope to write and print a clear history of what God has privileged us to do in Mexico, sowing the Gospel seed during the past sixteen years. I wish to render an account to our generous helpers, and assure them of the kind of work they have so lovingly helped me to do. I trust this will animate them to continue helping the glorious work of evangelising Mexico—work which my removal from the field will not stop, although it may become crippled for lack of means. My personal wants are not many nor great; but my family must not be abandoned. In their care the work is safe, and should not be neglected."

Mr. John Mercer, with whom Mr. Pascoe is staying, writes: "The disease is making rapid progress, and Mr. Pascoe cannot be long here. He said to me this morning: 'I am at peace, and just like a ship after a voyage at the mouth of the river, waiting for the tide to carry me into port.'" Mr. Mercer's address is, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.

WOMEN ON THE CONGO.

Some time ago a letter appeared in a Continental paper from the pen of a distinguished African explorer, decrying the further outgoing of lady missionaries to the Congo. It was given at length in several leading papers in this country, and tended to create an impression that may lead many friends to lose interest in our work.

At the outset he wrote, "The climate is, above all, detrimental to wives and mothers." This statement can only be tested by experience, and experience says that the statement cannot be relied on. Since our Livingstone Inland Mission was first established on the banks of the Congo, ten years ago, we have had no fewer than seventeen ladies there. Three of these have died in the service of the Mission, and their deaths can be traced to causes other than the climate. Ten ladies continue to carry on the work, and the others have at different periods retired from the field.

Five years or so ago, when our men were being rapidly carried off by death, the few women then in the field stood the climate remarkably well. They had a great many inconveniences to put up with, which are now, fortunately, things of the past. The comforts which our new and permanent buildings afford, enable our ladies not only to "exist," but to enjoy the work in which they are engaged, and which they are carrying on so successfully.

If the bill of health of our mission must be taken into consideration, as it should, the fact that we have not a single female missionary home on sick leave, ought of itself to prove something in favour of European ladies, for if the climate is less favourable to women than men, as has been said to be the case, how can these facts possibly be accounted for? With but two exceptions, all the ladies I refer to have been labouring in the Cataract region, which we know is less healthful by far than the Upper Congo or any of its affluents.

Again, Dr. Wolfe has seen, as he himself acknowledges, "few women" on the Congo, but I have seen them all, with but two or three exceptions, stopped at the stations where they are located, and observed their efforts to Christianise, civilise, and elevate. As their work abundantly proves, we could ill afford to do without them. He goes on to say that European ladies are "looked upon as slaves by the natives." But how can white women be looked upon by the natives as slaves, seeing that the natives have their own free women—women who exercise the right of choosing their own husbands?

As for the women of the interior, I know that they are no worse off in this respect than their sisters of Lower Congo. I speak from an experience of at least three and a half years. If English women are looked upon as superior—and superiority is readily admitted—how can the natives for a moment conclude that their white sisters are slaves? And even if European women are in their eyes slaves, that is no reason why a man should follow the example of many Europeans, and do as Dr. Wolfe says he ought, "from the point of humanity alone"—take a woman from the bush to "wife"—a custom too frequent in many parts of Congoland. Dr. Wolfe admits that he saw but "few European women." I feel sure that in several points he has come to hasty and immature conclusions.

I am thankful, as all missionaries are, to note the rising idea to send "wives and sisters" to Africa, and the idea, instead of being a dangerous one, if past experience is to be any guide for the future, will prove an incalculable blessing to the degraded and downtrodden daughters of Central Africa. THE JUNGFRAU.

So pure, so bright, so beautiful,
  O Jungfrau, thou dost stand
A witness for our holy God,
  In this fair Switzerland.

Above the world; in azure calm,
  No cloud upon thy brow:
Arrayed in heaven's unsullied white,
  Fair mount, I see thee now.

And as I gaze, I seem to hear
  From thee, this wafted word:—
Remember, Christian, thou art too
  A witness for thy Lord.

Thy foot doth touch this world of ours;
  Men see, and read thy life:
Can they discern thy heart is far
  Above its sin and strife?

Are they reminded of thy King
  When gazing on thy face?
Dost thou reflect in deed and word
  His holy, perfect grace?

Can Christ Himself no spot nor stain
  Behold in thee, his child?
Can He delight Himself in thee,
  And own thee "undefiled"?

O Jungfrau fair! thy word has touched
  Deep chords that none may hear
But One, who in this Sabbath calm
  Hath tenderly drawn near.

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM H. ROSS.

This young evangelist, whose contributions of poetry have occasionally appeared in our columns, passed away peacefully on Sunday, August 5. Though only a young man at the time of his death, he was widely known in London and the North of Ireland as a children's evangelist, having been first used in blessing when quite a lad.

MR. J. HALBMILLION, TANGIER.

The sad tidings came to hand last week of the sudden death, from apoplexy, on Wednesday, August 8, of this devoted agent of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Miss Jay, of the North Africa Mission, writes that his removal is a great loss to the work in Tangier, which he had only very recently commenced. He was a truly zealous and devoted missionary, and the Jews there already loved and trusted him, and found in him a worthy friend. To his widow his sudden and unexpected death is indeed a great blow. Our readers, we feel sure, will remember her in prayer.

AT THE MONTHLY MEETING FOR WORKERS on Wednesday, last week, at the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E., Mr. J. Merry read interesting extracts from letters received from Miss Macpherson, still staying in Canada, and from a letter just to hand from South Africa, giving an account of the work of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Dyke, in Basutoland. Miss Lowe brought forward the great need for more labourers in India, where Miss Reade's exertions have been so signally blessed. These matters were all remembered in earnest prayer, as well as summer evangelisation at the seaside, and Mr. Wilkie's important work at Blackwall in connection with emigrants, 500 of whom were about to embark for Queensland. Mr. Charles Inglis delivered a vigorous and helpful address on "Work and Workers."

"THE GOOD SAMARITAN" IN CHINA.—A few weeks ago a Chinaman at Amoy was rather roughly used by some highwaymen on the road whilst travelling, and was so injured that he had to go to the hospital of the English Presbyterian Mission there for treatment. When visiting the patients in the hospital the other Sunday, Rev. Henry Thompson, one of the missionaries, fell into conversation with this man, and began telling him the story of the Good Samaritan. The man was greatly struck by its similarity to his own story, and kept saying, "Why, that's just my case!" When Mr. Thompson came to the Samaritan the man exclaimed, "That is Dr. Macleish; just what he did; he took me in." Then the missionary went on to tell of the death of Jesus, which moved the man far more than he expected. It seemed too good to be true.

Nathanael—John i. 43—51.

This Scripture is of the deepest interest, because of the light which it throws upon the personal history of a Jew, who, living in the early dawn of the Christian dispensation, became a disciple of Christ.

(1) Note the Way in which Nathanael was brought to Christ.—It appears clear that he was brought to Him by the instrumentality of another. "Philip," we read, "findeth Nathanael" (ver. 45). Note concerning Philip that: (a) He was a disciple of Christ.—The first act of his discipleship was to speak of Him to another. (b) He was called to be an Apostle.—See Matt x. 3; Mark iii. 18. Surely this zeal for the conversion of others was one of his best qualifications for the office. (e) He found Nathanael on the same day that he found Jesus.—The young convert cannot begin too soon to witness for the Master. (d) He findeth Nathanael.—It would appear from this that he had been seeking for him. It is well to single men out in this way, and make their conversion our constant aim. (e) "He was of Bethsaida."—Sad words were spoken of this city by our Lord. (See Matt. xi. 21.) Faithful witnesses for Christ come from unlikely places. Sardis has its saints with garments that have not been defiled (Rev. iii. 4). (f) He had a message (ver. 45).—See here his own experience—the experience of others ("We"), a message full of Christ and of the Word of God.

(2) Note the Difficulty that presented itself to Nathanael.—Nathanael said, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" (ver. 46). Nazareth was a city of bad repute, and therefore Nathanael reasoned with himself that the Messiah could have no connection with it. It is not sinful to have difficulties, but it is sinful to succumb to them. No difficulty should keep men away from Christ.

(3) Note the Way in which Philip met the Difficulty.—"Come and see." He simply invited Nathanael to come and see Jesus for himself. (a) A word for workers.—Let hard questions alone, and invite the questioners to come and see the Saviour for themselves. (b) A word for doubters.—You are asking if Christ is indeed a Saviour? "Come and see."

(4) Note the Way in which Nathanael was received by Jesus.—"Jesus said of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." He has asked a question and felt a difficulty, but there has been honesty withal—"no guile." An Israelite" was a descendant of Jacob, who was called Israel, because he had power with God and prevailed (Gen. xxxii. 28). "An Israelite indeed" was a man having Jacob's spirit—a man of prayer, a man in sympathy with God—a man enjoying the blessing of God. Such a man was Nathanael? Nay, Nathanael was a better man than Jacob, for Jacob was full of guile.

(5) Note the Wonder expressed by Nathanael at the evident Knowledge of Jesus.—"Whence knowest Thou me?" Christ is the reader of hearts, and there was evidently something in the way in which he greeted Nathanael that made him feel that the secrets of his heart were known.

(6) Note how Jesus answers the Inquiry which Nathanael's Wonder suggests.—"Before that Philip called thee." The knowledge of Jesus precedes the use of instrumentality. How comforting to the preacher should this assurance be! His hearers have been seen by Christ before they have been seen by the preacher.

(7) Note the Faith in Jesus into which Nathanael was led.—He answered and said, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." He passes from doubt to faith. Reverently he bows before the majesty of Christ. He called Him Master; then "Son of God"; and then, in the triumph of his faith, he sees the God of Jacob, and exclaims, "Thou art the King of Israel." Nathanael is the Jacob of this hour, but Jesus is the Angel Wrestler.

(8) Note the promised Confirmation of his Faith.—"Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." Jacob had had a vision in which angels were ascending and descending (Gen. xxviii. 12). Nathanael shall see the grand reality. The ladder of Jacob's dream was a type of "the Son of Man"—a means of communication between heaven and earth.

International S. S. Lesson.

THE SPIES SENT INTO CANAAN.

Num. xiii. 17—33; Golden Text, Num. xiii. 30.

Introduction.—The people left Sinai on the 20th of the second month, almost a year after their arrival there. About a month before this came the first anniversary of the Exodus, when they kept their second Passover. From Sinai to Kadesh-Barnea was two hundred miles as the crow flies. "This vast crowd of human beings (from two to three million souls), of all ages, and of both sexes; the trains of beasts and waggons, with tents and baggage; the herds and flocks in long-drawn succession; would fill all the ravines, far and near, which pointed all in the same direction, and the progress made must have been equally slow and painful."—Geikie. The first march, a three days' journey, was to Kibroth-Hattaavah (Num. xi.), where the people murmured, crying for flesh; and God, in anger, first answered their cry by sending them quails, and then punished them with a very great plague. Some years ago, the late Professor Palmer visited Kibroth (the modern Tech), and found there the remains of an ancient camp surrounded by an immense number of graves. The second march was to Hazeroth, where Miriam and Aaron rebelled against Moses, and Miriam was stricken with leprosy (Num. xii.). The third march was to Kadesh-Barnea, which lies about fifty miles south-east of Beersheba, "just below the ridge which is the natural southern boundary of Palestine. It is the strategic stronghold on the southern border of Canaan. Here are two wells and a large pool, and the stream flowing from a rock. The Wady Qadees (in which stands Ain Qadees, the ancient Kadesh) is an extensive, hill-encircled plain, several miles wide, with shrubs and flowers, and grass and water, with abundant room for the encampment of Israel. It was the central point of the people for nearly thirty-eight years."

And Moses sent them to Spy out the Land (ver. 17).—But Deut. i. 22 tells us that this plan of sending spies came from the people—not from Moses, much less from God. Moses had told them to go up and possess the land which the Lord their God had set before them, and to go without fear. They reply by coming to him in a body, beseeching that spies should first be sent "to bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we should come." Moses, telling the story nearly forty years after, remarks (Deut. i. 23): "And the saying pleased me well." Whether there are facts unrecorded which could explain this strange acquiescence in their worldly wise policy, or whether this is another example of the failure of a man of God in a critical moment, we cannot now determine. The plan itself was evidently the child of unbelief. Even common sense might have argued that the God who had promised to give them the land, and who had never yet left them to take so much as a day's journey apart from his guidance, would certainly show them how they were to enter the land, and where they should go. They preferred to trust a "committee of investigation," rather than God! They expected that God would somehow help them to get the land, yet they could not trust Him simply to teach and lead them.

Get you up this Way Southward (ver. 17).—Rather, "by the Negeb, or South Country." The Negeb was a well-defined tract of country extending from the Dead Sea westward to the Mediterranean, and northward from Kadesh to within a few miles of Hebron. The time of the first ripe Grapes (ver. 20), i.e., July—August. The vintage is gathered in September and October. Unto Rehob.—Beth-rehob (Judges xviii. 28), at the foot of Hermon, and near the sources of Jordan. As men come to Hamath.—Or, "the entering in of Hamath" (2 Kings xiv. 25), now the Valley of Balbeck, a mountain pass in the northern frontier which bounded Israel's inheritance in that direction. This shows how extended was the examination made by the spies. Eshcol (ver. 23).—A rich valley on the north side of Hebron, which produces the best and largest grapes in all Palestine, and an abundance of many other sorts of fruit. Bare it between two upon a staff. In order to preserve the grapes from injury. Clusters have been mentioned eight, ten, and twelve pounds' weight. And they returned. There was much intercourse between Egypt and Palestine at this time; so that the spies would only have to play the part of Egyptians—an easy task to them—in order to get free access to all the land.

A Land that eateth up the Inhabitants thereof (ver. 32).—An allusion, probably, to fierce, desolating wars between the various tribes inhabiting it. It might be as difficult and costly, so said the ten spies, to maintain their footing in the land as to get one in the first place.

LESSONS.

(1) What Canaan was to the Israelites, a happy Christian life is to us. God had promised to give them the land if only they would obey Him: He has promised a new heart, and a new and happy life to us, and to everybody else, who will listen to his word. God, in his great love to Israel, was very eager to lead them into Canaan; so in his great love to us He earnestly desires to make us like Jesus.

(2) The spies, bad and good ones alike, all testified that the land was a good land; so, most people know, and in their hearts acknowledge, that it is a most happy and desirable thing to be a true Christian. To have one's sins forgiven, to hate all sin, to know God's love, and to love Him truly and tenderly, to be always confident and happy in his care and guidance, to be strong to control oneself, and brave to do right at any cost, to be kind, loving, faithful, and unselfish, who wouldn't be all this! Multitudes, who never live the Christian life, acknowledge that it is the best life, just as the evil spies acknowledged that the land was good.

(3) There are immense difficulties in the way of a true godly life—evil tempers, habits, desires, and all manner of selfishnesses to be overcome. We can no more cleanse our own hearts than Israel, unaided, could capture the walled cities of Canaan.

(4) The evil spies were evil because they saw the difficulties, but overlooked God's certain promise of help. When we acknowledge that God's service is best, but say that we are not able to enter it, we act as they did. They should have remembered that God's promise is as real as the frowning walls that guarded the Anakim cities, and far more mighty.

ILLUSTRATION.

Bunyan tells of the lion that stood near the King's highway, and frightened cowards by his awful roar and fierce appearance; but when the brave pilgrim went boldly forward, he found the lion chained: he could not reach him.

(5) The good spies were those who acknowledged all the difficulties, but who never forgot God and his word. "We are well able to overcome it," was their cry. They knew that though they were feeble, their God was mighty, and that to overlook Him was as foolish as it was sinful. This made them men of faith—made them great. Caleb came to possess Hebron, the very part he searched out as a spy, where the enemies were mightiest, and the land richest.

Application.—Beware of the spirit that answers God's "Come up!" with the miserable "I can't" of unbelief. There is always a "can" to God's "Come," and the brave and trusting will believe boldly, and go forward at command. God calls us to newness of life. Do we believe it? He calls us to overcome evil habits. Do we believe this?

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT do not, as was recently stated on the authority of a Calcutta paper, "practically keep the Bible out of the book-stalls at railway stations." The stalls are private property. The Government policy is to show no religious preference, lest discontent should be excited among the natives.

FRANCE.—The Signal contains an appeal for the union of three of the societies now seeking to evangelise France—the Société Evangélique de France, the Comité Central de la Mission Intérieure, and the Comité Parisien de la Mission Intérieure. The McAll Mission occupies an exceptional position, on account of the personality of its founder, and because its budget is almost entirely received from foreigners.

KOREA.—Recent letters from Korea state that the king has positively prohibited the teaching of Christianity in his kingdom. This retrogade step has caused much surprise and disappointment. Meanwhile, however, the missionaries in Seoul, the capital (some fifteen in all), will continue their medical and educational work, and the directly evangelistic work must wait until a more propitious season, which cannot be far distant.

BRUSSELS.—Pastor N. de Jonge is prosecuting a truly blessed work among the Flemish population of this city. In a pamphlet entitled, Emmanuel, recently published, he clearly discloses his personality as a Christian teacher, and his vigour as a religious organiser. His mission, "L'Evangélisation Urbaine," was begun in 1880, by some English and Belgian workers. Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from Pastor de Jonge, 83, Rue de Berlaimont, Brussels.

Letters to the Editor.

CHURCHES OPEN ALL DAY.

Sir,—A letter has recently appeared in the papers from the Archbishop of Canterbury to Lord Carnarvon, on the subject of keeping our churches open during the week. His Grace says that "he has long had the cause at heart," that "he wishes our churches should be more freely open for private prayer," that "he has never known of this trial once made being given up as a failure," &c. Surely, holding this opinion, he can order the experiment to be generally tried. It is ludicrous to think that the head of the Church of England should be unable, or reluctant, to carry out an innovation, of the benefit of which he says that he is satisfied.

It is this absence of thoroughness, this appearance of indifference, this want of hearty prompt action, which nowadays makes so many dissatisfied with the Church of England. Anglicanus.

[This want of thoroughness is not, we fear, confined to the Church of England.—Ed.]

THE LORD'S "TENTH."

Dear Sir,—I wish to draw the attention of your readers to the following extract from Dr. Gordon's speech in Edinburgh on July 22, reported in your issue of August 3:—"Let me urge you to return at least to the primitive plan of giving one-tenth of all to the Lord's work abroad. A large band of Christians in America determined to do this, and entered into a union for the purpose. They all corresponded with a secretary whom they appointed, and, after some time of thus giving, they reported that, with the exception of two or three, not only had they obtained vast increased spiritual blessing, but also great increase of financial prosperity."

This subject is coming to the front now, in view of the numbers offering themselves for mission work, and the great need of increased funds.

If any of your readers are willing to aid by their suggestions and co-operation to form such a union in England, will they signify it by a line to your care, with their address, so that we may correspond with them?—Yours faithfully, E. H.

PERNICIOUS LITERATURE.

Sir,—Mr. Samuel Smith's letter in your issue of the 10th inst. deals with a subject of the gravest importance, and I sincerely trust it will not be allowed to drop. Years ago, Lord Shaftesbury, speaking upon the same subject, said: "It is high time the Church was up and doing in the matter of the flood of corrupting and abominable literature that is poisoning the very heart of the nation." Few persons have any conception of the fearful extent to which this kind of literature is circulated, or the effect it is having upon the moral tone of the country. One sad comment upon this state of things may be found in the fact that at present a discussion is being carried on in one of the leading London dailies, as to whether God's holy institution of marriage has not proved a failure, and whether it could not be advantageously exchanged for some system of "Free Love." This has long been the atheist's dream, but surely it is a new thing and lamentable that an editor of an influential and widely-circulated journal could be found, not only to tolerate such a discussion, but deliberately to open his columns and invite correspondence upon it as one of the leading attractions of his paper.

While Satan is so busy with the printing press in disseminating evil of every kind, the question forces itself upon us, "What is to be done?" Law is utterly powerless to deal with the evil, except in its very grossest forms, and even then at the great risk of only increasing it. Education of itself merely enlarges the fertile field in which the seed may be sown, whether good or bad. It is to the Church of Christ that we must look to deal with this evil, for the power of God alone is able to cope with it. How then to purify the press, or rather to utilise the press in the name of the Lord for the spreading abroad of the knowledge of the truth, and of that which is pure and lovely and of good report, and thus to counteract the evil that is to be so widely done, is a question of the most vital importance, and it would be well if some of your readers would look the thing straight in the face, and suggest any practical methods by which this can be accomplished.

Yours, &c., H. D. Brown.

"PRAYER FOR SUNSHINE."

Sir,—It was certainly not my intention to make any "confident assertion," as Mr. G. P. Woollcombe supposes; and, in my letter, the only approach to such, which I can detect, is in the words: "We have not known that 'the Lord is our God, and none else;' therefore, the wheat and the barley are being destroyed, and the 'beasts mourn,' because the hay crop is perished." If Mr. Woollcombe will again look at my letter, he will observe that this is merely the deduction from certain passages of Scripture, and not intended to be an assertion.

If he will also read his own letter again, I think he will detect a fallacy. He quotes a premiss from Matthew's Gospel, and puts to it a conclusion of his own. What our Lord said was: "Love your enemies, that you may be like your Father; for He makes his sun to shine on the evil and the good," &c. The conclusion which Mr. Woollcombe attaches to it is, "We cannot assume that the fixed laws of nature are suspended or abolished in particular instances in order that thousands of innocent persons may be punished for the unfaithfulness of a certain section of the church," &c. I am not aware of any "fixed laws" of sunshine or rain; but I am aware, from numerous statements in the Bible, that the crops are destroyed to punish acts of national idolatry. And I am also aware that when David had committed adultery, numerous persons (innocent, as far as that crime was concerned) perished in the three days of pestilence.—Your obedient servant, 41, Queen's Gate, S.W. Robert Montagu.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at Woolaston, near Sydney, Glos., during the next few weeks.——For blessing on special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Winstone, Gloucestershire, on August 25, 26, and 27.——Also for a week's service by Mr. Richard Cory and Mr. Opie Rodway, at Blaenavon, South Wales, to commence Sept. 1. Pray for the salvation of many souls at these places.

HASTINGS.—Great blessing continues to attend the work among the fishermen here; so much so, that it has been thought necessary to have a place to gather them in. Mr. Stephen Hermitage has secured the Market Hall, in the Old Town, at a rental of £60 per annum, and we purpose opening it on September 2. It is intended to hold services on Sundays, and on one evening in the week. This is a work of great importance, as, to men whose lives are exposed to such danger, we cannot be too earnest in pressing home the truth that God loves them, and wants them to be saved. Many thanks to the friends who have sent parcels of books and tracts, which every day are distributed among men on the beach, and in their homes.

G. J. Copping, Evangelist.

4, Milward-terrace, Queen's-road, Hastings.

WITH THE MILITIA ON HOUNSLOW HEATH.—The 3rd and 4th Battalions Middlesex Regiment, and 5th Battalion Royal Fusiliers, encamped on the Heath, during the months of June and July, for their annual training. The number of men in camp was about 2500. The weather, during the whole time, was wet and stormy. This sadly interfered with our usual evangelistic and temperance work, the attendance often being unavoidably thin, and on some evenings the services had to be given up. Our best thanks are tendered to those friends who so liberally responded to our appeal in The Christian for tracts, &c., for circulation among the men; and we have reason to hope that these silent messengers, so gladly received by them, did their work effectually in the tents, when the truth could not be received from the living voice.

Samuel Wesley, Wesleyan Chaplain.

Hampton House, Hounslow.

IN CHICAGO the other day, the mayor of that city glanced at the large coloured posters on the bill-boards which are constantly shocking respectable people, and was so struck by their bold indecency that he immediately notified the firm of bill-posters who hung them that he had revoked their licence for putting up posters. It was also semi-officially announced that if the performance outlined on the bills was given, the theatre licence would be revoked. The firm promptly sent out a gang of men to cover the objectionable posters with white paper, and, that being done, the mayor permitted them to resume business. They have promised that hereafter all lithographs and show-bills of theatrical companies shall pass inspection by the chief of police before being posted. The example of Mayor Roche deserves to be followed by the mayors of other cities. The public deserves protection from such outrages. But what can be said of the plays of which these posters are a representation?—Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A plebiscite of Vauxhall Ward, London, on Sunday closing, shows 1739 in favour, 421 against, 171 neutral.

The Wesleyan Conference temperance returns show a considerable increase in the number of members, both juvenile and adults.

A return has been ordered of all houses licensed for the sale of intoxicants in England and Wales, with particulars as to the proportion of licensed houses to population, the number of six days' licences, early closing licences, and six days' and early closing licences.

Rev. Canon Barker, M.A., preached the Scottish Temperance League annual sermon, August 12, in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow. On August 13 a conference was held in the Queen's Rooms, when important papers were read. There was a crowded meeting in the evening.

FOREIGN.

In Camden, New Jersey, the drink licence fee has been raised from £50 to £200.

A Temperance Congress is to be held at Melbourne, Australia, in November next.

Topeka, Kansas, has more churches than any city of the same size in the country, and not one drink shop.

The Good Templars of Trinidad look sharply after the drink traders, with a view to the punishment of law-breakers.

Out of 199 tea planters in Darjeeling district, India, 196 signed a declaration condemning as a great evil the drink shops licensed by the Government.

It is stated that in Parkersburg, Virginia, the daughter of a man who had just obtained a licence rushed into court, claimed a hearing, and secured the cancelling of the licence.

Port Chalmers temperance workers, Otago, Dominion of Canada, after many defeats, have beaten the publicans and won the closing of public-houses at 10 p.m., all bottle licences to be refused.

Rev. J. J. K. Hutchin reports that a meeting of the native chiefs was held on the island of Rarotonga when the drink question was discussed, and a new law was promulgated. The law is intended to prevent the importation and sale of intoxicating drink, and the orange beer drinking of the natives.

Appeals.

Working Men's Mission (Collingwood-street, New-cut, S.E.).—This Mission is in debt, and the superintendents, the Brothers Young, appeal for help. The work is among very poor people. Donations will be acknowledged by the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or Messrs. Young, 32, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

Old Spectacles.—A lady who visits the aged poor in workhouse infirmaries is frequently asked for spectacles by the poor patients, who, for want of such helps to vision, are often prevented from reading the Scriptures. Mrs. Rivolta, The Manor Way, Blackheath-park, S.E., will gladly distribute any cast-off spectacles which may be sent to her for that purpose.

Y.W.C.A., Chiswick.—This branch is a young one, but doing excellent work. For the second time in two years it has outgrown the premises. New premises are being taken, but the committee have no furniture and no money. They can manage to raise all the working expenses, rent, &c., but they sadly need £50 for furniture to make this fresh start. The treasurer is Mrs. Hawson, Brandenburgh-road, Chiswick.

Buckland, Dover.—An earnest outdoor work is being carried on in connection with the Dover Railway Mission. As winter approaches, it is desirable that a building should be provided in which to continue the effort. A lady has bought a piece of ground, and an iron room is to be erected. Contributions will be received by Miss Lond, 110, High-street, Buckland, Dover.

Notices.

Mr. Eugene Stock, Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., earnestly asks the writer of a letter to him at Keswick, who only signed himself ἐλάχιστος, to send him his name and address, that he may be able to reply to the letter.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. C. F. Flad has resigned the curacy of St. Silas's Church, Toxteth-park, Liverpool, having been appointed to mission work in Tunis under the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews.

On Monday week a crowded meeting was held in the schoolroom of Christ Church, Dover, to take farewell of Rev. W. T. Milligan, who is leaving the parish. The devoted zeal and energy which he has shown during the four years that he has been at work in the district have endeared him alike to rich and poor, young and old, and many personal testimonies were given as to spiritual blessing received through his ministry. The Children's Scripture Union has been one of his most successful efforts, the number gathered together under his care having reached 500 on the books, and a weekly attendance of about 100. On Sunday evenings he has also had large gatherings of the poorest and of those seldom seen at a place of worship.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A special meeting to offer thanks to God for the partial restoration to health of Mrs. Marie Hilton, of the Stepney Crèche, after three months' illness, was held at the Friends' Meeting House, Ratcliff, at the close of the usual religious service on Sunday evening. Fervent prayer was also offered for Mrs. Hilton's speedy and complete restoration to her valuable benevolent labours.

At the ripe age of seventy-five, "old and full of days," has passed away Eliza, wife of Jesse Sessions, of Gloucester, a devoted servant and minister of Jesus Christ. Large-hearted, liberal-minded, cheerful, and hospitable, she will be greatly missed; especially will "The Home of Hope," of which she was the originator and superintendent, sadly feel her absence, and miss her motherly care. Her funeral was at Gloucester, on the 18th inst.

CONGREGATIONAL

Rev. W. H. Wilson, of Tutuila, for four years a missionary in the Somoan Islands, has severed his connection with the London Missionary Society, on being appointed Vice-Consul of Great Britain at Apia, Upolu, Samoa.

A Conference on Home Mission Work was lately held in Toronto, Rev. W. S. H. Fielden, secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, being present. A suggestion as to establishing a Board for home missions was considered, and there is a probability that such a Board will be formed.

In the report of the London Missionary Society, it is mentioned that the students connected with the Congregational Theological Hall, Edinburgh, have formed a Missionary Association, for the purpose of pleading in the Congregational Churches in Scotland on behalf of special objects connected with the Society's missions: and the students of Mansfield College, Oxford, with other members of the University, have also formed a Missionary Auxiliary, for the spread of information, and for the advocacy of the mission cause, especially among University men.

BAPTIST.

The first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. W. Knight Chaplin at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, Brunswick-road, E., was recently celebrated at a public meeting. The report stated that a wonderful work is being accomplished. During the year one hundred and seventy-six persons were received into church fellowship. About twelve hundred people usually attend the unday evening service.

Mr. F. E. Marston, a coloured gentleman from Kingston, Jamaica, at present a student in Regent's Park College, occupied the pulpit of Borough-road Chapel, Southwark, on Sunday last. Of him The Daily Chronicle says: "As a native convert, who has set himself apart for the work of the Gospel, he is a good instance, not only of the universality of the Gospel, but of the usefulness of missions among the heathen."

The Cambrian News reports a baptismal service held on the seashore at Towyn by Rev. J. A. Morris, of Aberystwith. It was witnessed by a multitude of people who came on foot from many of the surrounding villages. Some walked eight or nine miles to see the ceremony, and had to walk as many miles back again. An earnest address was delivered before the ordinance of baptism was performed.

METHODIST

Some hundreds of ministers are now preaching their farewell sermons, and will commence duty in their new circuits on the first Sunday in September.

A remarkable revival has been in progress at Leeds, in connection with special services held in Primitive Methodist Chapels, by Mrs. Towery and Mr. Aspland.

The scheme for providing a number of "select preachers" for City-road Wesleyan Chapel, London, which received the sanction of the Conference, has fallen through. It was proposed to make the chapel a kind of "Cathedral of Methodism."

As a result of a special mission, by Mr. G. Evans and his wife, in the Methodist New Connexion Chapel at Beswick, Manchester, a large number of souls have been brought into the light of the Gospel, and the spiritual work of the church has been greatly quickened.

The London First District Committee has recommened to the Foreign Missionary Committee of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, Rev. John Fletcher Porter, pastor of the new Tyndale Memorial Church, Bow, to take charge of the projected Mission to the Zambesi. Mr. Porter has been compelled, through amily circumstances, to decline the nomination.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A conference on evangelistic work is to be held by the two London Presbyteries on the third Tuesday in October.

Through the generosity of Mr. J. T. Morton prizes for essays on the advantages of the Sabbath Day are being offered to scholars in the Sunday-schools connected with the English Synod.

The Board of Missions of the Irish Presbyterian Church have appointed Rev. J. Stewart Crawford, son of Dr. Crawford, of Damascus, to be missionary to the Jews in the north of Syria, and Mr. Joseph M. Simpson as a missionary student to Queensland.

At the meeting of North London Presbytery last week, Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser was granted leave of absence for five months, in order that he might fulfil the appointment from the Pan-Presbyterian Council to visit the churches in Australia, and especially to congratulate the Presbyterian Church of Victoria on the attainment of their jubilee. Dr. Fraser sails on Sept. 15, and will return to this country in February next.

Rev. Duncan Sillars, of Haverstock-hill Church, London, has been spending his summer holiday at Carnoustie, N.B., where he introduced "services on the sands" for young people and others, and every afternoon addressed meetings, numbering from 300 to 500 persons. On Sabbath evenings the services were held in the U.P. Church, which was crowded on each occasion. As one result of the meetings over 120 young people joined the Children's Scripture Union.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Several of the district meetings of the Irish Methodist Church held their annual general session last week, and in each case arranged for the holding of evangelistic in services in every circuit within their jurisdiction.

The first annual report of the Bible and Colportage Association, in connection with the Presbyterian General Assembly, is now ready, and gives an account of the origin and aims of this new Society, together with many interesting facts arising out of the work of the agents of the Association.

The Irish General Assembly and the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland have agreed to carry on mission work unitedly in China, and the latter has proposed to hand over to the care of the General Assembly its two congregations at Jeres and San Fernando, in Southern Spain.

Succes-ful Gospel services were held during last week in a mission tent, at the popular watering-place, Warrenpoint, which is now filled with strangers from various parts of the country. Two services were held each day in the tent, and appropriate addresses were delivered by Revs. R. C. John-on and James Kirkwood. Several are believed to have been led to decision for Christ.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The proposed further extension of PREVENTIVE work in the North of London.

I beg to state to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN that many years ago the late Miss F. P—— wrote to me and inquired if I had any wish to add another branch of work to that already carried on. If so, she would be glad to help with a liberal donation from her "charity purse."

At that time my mind was impressed with the importance of ESTABLISHING DISTINCT PREVENTIVE HOMES, and what rendered the incident more striking was the offer of a house—suitable at least to make a beginning.

The late Miss P—— immediately forwarded a cheque for £75, so that might be carried on in separate Homes, and under circumstances as favourable as possible. God prospered the new departure: so much so that in the last published Annual Report it was stated that no less than 3,148 YOUNG GIRLS had been admitted. As Home Missionary Work extends in the streets at night, garrets, cellars, and abodes of crime and poverty in general, it is surely no time to fail to provide especially for rescuing

YOUNG GIRLS.

And so recently a lady drew my attention to the house,

459, HOLLOWAY ROAD.

The house was inspected, the situation carefully considered, and, while regretting the want of more garden-room in the rear, the Committee approved of it, and instructed me to negotiate for the purchase of the ground lease. The lease has been purchased for the sum of £750, and is now conveyed to the Trustees,

FRANCIS A. BEVAN, Esq.,
JOHN FAITHFUL FORTESCUE, Esq.,
Professor J. H. GLADSTONE, F.R.S.

Ground rent £8 10s. per annum.

If an apology were required for this further appeal, especially to Christian Ladies, the old, but ever true, proverb would indeed be found appropriate, namely:—

"PREVENTION IS BETTER THAN CURE,"

for out of a total of 616 applicants for admission received from January to June, 285 were on behalf of young girls—PREVENTIVE CASES.

DONATIONS towards the daily expenses of the SIX HOMES and OPEN ALL NIGHT REFUGE are earnestly solicited. Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, will take charge of Donations.

MR. JAMES B. WOOKEY,

Deputation Secretary of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" (For Waifs and Strays, now containing over 2,500 Orphan or Destitute Children),

Mr. Wookey is prepared, in connection with his Lectures, to Evangelize among the people, and will gladly avail himself of invitations from Ministers of any Evangelical denomination to occupy pulpit or platform on the Lord's Day, or on other occasions.

Mr. Wookey is now in Scotland, and will be glad to hear from any friends who can provide openings in September or first half of October.

The first meeting of the series is arranged for the afternoon of Sunday, September 2, in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow.

REV. J. OSSIAN DAVIES,

Richmond Hill Congregational Church, Bournemouth.

THE subject of our sketch this week has for some time been a prominent figure in London Congregationalism. He has, however, recently been led to accept an important charge at Bournemouth. As pastor and preacher his praise is in all the churches, and some account of his career will have a wide interest at the present time.

Born in the little town of Cardigan, in the year 1851, Mr. DAVIES is now in the prime of life and manhood. His early years ran in uneventful channels. After a course of education in the elementary schools of the town, he became connected with a printing-office, which opened his way into journalism. While yet in his teens he was a frequent competitor at the Welsh literary festivals—the celebrated Eisteddfodau, and many were the prizes which he carried off.

Welsh literature was one of the most absorbing of the studies of young Ossian Davies. He was quite early connected by membership with the Congregational church in that town. His intellectual pursuits were from the first sanctified by a high religious purpose. In the course of time he became a frequent contributor to the Welsh press, and then edited a weekly newspaper, published at Merthyr Tydfil. Later on he conducted the South Wales monthly organ of his denomination, Y Diwygiwr—"The Reformer." He also shared with another the editorship of a musical monthly.

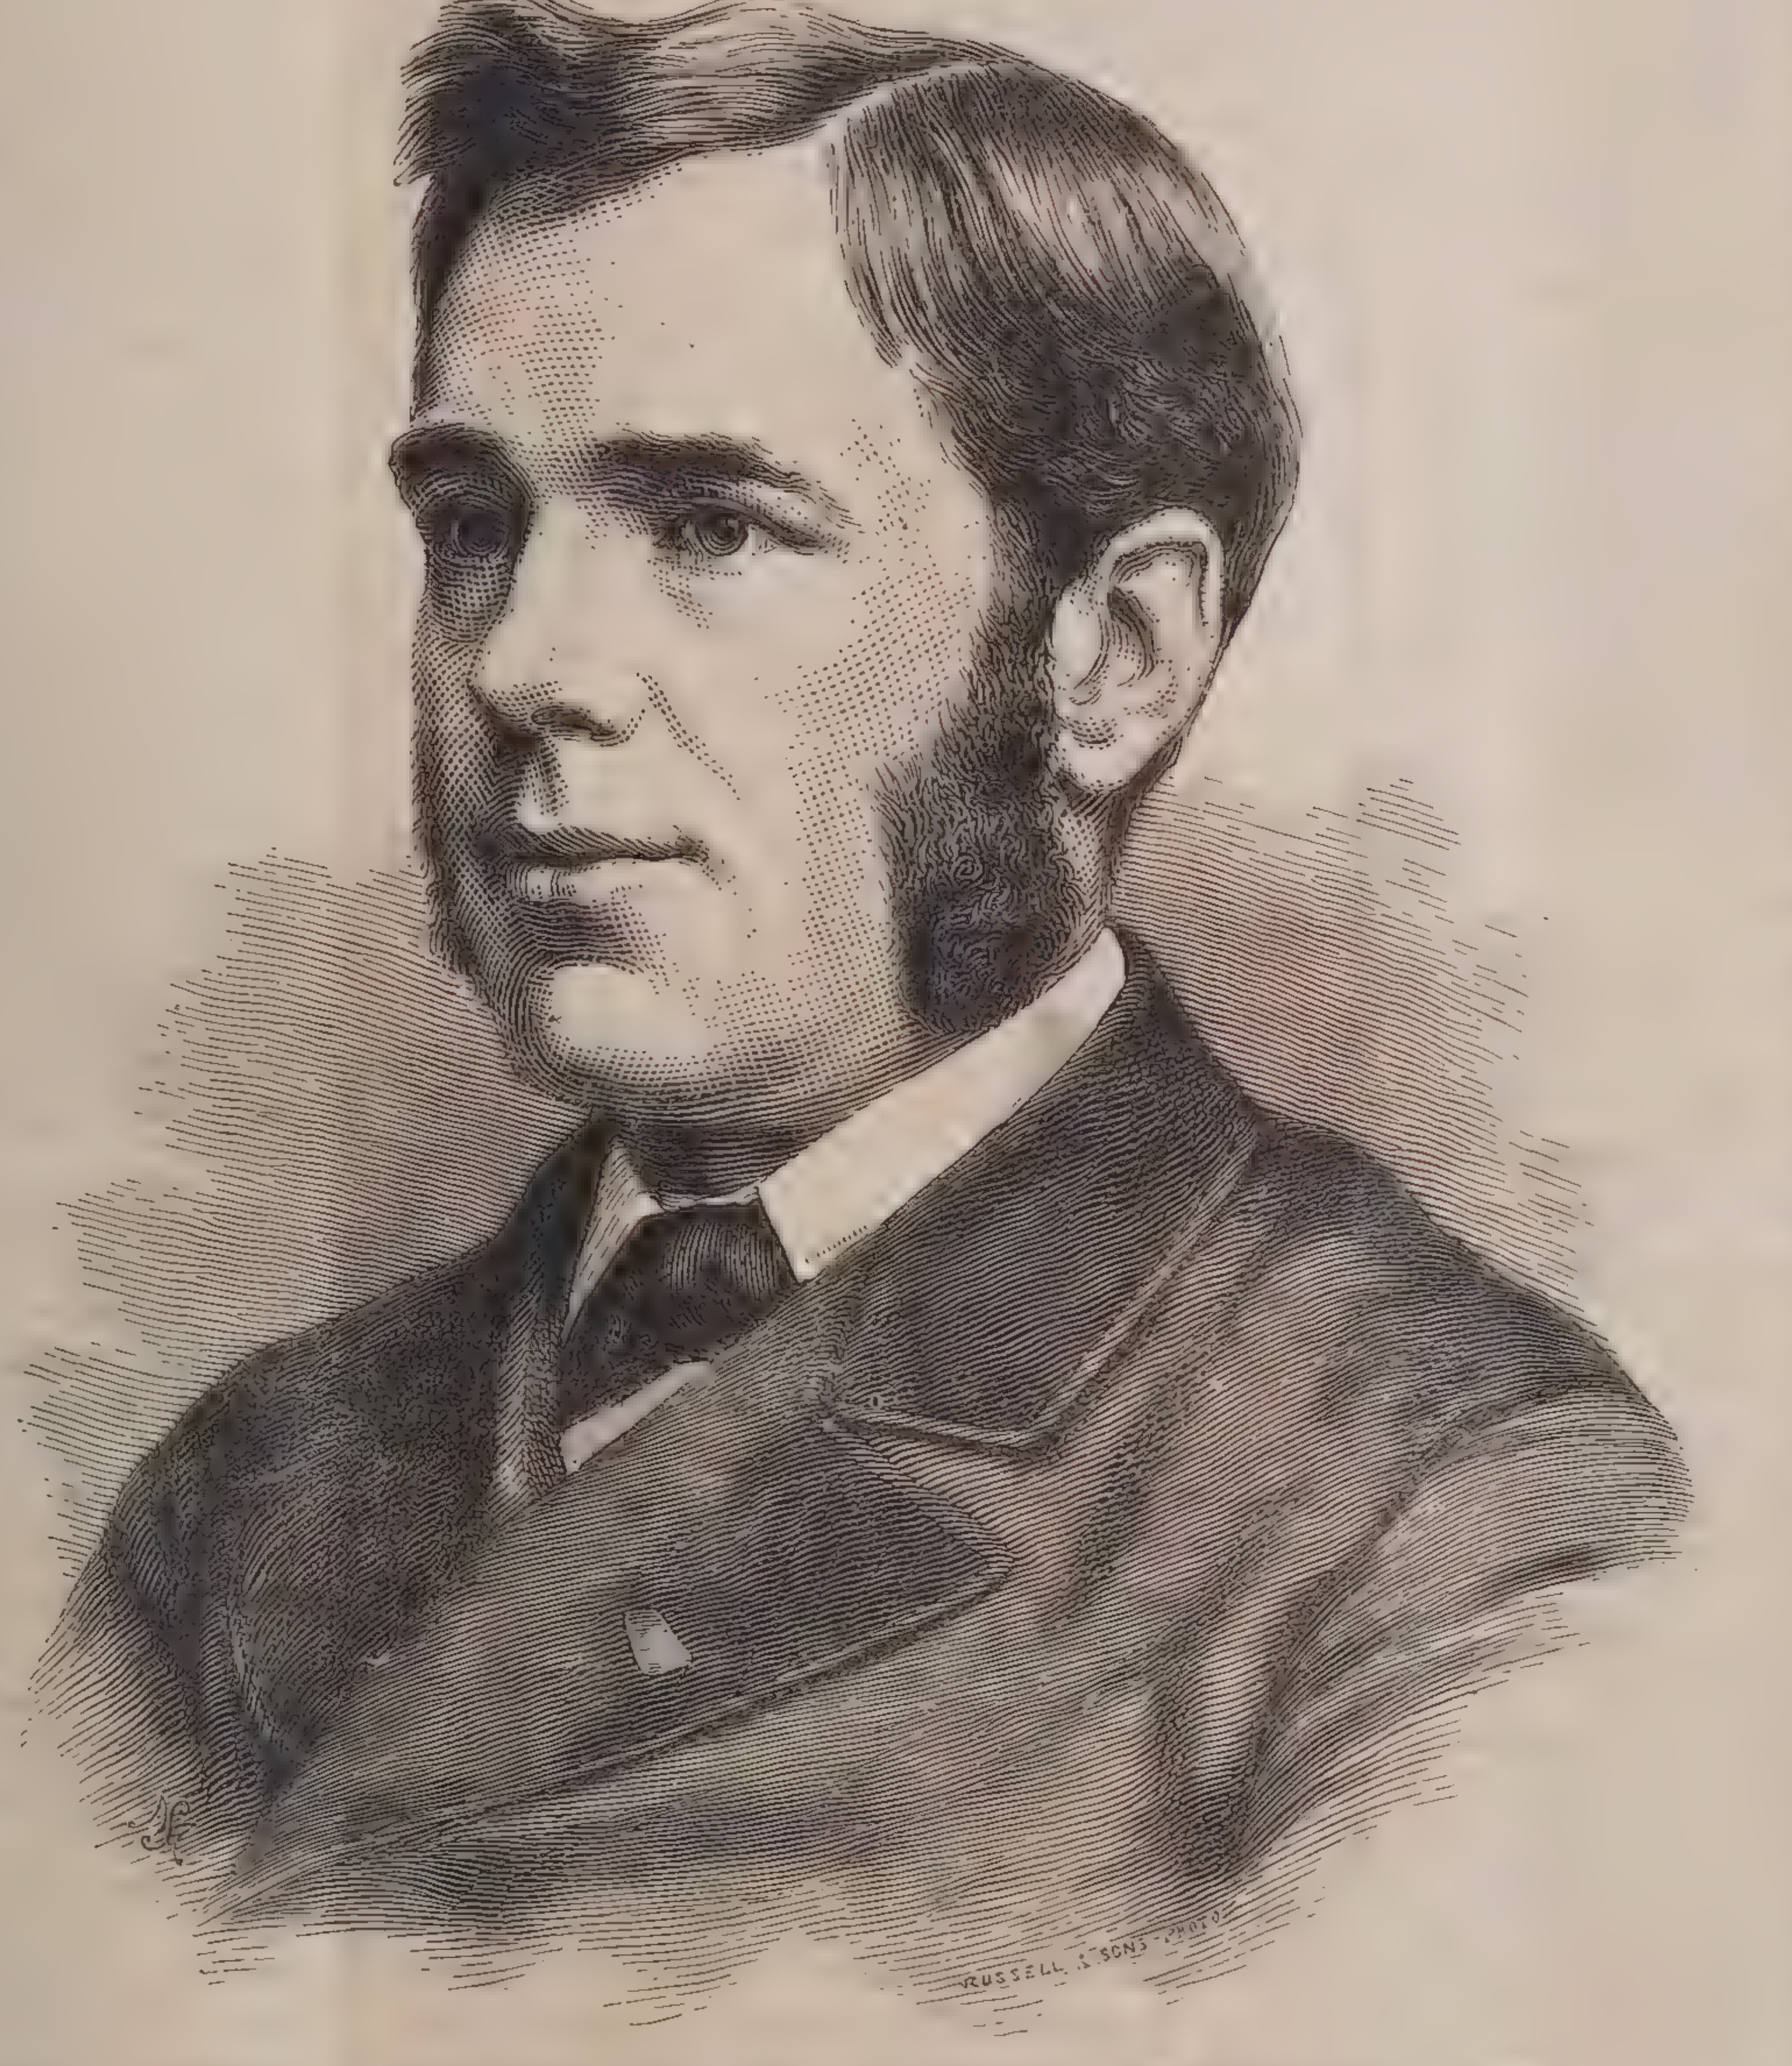
Turning his attention to temperance work, Mr. Davies became the United Kingdom Alliance secretary for South Wales. His powers as a temperance advocate were speedily developed. He was frequently urged to devote himself to the work of the Christian ministry, and after much anxious thought, he resolved to give up literary ambition, and seek evangelistic efficiency. His first efforts at preaching were full of promise; indeed, he quickly became quite a popular preacher, and his popularity has been sustained ever since.

After a successful course of study at Brecon Memorial College, Mr. Davies accepted a call from a young church at Llanelly, and soon gathered there a congregation of 1200 people. Hundreds were added to the Church during his pastorate of four years, and in every way his labours were much blessed. During his stay at Llanelly, Mr. Davies was in great demand both as a preacher and as a lecturer. His famous Welsh lecture on Popery was delivered over two hundred times—in fact, in nearly every town and village in the Principality. It is estimated that about £3000 were raised by it towards liquidating chapel debts, &c. A lecture on General Garfield has been delivered over one hundred times, and one on Christmas Evans one hundred and fifty times in different parts of England and Wales.

Moving into the English ministry, Mr. Davies took charge of the Countess of Huntingdon's Church at Swansea, where he laboured very successfully for a term of three years. He has, however, never entirely relinquished the use of his native tongue, but has spent a part of every summer in Wales, and frequently preached to his old friends there. Last June he preached at the Carnarvon Association to 6000 Welshmen.

Leaving Swansea, Mr. Davies accepted the pastorate of the church at New Court Chapel, Tollington-park, London.

In this third charge the Master's blessing followed him, and, after five and a half years of earnest and enthusiastic labour, he has just left the church in excellent working order. Not without apprehension on the part of his Welsh friends did Mr. Davies first accept the English call. Some of the more warm-hearted and clannish of his Cymric acquaintances, who had appreciated his native ardour, said in effect, "They will freeze you up in London; the English people have no hearts." Time, however, has altogether shown these fears to have been without reason, and it need hardly be said that Mr. Davies has been fully convinced that the Anglo-Saxon people are not behind those of the Principality in estimating and acknowledging true worth and industry. In London Mr. Davies was not slow in catching the ear of the religious public, and his repeated appearances on the May Meeting platforms show that his services were sought and valued far beyond the limits of his denomination. Religious and philanthropic societies found in him an able and efficient advocate, whilst the weaker churches of Congregationalism have rarely sought his help in vain.



(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, 49, Brecknock-road, N.)

pastorate, on March 1, 1883, the membership of New Court Chapel numbered 380; at the close, on July 8 last, they numbered over 950. At a valedictory meeting an address, signed by all the deacons, and a substantial testimonial of esteem, were presented to him. The address contained the following interesting sentences:—

> For more than five years you have sustained towards this church a relationship of a most cordial and happy character. No word of strife has been uttered; no sound of discord has marred the harmonious fellowship of minister and people. Your pulpit ministrations have gloriously upheld the traditions of the church. The promise which you made when entering upon the pastorate—that your teaching should be strictly evangelical—has been carried out to the full extent. The Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ has been faithfully proclaimed. Your manly, outspoken denunciation of the sins of the day; your consistent advocacy of the cause of the poor; your earnest appeals to the unconverted—have won for you the respect of all; whilst your consistent life has spoken even more eloquently and emphatically than any mere words could do in favour of the Lord Jesus.

To pastor and people alike the separation was a bitter experience. About 2000 people were present to hear the farewell sermon, and several conversions are said to have resulted from the solemn service. Owing to affliction in his family Mr. Davies had been advised to move to a more genial climate. Just at the same time the vacancy at Richmond Hill, Bournemouth, offered itself; in response to a unanimous call, twice repeated, he consented to become pastor of the church, and begins his labours there on Sunday next. In his new sphere, Mr. Davies will endeavour to give more time to developing church aid work in the villages, and so give practical effect to his desire to do his part in carrying forward the great commission. His friends in London and in Wales will surely wish him God-speed.

THE HOP-PICKERS' MISSION.

WITH the return of September we shall again be brought into contact with thousands of the poor from court and alley, who pay their annual visit to the hop-gardens of Kent and Sussex. And, as in former years, we are very anxious to be a means of blessing to them, temporally and spiritually.

If funds permit, we hope again to employ ten or twelve missionaries, to visit camp and garden, and to conduct open-air and tent services. We need parcels of boots and clothing, to enable us to shield many of the poor shoeless and thinly-clad from the inclemency of the weather; also contributions to help us to meet the somewhat heavy, though economical expenditure of the month, over our wide area of service. As many of our noble helpers of former years have "fallen on sleep," we urgently appeal for others in their places.

Parcels of tracts or clothing should be addressed, carriage paid, to me, at Marden Station (S.E.R.) J. J. KENDON.

Goudhurst, Kent.

ANGLESEA.—Lady Bagge writes from Penmaenmawr that she has lately visited the "Sailors' Rest" at Amlwch. She found that Mr. Richard Morgan and his wife, with little influence and help, but with much love to Christ in their hearts, are carrying on, not without some opposition, a most useful work both among the sailors and the ragged children, for whom they have started a Sunday-school. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, says Lady Bagge, are only in poor circumstances themselves, with a young family; a little help to them would be well expended, and would relieve them of much anxiety as to carrying on the work.

The Priesthood of Christ.*

III.

IN Heb. vii. we have the full-length portrait of our great and precious Jesus. All the shadows vanish in the full blaze of his glory. The typical sacrifices, priests, and temple, all retire, and we are left alone, with none save Jesus only. Thirty-one years after Christ's death, and seven years before Vespasian and Titus destroyed the Temple, the Apostle had to address this Epistle to Jewish Christians, to set them right as to the shadows and the substance. Probably many of these had been converted on the day of Pentecost by Peter's sermon. Between that day and the year A.D. 64, they had gradually gone back to the attractive shadows of an obsolete dispensation. How does the apostle do his work? By contrasting perfection with imperfection. In the past economy the sacrifice, priest, and worshipper were alike imperfect. Now the sacrifice, priest, and worshipper are all alike perfect. "Christ has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (ix. 26). He who has done this, and is now our great High Priest, is no less than the Son of God (vii. 28); and the worshipper is purged once for all, and has liberty to enter into the holiest of all (x. 2—19).

The word perfect is the key to the whole Epistle. It is used thirteen times in it. In chapter vi. 1, he entreats them to leave the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and go on to perfection. In other words, to abandon the shadows, and hold fast the substance. In the shadows they had the doctrine of "baptisms" and "laying on of hands." What were these baptisms? It is plain from the context that they were Jewish baptisms. They had often heard and thought of the bunch of hyssop, dipt or baptized in the blood of the paschal lamb, and then sprinkled on the door posts and lintels (Exod. xii. 22); also of the priests dipping the hyssop, &c., in the blood of the bird that was killed, and then sprinkling the leper seven times (Lev. xiv. 6).

Christian commentators have been frequently puzzled by "the doctrine of baptisms." Their difficulty has arisen from not seeing that the Apostle did not allude at all to Christian baptism. He was addressing those who were in danger of lapsing again into Judaism; he therefore alludes to Jewish baptisms. The same plural word we have again in chap. ix. 10. There it is calle "Washings," but in the Greek it is "baptismois." Eph. iv. 5 declares that Christian baptism could not be plural—one baptism. This is important, as limiting our thought to Jewish baptisms in this passage. The doctrine of baptisms included all the differen washings imposed on Israel of old. The priests were washed on the day of their consecration (Lev. viii. 6). They had to wash their hands and feet every day (Exod. xl. 30—32). Garments were washed (Lev. xiii. 53—59). Animals for sacrifice were washed (Lev. i. 9). The whole of the nineteenth of Numbers is occupied with cleansings by the Water of Separation. Thus we see how the whole Jewish ritual had habituated the Jewish mind to these "baptisms."

They were also familiar with the doctrine of "The laying on of hands." Often had they seen the children of Israel putting their hands upod the Levites (Num. viii. 9, 10). Moses laid his hands upon Joshua as the Lord commanded (Num. xxvii, 18, 23; Deut. xxxiv. 9). So had they often seen the Aaronic high priest annually laying his hands upon the head of the live goat, and thus typically transferring all the nation's sins to its head, and then dismissing it into the wilderness (Lev. xvi. 20—2). Now, the Apostle seeks to show them the substance of all these in Jesus, "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. v. 7). "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all" (Isa. liii. 6). Here, then, at the cross all is perfection. From the first promise in Eden, all down through the types and shadows, we see "the word of the beginning of Christ" (Heb. vi. 1, mar.). All pointed to Christ and find their accomplishment in Him.

How important, then, was it that these Jewish saints should leave (or abandon) the imperfect shadows for Christ the substance. No Christian teacher who understands this passage fully will ever tell young believers to leave the simple doctrines of the Gospel of Christ, that they may advance into something deeper. There is growth in the knowledge of Divine things, but all truth is based upon and intimately connected with the Gospel.

See how shallow were the views of these Jewish Christians. In their attachment to the Aaronic priesthood, they forget that before it existed at all, there was a more perfect one. In Melchizedek we have the contrast to Aaron and all his successors. Melchizedek had no predecessor and no successor. He received his priesthood from no human hands, nor did he transmit it to any human hands. He was constituted priest more than four hundred years before Aaron was separated to his priesthood.

Here then are two totally distinct orders of priesthood. Jesus must needs be after the order of one or the other. Which is it, then? Is it Aaron, and not Melchizedek? No, but it is Melchizedek, and not Aaron. Now this again determines the time and place of Christ's priesthood. It is only in heaven after resurrection that he answers to Melchizedek, of whom no earthly pedigree is recorded. In no other light could He be after the order or pattern of Melchizedek. The genealogies of Christ in Matt. i. and Luke iii. conclusively establish that it could not have been this side the cross. Thus we have all the shadows set aside, and are left again with none but Jesus.

Heb. vii. is a beautifully elaborate argument of the Apostle on the subject. It contains seven proofs of the point at issue. We look at Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 20, for the model, and in Ps. cx. 1, we hear the oath that Christ's priesthood is after this model, and not after the Aaronic. (Heb. vii. 21.) Then (ver. 23) he says the Aaronic priests were many: "And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death." So true is this, that from the date of Exod. xxviii., when Aaron was first called to the priesthood, till the death of Christ, which terminated all kinds of human official priesthood, there were no fewer than eighty-four Jewish high priests. One by one they passed away, being, like all other creatures, subject to death. On an average, they only lived about seventeen years and ten months. Think of the shock that a Jewish worshipper must have got when he saw the high priest lying a corpse! But, child of God, let it fill your heart and mine with joy, that our great High Priest dies no more. "Death hath no more dominion over Him. For in that He died, He died unto sin once: but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God" (Rom. vi. 9, 10). Here then we have the basis of his Priesthood now in heaven.

His atonement on the earth has disposed of the whole question of sin in the case of all who depend alone upon it. Their judicial justification rests unalterably upon it. To call that in question would be to call the work upon which it rests, and by which alone it is secured, in question. But this is not the only light in which the believer is looked at. He is a worshipper and a servant also, and Christ's Priesthood is to meet the many defects that God sees in his daily worship and service. These defects attach to us to the end of the journey. This is met by the truth in ver. 24, "Because He continueth ever He hath an intransferable priesthood." How long then are his people safe? Evermore. Why? "Because He ever liveth to make intercession for them." This is another text generally used to encourage the unsaved to come to Christ. That are told, and told truly, that He is able and willing to save the whole human family. They all may live—that none need die. No one can preach too full or too free a Gospel. But the best way is to get the exact truth out of each passage of the Word. Then, as the above passage is for the Lord's people, let us primarily apply it to them. Thus shall Christians be established in the knowledge of their completeness in Christ, and thus shall they make daily and holy use of his gracious Priesthood, that meets the iniquities of even our holy things (Exod. xxviii. 38).

Th' atoning work is done—
The victim's blood is shed,
And Jesus now is gone
His people's cause to plead.
He stands in heaven their great High Priest,
And bears their names upon his breast.

He sprinkles with his blood
The mercy-seat above;
For justice hath withstood
The purposes of love;
But justice now withstands no more,
And mercy yields its boundless store.

No temple made with hands,
His place of service is;
In Heaven itself He stands—
A heavenly priesthood his:
In Him the shadows of the law
Are all fulfilled and now withdraw.

And though awhile He be Hid from the eyes of men,
His people look to see
Their great High Priest again:
In brightest glory He will come,
And take his waiting people home.

XXII.—THE JOY OF HEAVEN.

A gentleman of wealth and position was brought to the Lord in a remarkable manner. He was as surprised at himself and the change which had been wrought in him as other people were. His heart was so full of happiness that he could not keep it to himself, but went about telling freely of his conversion.

Like the man we read of in St. John's gospel (see John ix.) whose eyes had been opened, he declared boldly, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." He was sure of this, and sure, also, that his sins were pardoned. He delighted in attending meetings, and was bold in his testimony and earnest in prayer. Having much liberty in speech, he was the life of such meetings; but he was also the life in another way of worldly society in his own house. His wife and daughters had not experienced the same change of heart which he enjoyed, and plainly declared that they did not desire it.

Our friend's house was continually full of worldly company. Dinners and dances followed one another in quick succession, and no one was more hospitable to his guests, or apparently happier in their company, than the colonel.

Account for this as you will, he was indeed a changed man, a rejoicing believer amongst believers; though in his worldly home, as gladsome and free as he used to be before his conversion. This manner of life was a great stumbling-block to Christians, and no help to his worldly friends; for even they could not respect such inconsistency.

It was evident, however, that God was not pleased, and therefore He sent chastisement upon his child, not in anger, but in love to awaken him to a better mind.

One day news reached him of the failure of a bank which swept away a large portion of his ample fortune. It was clear gone, and there was no remedy. He was taken aback for a little space; but, buoyant as a cork, he rose above his trouble, and said, "Thank God for what is left. It is only a few horses and servants less; we can get on well enough!"

This blow passed over him without having its desired effect.

The next blow was more serious. His eldest daughter, the belle of the neighbourhood, the charm of society, the best singer and the best dancer, besides being a very handsome girl, was taken ill of a fever. It became more and more malignant until every hope of her recovery was given up.

The poor father, in his anguish, did all he could to bear his testimony for her soul's good; but she heeded his warnings as little as Lot's sons-in-law heeded their father's.

Poor child! her mind was running upon the world and its amusements to the very last. She talked about what she would do when she recovered, and what others should do till then, and so on.

Alas! she did not recover, but died as she had lived, without God and without salvation.

Her father was distracted with grief, as well he might be, and declared that she was lost for ever; but his wife was most indignant at the idea that such a beautiful girl should be lost!

She endeavoured to console herself with the thought that her darling had gone to heaven, and her worldly friends, if they could be called friends, wrote letters of condolence, and tried to comfort her in her sorrow by telling her, "Amy is far better off now!"

The young lady's father knew better than this. He was sure from the teaching of God's word that there could be no heaven for any unconverted person—that there is no repentance in the grave, and no forgiveness there.

He saw plainly enough that it could do the departed one no good to say she had gone to heaven, and it might do deadly wrong to his wife and remaining daughter to let them suppose so.

Yet, with all this heavy chastisement and severe discipline, this gentleman was not awakened to see his mistake, or the worldliness of his life.

The next blow came closer home still, for he himself was brought down upon a bed of pain and sickness. Then he suffered greatly, and in a very short time his life was pronounced to be in imminent danger. He made his will, and all other arrangements, even to his funeral, and then gave up the world!

Obviously, it was rather late to give up the world when it had given him up. However, he did, and that thoroughly, and turned to the Lord.

Then it was that his eyes were opened to see the folly and inconsistencies of his life. His repentance was true and real, consequently his sorrow and humiliation before God deep. Humbling himself under the mighty hand of God, he was exalted. From the depths of darkness and abasement, he was raised up into joy and gladness. The joy of heaven was the atmosphere of his room.

Now he made it his one concern to speak faithfully to his wife and daughter, and to his servants one by one. He also sent for his acquaintances and neighbours, and frankly told them of his sorrow for his past inconsistent life.

I visited him from time to time, and continually found him rejoicing with joy unfeigned and full of glory. Truly the joy of God's presence was with him, so that it was easy to speak, or pray, or sing in that sick room.

I could not help putting the question to him, "Is this really the joy of heaven that you realise?" I did not doubt it myself, but I wanted an admission from him.

"Yes," he said, "I believe it is, and that to a most unworthy creature."

"How was it," I asked, "that you did not have this joy when you were in health and usefulness?"

"Ah!" he replied, "I know what you mean: I allowed the world to come between God and my soul, and that hid his face from me."

"Yes," I said, "you are right, it is so; I am quite sure that God would rather his children were joyful in health, and it is as easy for Him to shine upon them then as it is in sickness."

I must confess that I feel jealous of these sick and death beds, as if they were necessary for the perfecting of Christian joy.

This dear man died rejoicing, but not before he had pleaded earnestly with God for the salvation of his wife and daughter.

He was not, however, permitted to see the answer to his prayers; for they remained hard and rebellious, until after the funeral was over. Then, when all was still, their hearts melted, and the one and the other fell down before God, and sought and found pardon and peace.

For a long time mournful and sad was their life in their broken nest; but, for all that, they thanked God He had not forsaken or given them over to their own folly.

HOLIDAYS for the AFFLICTED POOR.

By means of the two Country Holiday Homes attached to the North-East London Gospel Mission, the workers are able to extend a helpful hand to many a poor afflicted woman found in the various districts in which the halls of the Mission are placed. No class is ineligible.

The close contact such missions maintain with the suffering poor around them, enables them to discern the really deserving, and, providing the means are to hand, they are able to wisely help every form of suffering. Should sufficient funds be forthcoming, it is hoped to continue these useful holidays to the afflicted and others for some weeks yet. William Chorley.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXIV.—THE SOUL'S ANSWER TO THE DIVINE SUMMONS.—GEN. xxiv.

CARRY back your minds for 3700 years. The soft light of an Oriental sunset falls gently on the fertile grazing grounds watered by the broad Euphrates; and as it lights up all the landscapes dotted by flocks, and huts, and villages, it irradiates with an especial wealth of colour the little town of Haran, founded one hundred years before by Terah, who, travelling southwards from Ur, resolved to go no further. The old man was smarting keenly at the recent loss of his youngest son, and after him the infant settlement was named. And so in time houses were built, and girdled by a wall in Oriental style. There Terah died, and thence the caravan had started at the command of God across the terrible desert, for the unknown Land of Promise. One branch of the family, however, that of Nahor, lived there still. His son, Bethuel, was the head; and in that family, at the time of which I speak, there was at least a mother, and a brother, Laban; and a sister in the first flush of girlish beauty, [illegible].

[illegible] is Rebecca who occupies the central place in the pastoral scene before us. All her young life had been spent in that old town. Daughter of the Sheikh though she was, yet she was not kept in that listless indolence which dares not soil the fingers with honest work, and which is the curse of so many well-born girls to-day. She could make savoury meat, and tend the flocks, as her niece Rachel did in after years on that same spot, and carry her pitcher gracefully poised upon her shoulder. She knew by name all the people who dwelt in that little town, and she had heard of those of her kindred who before her birth had gone beyond the great desert, and of whom hardly a word had travelled back for so many years. She little guessed the greatness of the world, and of her place in it; and in her wildest dreams she never thought of doing more than live and die within the narrow limits of her native place. Elastic in step, modest in manner, pure in heart, amiable and generous, with a very fair face, as the sacred story tells us, how little did she imagine that the wheel of God's providence was soon to catch her out of her quiet home, and whirl her into the mighty outer world that lay beyond the horizon of desert sand.

On this special evening a stranger halted at the well, without the little town. He had with him a stately caravan of ten camels, each richly laden, and all bearing traces of long travel. There the little band waited, as if not knowing what next to do. Its leader was probably the good Eliezer, the steward of Abraham's house, who had come there on a solemn commission from his master. Abraham was now advanced in years. Isaac his son was forty years of age, and the old man longed to see him suitably married; and though his faith never doubted that God would fulfil his promise of the seed, yet he longed to clasp in his aged arms the second link between him and his posterity. He had therefore bound his trusty servant by a double oath: first, that he would not take a wife for Isaac from the daughters of the Canaanites around them, but from his own kith and kin at Haran; and secondly, that he would never be an accomplice to Isaac's return to the land which he had left. This solemn oath was lit up by the assurance of the old man, that the Lord God of heaven, who took him from his father's house and the land of his kindred, would send his angel before him and would crown his mission with success.

Having arrived at the city well towards nightfall—"even the time that women go out to draw water"—the devout leader asked that God would send him "good speed," addressing the Almighty as the Lord God of his master Abraham, and pleading that in prospering his way he would show kindness to his master. The simplicity and trustfulness of his prayer are very beautiful, and are surely the reflection of the piety which reigned in that vast encampment gathered around the wells of Beersheba, and which was the result of Abraham's own close walk with God. There would be less fault to find with servants in the present day, if they were treated as servants were once treated—as souls rather than hands, and if they were encouraged to imitate, because they had learned to admire, the character of those with whom they live in such close contact. Alas! that servants in Christian homes often find so little to attract them to the godliness which is professed, but scantily practised.

It is our privilege to talk with God about everything in life.—The minutest things are not too small for Him who numbers the hairs of our heads. No day can we afford to spend, without asking that He should send us good speed. Well would it be for us, as we stand by the well at morning, or at eventide, to commit our way unto the Lord, trusting that He should bring it to pass. And if this be true of ordinary days, how much more of those days which decide destiny, which are the watershed of life, and in which plans are concluded which may affect all after-years. Nor is it wrong for us to ask a sign of God, if by this we mean that He would permit the circumstances of our daily lot to indicate his will, to lock with his inner inspiration, and to embody in fact, that which had already been impressed upon our own conscience. We have no right to ask for signs for the gratification of a morbid curiosity, but we are justified in asking for the concurrence of outward providence indicating the will of God. It was a holy and a happy inspiration that led the godly servant to ask that the damsel, who responded with courteous alacrity to his request for water, should be she whom God had appointed as a bride for his master's son; and it happened to him as it will always happen to those who have learned to trust like little children, "that before he had done speaking," his answer was waiting by his side.

We need not tell in detail all that followed: the gifts of heavy jewellery; the reverent recognition of God's goodness in answering prayer, as the man bowed down his head and worshipped the Lord; the swift run home; the admiration of mother and brother at the splendid gifts; the breathless telling of the unexpected meeting; the proffered hospitality of Laban, whose notions of hospitality were quickened by his keen eye for gain, and who spoke the words of welcome with extra heat because he saw the rich lading of the camels; the provision of straw and provender for the camels, of water for the feet of the weary drivers, and of food for their leader, and the refusal to eat until his errand was unravelled and its purpose accomplished; the story, told in glowing words, of Abraham's greatness; the narrative of the wonderful way in which the speaker had been led and Rebecca indicated; the final request that her relatives would deal kindly and truly in the matter; and their unhesitating and swift consent in words, that drew the old servant prostrate to the ground in holy ecstasy as he worshipped the Lord. "Behold," they said, "Rebecca is before thee; take her and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the Lord hath spoken."

Then from his treasures he brought forth jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment with which to deck Rebecca's fair form; her mother and Laban also received precious things to their hearts' desire. "Then they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night." In the early dawn, refusing all invitation to tarry, they started back again, carrying with him Rebecca and her nurse, and through the fragrant morning air the blessings of that little cluster of friendly hearts were wafted to her ear, as seated on her camel, and wrapped in a dream of girlish hope and wonder, she caught the last voices from her home. "They addressed Rebecca and said unto her, Thou art our sister, be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them."

We must thus pass over the details of this story, which carries on its forefront the stamp of inspiration and of truth; suffice it to say that it has no superior in this book for its rich, soft, placid style. It is full of those touches of nature which make all men kin, and which move them everywhere alike. I would rather elicit two or three further lessons to illustrate by it the Divine summons, and the answer of the soul.

I. A LESSON TO THOSE WHO CARRY THE SUMMONS OF GOD.—Let us saturate our work with prayer.—Like his master, the servant would not take a single step without prayer. Not that he always spoke aloud. No one would have known that the old man prayed as he stood there by the well. Nor did he arbitrarily dictate to God, but he threw the whole responsibility of the matter upon Him, who had ever shown himself so true a friend to his beloved master. He had a most difficult thing to do, in which strong chances were running against him. Was it likely that a young girl would care to leave her home to cross the vast expanse of sand in company with himself, a complete stranger, and to become the wife of one whom she had never seen? "Peradventure the woman will not follow me"; and if she were willing, her relatives might not be; but he prayed, and prayed again, and God's good speed crowned his errand with complete success.

We, too, are sometimes sent on very unlikely errands. Humanly speaking, our mission must be a failure, but those who trust in God have not the word "failure" in their vocabulary. Their hearts are centres from which the fragrance of silent prayer is ever exhaling into the presence of God. They succeed where they seemed menaced with certain failure. Christian worker! never start on any mission for God, whether to an individual soul or to a congregation, without the prayer, "Send me good speed this day."

We must also wait upon God for direction.—Abraham's steward asked that the chosen bride should be willing to draw water for his camels

A trifle this must seem to some, and yet it was a true test for a girl's nature. It showed a ready kindliness of heart, which was prepared to outrun the requirements of conventional politeness. It indicated a nature in which haughty pride had no place. Is it not a fact that in such trivial, unstudied acts there is a sure index of character? Very often God's servants make great mistakes, because they force themselves on souls, not living in the will of God, not seeking the indication of his bidding, not waiting until He should open the door of circumstance into some new life. We do not always realise the solemn mystery that surrounds each human soul, or the depths into which all spiritual consciousness may have receded, or the thick cake of worldliness and carelessness which may have crusted over the sensibilities of the being. God only understands all this, and we should do very wisely to wait expectantly and trustfully for Him to open up the way of access into the citadel of the heart. We may be sure that in this God will not fail us, but that whilst we are speaking He will hear and answer.

Let us say much in praise of our Master.—It is beautiful to notice how eloquent the old man is about his master. He does not say one word about himself, or extol himself in any way, so absorbed was he in the story of his absent, distant lord. Was not this also characteristic of the Apostles, who preached not themselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and whose narratives are like colourless glass, only letting his glory through? Alas! that we so obtrude ourselves, that men go away talking of us. Let us lose ourselves in our theme, and whilst we show the jewels of Christian character in our own department, let the theme of our message be: "The Lord Jehovah hath greatly blessed our Master, Christ, and has given Him a name which is above every name, and has raised Him to His own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality and power, and every name that is named; and He is worthy to receive power, and riches, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." And when success attends your words, be sure to give all the glory to Him from whom it has come.

II. The summons itself was a call to a simple, penniless girl to ally herself in marriage to one of the wealthiest and noblest of earth's aristocracy. It was not sent because of her worth, or wealth, or beauty, but because it was so willed in the heart and counsel of Abraham. Such a call is sent to every soul that hears the Gospel. In yonder azure depths lives the great Father God. He has one Son, his only begotten and well beloved. He has resolved to choose from amongst men those who as one Church shall constitute his bride for ever. He sends this call to you, not because you are worthy, or wealthy, or beautiful, but because He has so willed it in the counsels of his own heart, and He longs that you shall be willing to detach yourself from all that you hold dear. This is His message: "Hearken, O daughter! consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people in thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty: for He is thy Lord; and worship thou Him."

And if that call is obeyed, thou shalt lose thine own name, sinner, in his name; thou shalt be arrayed in his fair jewels; thou shalt share his wealth; thou shalt sit down with Him on his throne; all things shall be thine. Wilt thou go with this Man? Wilt thou leave all to be Christ's? Wilt thou give thine unseen Lover thine heart to be his for ever? Come and put yourselves under the convoy of the blessed Holy Spirit, who pleads the cause of Jesus, as Eliezer that of Isaac, and let Him conduct you where Jesus is.

III. How to deal with this summons.—We must find room for it.—"Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared a house and room." The master saith, "Where is the guest-chamber?" There was no room for Christ in the inn, but we must make room for Him in the heart; or, at least, we must be willing that He should make room for Himself.

We must bear witness.—"The damsel ran, and told them of her mother's house." As soon as you have heard the call, and received the jewels of promise, which are the earnest of your inheritance, you must go home to your friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for you.

We must not procrastinate, or confer with flesh and blood.—Men, and circumstances, would fain defer our starting on pilgrimage. This is Satan's method of breaking off the union for ever. There must be no dallying or delay, but when the inquiry is put to us, "Wilt thou go with this man?" we must promptly and swiftly answer, "I will go."

The journey was long and toilsome; but all the way the heart of the young girl was sustained by the tidings told her by the faithful servant, who beguiled the weary miles with stories of the home to which she went, and the man with whom her life was to be united—"Whom having not seen, she loved; and in whom, though she saw him not, she rejoiced." She already loved him, and ardently longed to see him. One evening the meeting came. He had gone forth to meditate at eventide, sadly lamenting the loss of his mother, eagerly anticipating the coming of his bride, and interweaving all with holy thought. And when he lifted up his eyes across the pastures, the camels were coming, and the two young souls leapt to each other. Happy meeting, which made Rebecca oblivious to all the trials and hardships of her journey, and the loss of her friends. Emblem of the moment when the work of the Holy Ghost, our gracious Conductor, will conclude in the presence of our Lord, the true bridegroom of saintly hearts, and we shall see his face, and be for ever with Him, going no more out for ever.

THE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION of Great Britain held its annual Conference on Thursday and Friday, last week, at Southampton. Delegates were present from different parts of the country, and also from America and Australia. Rev. Van Horn presided, basing his address on John xx. 30, 31. Subjects of great practical and spiritual interest were discussed, and the proceedings were characterised by much cordiality.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—Sir,—Your readers are familiar with the interesting work of the Broussa Orphanage. It is a work of faith and love. One great want just now is a suitable matron—a thorough Christian, and one whose influence among the children would be salutary and powerful. Love to the work of caring for God's orphans must be the chief inducement to offer for this service, but I may mention that Broussa is beautifully situated, and that the climate is healthy. Letters may be addressed either to Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-terrace, Regent's Park, N.W., or to myself.

"OPEN DOORS IN JAPAN."

Miss McLean's statement, in her pamphlet bearing the above title, to the effect that the language of Japan may be quietly picked up by the new missionary with an occasional lesson, led a correspondent to write to us for information respecting the Japanese tongue. He also asked as to the income on which a European might comfortably support himself in the country.

Replying to these questions, Miss McLean writes:—I wish to call your attention to the fact that I speak of the Japanese language as an overhanging difficulty until it is acquired, and of the advantages accorded the present-day candidate for missionary work among the highly-educated Japanese particularly, who are thirsting for Western culture and a knowledge of English. If, however, in addition to imparting a knowledge of English, &c., the teacher should care to devote part of his time to learning Japanese, so as to know it colloquially, he can do so by hearing his pupils speak, and by taking an occasional lesson with a teacher.

The newly-arrived teacher-missionary will soon find out that what is of first importance to the Japanese learner is a knowl[illegible]ly English, and much time has to be give[illegible]tent sort of work, and mind and body a[illegible] feel tired, so that he or she, in attemptin[illegible] learn the Japanese language even in a general way, should go to work "quietly" by picking up words, pronunciation, and taking an occasional lesson with a native teacher. The missionary who goes to Japan to work among the masses, where a knowledge of English is not of the first importance, will find that for three years at least he will have to confine himself to close study with his teacher before he can be said to speak fluently and grammatically. Indeed, Japanese, as well as Chinese, has to be studied every day for twenty years if a scholarly knowledge of it is aimed at. But as to pre[illegible]ing the Gospel clearly, all who do so in England are not scholars, nor is it strictly needful that they should be in Japan.

Women of all grades in Japan write their letters in "Hiragana," Japanese monosyllables, of which there are fifty. To learn to write them out is not difficult; but, in order to express one's self through them, one must, to say the best, have a colloquial knowledge of the language. The educated males write by means of a blend of Chinese characters and Japanese Kalla, called the literary style; this, I feel sure, is a gigantic work for a missionary to undertake in addition to his other duties. Few missionaries, so far as I know, attempt it. To become proficient speakers is a great attainment, and as much as can be expected of them. It is is difficult to say how long it takes to learn a language, as much depends on one's talent for languages, and the time given to it.

As to living in the open parts, this is much dearer than in native cities. For personal necessities I should say £150 would be necessary at an open part, and £100 inland; but if several could live together, this, as is evident, would reduce expenses. But it should be remembered that one would find himself cruelly handicapped were he obliged only to have regard to his private needs. There is the support of the indispensable factotum, viz., the native teacher—perhaps doctors' bills, hospitality, which is Christian courtesy as well as a Christian duty. With reference to those who send forth representatives, I would say, Do not tie them down to bare needs; be the consecrated channels through which God may supply "all their needs."

DUBLIN.—Mr, Charles Inglis will conduct evangelistic services in the Merrion Hall during the month of October, and Mr. George C. Needham, of America, during November, December, and January next.

THE NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

The Sixth Annual Conference of Christian Workers for Bible Study, and the consideration of ways and methods for the prosecution of work in the Master's vineyard, under the lead and direction of Mr. Moody, opened at Northfield, on August 1, with an unprecedentedly large attendance. Every building was pressed full and running over, so that many, like Abraham of old, took to living in tents, where the inmates get along comfortably this warm weather. The new hotel, built at a cost of nearly 75,000 dollars by the evangelist's friends, this season, is also filled, while cot-beds were put up in some of the out-buildings to accommodate the guests. Incidentally it may be mentioned that this structure is some distance from the school buildings, but it is near to a new church which Mr. Moody and his friends are erecting, and it is whispered that in future years the Conference may be held at this church. This is the evangelist's last building enterprise, and he has joined hands with the village Congregational society, that the two schools may have some more convenient place of worship. It is to be a handsome and comfortable structure with a seating capacity of 1200. That it may be the more comfortable, that modern church annex, a social parlour, will be located near the entrance, and, at Mr. Moody's request, there will be a broad-mantled cheery fireplace in this room, a token of welcome to the incoming guests.

THE FIRST DAY.

The first public meeting was not held at the Stone Hall until evening, but there were many closet gatherings during the day for guidance during the session. There were more than 500 in the hall at the first session, and promptly at the hour appointed Mr. Sankey came upon the platform, and, with his old-time power, sang out the words :—

Praise Him! Praise Him! Jesus, our blessed Redeemer!
Sing, O earth—his wonderful love proclaim.

Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe were among those present.

Mr. Moody, who dispenses with the fuss and feathers of addresses of welcome, as that is stamped upon everyone's countenance, called, without delay, for a season of silent prayer.

Rev. Dr. D. W. Faunce, of Washington, read the parable of the healing of the blind man, for the purpose, he said, of trying to answer the question, why Christ spent so much time on this miracle. It was to teach us the use of means, to show that a miracle is not the breaking of the law, but its control by a superior law. Every false miracle ignores the human side, which is recognised in true miracles. The great argument for the divinity of Christ is not so much the teaching of the Bible, as the fact that when a man feels himself forgiven, he cannot help worshipping his Redeemer.

Rev. William W. Clark, of New York, followed, after the rendering of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, and "But that is all" by Mr. Sankey. He gave the first formal address, taking for his subject. After commenting upon the vital importance of Biblical study, he quoted Spurgeon's words: "The gold mines of Scripture are not on the top soil; you must open a shaft. The precious nuggets of experience are not picked up in the roadway; there secret places are far down." Let us now open a shaft in this mine of wealth, and explore its deep recesses and hidden passages.

The historical is the uppermost stratum, or the top soil, seen by anybody at a glance. Let anyone take up the Book, and he will see that it contains a history. He might discredit the Bible statements, but he would be compelled to admit that it is a history. Everyone accepts the historic, but all do not accept the moral and practical. The Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, and the parable of the Good Samaritan, contain moral lessons. The lessons of obedience, virtue, and upright living are often unheeded, like the unruly boy, who says to his teacher: "Give us the story without the moral." A man may be master of its historic and moral portions and yet be unsaved. He must open the shaft deeper down, and find the next layer, before he can find salvation for himself, or offer it to others. The spiritual is the most important of all. The two earlier are merely preparatory to this.

It is the Holy Spirit that teaches this third phase of truth. There are many noble-hearted philanthropists to-day, who go about doing good in imitation of the meek and lowly Jesus, but they regard Him only as a man, and not as the Son of God. With patient steps they follow Him as far as Calvary, and then turn aside. The cross, the blood, the death, and the resurrection, are nothing to them. They see in the Bible a wonderful history and a beautiful code of morals, and that is all. Repentance, conversion, and regeneration are the great spiritual truths presented in the Gospels, and these are the truths that save the soul. The typical or figurative layer is deeper down. It is not essential to salvation, as is the spiritual, but it is necessary for the full understanding of the Scriptures. The old creation typifies the new; the Paradise of Eden foreshadows the Paradise of God; the judgment of the Flood speaks of the judgment to come.

The dispensational layer is deeper still. By dispensational truth we mean that method of Scriptural interpretation which locates in each age or dispensation that particular truth which belongs to that period. We must distinguish between the Lord's coming for his saints and his subsequent appearing with them; between the first resurrection and the second; and between the judgment of believers for rewards, and that of unbelievers for punishment. With the promise that the Holy Ghost "will show us things to come," we can see the future as vividly as the past, and can behold the Son of Man coming in glory as we have seen Him coming in humiliation.

Then, again, all truth is not eternal, that is, all truth is not always true. Dispensational truth is limited to the dispensation; eternal truth is unlimited as to time or place. "God is love" is an eternal truth, but his law on Jewish ceremonies and ordinances is dispensational. "Trust in the Lord and do good" is an eternal principle, but the promise following is dispensational: "So shalt thou dwell in the land, and be fed." Paul trusted in the Lord and did good, but, instead of being fed, he suffered hunger; and, instead of dwelling in the land, he was carried to Rome. John the Baptist trusted in the Lord and did good; but, instead of dwelling in the land he had his head taken off in the prime of life. The first part of the fifth commandment is an eternal truth; the latter part is not. The Word of God is wonderful, because He is wonderful.

THE SECOND DAY.

Mr. Moody spoke for the first time at the opening morning session on Thursday. He took for his theme the first of Paul's three great chapters,

ROMANS VIII.

He said: This chapter opens with "no condemnation," and closes with "no separation." That does not mean that there are no faults or infirmities in Christians. My children have a great many of both, but they are not under condemnation. And not only that, but there is no condemnation to come. About half of God's dear people are living under the delusion that they are under what they call the judgment of the great white throne. Every true believer has already passed death and the judgment. As Paul went through this chapter, he gradually rose in thought to the conceptions of adoption, sonship, and heirship. When a man adopts a child, relations change; so with God's relations to the converted. When a man addresses God as the Almighty God, I don't believe he really understands sonship; if he did, he would say, "Abba, Father."

Comparing the fruits of the flesh with those of the Spirit, and reading Gal. xv. 19—21, Mr. Moody said that there is no difficulty in telling who are living in the Spirit and who in the flesh. You see a man driving like Jehu six days of the week to get money, and on the seventh he doesn't like the minister's exposition of the Bible, because it's got too much of the Bible in it, and does not care for the Sunday-school class, and you know he is living after the flesh. As a merchant stamps his goods so Christ stamps his disciples.

I don't believe any man is fit to be a servant of God till he understands his relations with God. A great many churches are filled with guests; they don't get any further. There are others who are servants; but the position of a child is very different from that of a servant. The child has liberty. Still further, to be a joint heir means equality. Did you ever think how the heirs of glory are protected? The angels are encamped about them. How precious we are in his sight! And so, if this chapter is so, we have nothing to fear, for "all things work together for good to them that love God."

In closing, he mentioned "nine things that we know": Whom we have believed; that we are of God; that the Son of God has come; that we have passed from death unto life; that He abideth with us; that He heareth us; that when He shall appear we shall be with Him; that we shall be like Him; and that, if this earthly house is dissolved, we have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. If you get as much out of this chapter as I have, he added, you will know where you stand; and it is a great thing for a man to know his standing for time and eternity.

After two or three short prayers, several of the brethren dwelt on the necessity of thinking of Christ's love for us, and not our love to Him.

Mr. G. C. Needham followed with an address just adapted to the needs of the day. His subject was

THE SPIRITUAL MAN AND SPIRITUAL MINDEDNESS.

How is the spiritual to be evolved from the carnal? Is it by evolution. I do not deny this doctrine. I gladly acknowledge the existence of this law, both in nature and in grace; but I do not believe in its popular application. What is evolution? It is the act of unfolding or evolving. In the process of growth it is known as development; so says Webster. The foundation principle of homœopathy is "like cures like;" the primary law of evolution is "like produces like," and, according to this law, you cannot evolve a spiritual man out of a natural man. Nature herself fully corroborates this testimony.

Our Bible teaches us that creation stands at the head of all material things—the Creator, whom we adore as our Father, being the Fountain of Life. And we also are taught that at the head of all things spiritual is Christ. The spiritual man is a new creation in Christ Jesus. Not by any process of evolution or abstract law of development does the animal man become a spiritual man. Every natural quality may be evolved out of a natural man. Courage, energy, culture, skill, knowledge, habits, behaviour—these things come out of a natural man, but do not constitute the elements of spiritual life. Not only can natural things be evolved out of a natural man, but you can also embellish him, you can sugar-coat him till he becomes a complaisant Pharisee. He may go to church; so can a mouse. He can say prayers; so can a parrot. He can read his Bible; that requires only very ordinary education. He may give money for religious purposes; that may be one of the acquired habits.

The natural man may offer incense and present sacrifice, keep holy day, and observe ordinances; but, if he yet remains only a natural man, God demands, "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me?" The religion of the natural man is but natural religion; he is a stranger to the religion that is supernatural. He can bring forth only after his kind. The brook trout never brings forth a cod-fish. That which is born of the flesh is flesh.

Regeneration is the only process by which one can enter the spiritual kingdom. In this divine arrangement, as the natural man passes over into a spiritual existence identity is not lost. A new nature is imparted, called the divine nature. This is not the product of the flesh, but of the Spirit. Regeneration gives us the spiritual man in embryo. There is no room thereafter for development. The saint is there, but in infancy; the new creation is there with all the possibilities of spiritual manhood. By regeneration then, and by regeneration only, does the sinner become a son of God. No longer a criminal under condemnation, but a justified believer through Christ, an heir of eternal life; no longer an alien, but a citizen of the new Jerusalem, in whose heart the devil finds a place no more, for there the Holy Ghost resides as in a glorious temple.

A common objection is thus stated: "I do not believe in the possibility of this new birth, unless all its mysteries are explained, and all its phenomena understood." What? oh, vain questioner, will you deny in the sphere of grace what you allow in the kingdom of nature? We listen to the question, "How can these things be?" while we pity the conceit which demands an explanation. Has nature no secrets? Is the birth of the natural man an understood phenomenon? Is the transformation of carbon to diamond an open secret? You believe the theory; but do you understand the mysterious change? Do you know all about the wind, its constant change? whence it comes, whither it goes? So is every one that is born of the Spirit. As the natural man knows the things of a man, even so the things of God are known by the Spirit of God. And the spiritual man has received the Spirit of God, that he might know the things that are spiritual. With such a teacher, then, as the Spirit of God, the Christian will have his faculties and powers trained and developed. Not only is knowledge imparted to him, but the ability to acquire that knowledge is given him.

Abiding in Christ is absolutely necessary in order to retain spiritual vigour, or, in other words, vital godliness. Think on heavenly things, love heavenly things, study heavenly things, and you will become heavenly minded. Whatever our business—a carpenter, or a shopkeeper, in factory, or on a farm—our business first and last always will be to cultivate our higher nature and to be exact in every duty, because of love for our Divine Redeemer. Mr. Needham closed with these rules for spiritual mindedness:—

(1) Be much in prayer.
(2) Study God's Word for yourselves, that you may feed upon it.
(3) Watch against every kind of temptation.
(4) Shun every appearance of evil.
(5) Do not act on policy or expediency, but in obedience and faith.
(6) Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God; and
(7) Look, watch, wait for the Lord from heaven.

THE JERUSALEM OF AMERICA.

The evening session took a missionary trend, Rev. Dr. Chester opening with a spicy talk. He began by saying that he had never seen so many people with a smile on their faces as here, and he thought Northfield must be the Jerusalem of America. When he went on to apologise for talking upon missions, and said there might be a little pious grumbling, Mr. Moody broke in with, "Oh, no; this is Northfield," which started the Doctor on his missionary tour. He said, after remarking how few were going into the work from America: "Some say there are heathen at our doors. Yes, and for every heathen in America, there are 100,000 to tell him of Christ. In Dindigal, Southern India, I am the only doctor and minister, which would be in the proportion of one doctor and minister to the whole of Philadelphia. I believe that those churches who do the most for foreign missions will do the most for home missions, for their own towns, for Brother Moody in his work here, and for every good work; and I also believe that those Christians who are least interested in foreign missions are losing a blessing, the greatness of which we will only know when we stand before our Father's throne.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, of the Hebrew Mission in New York, gave some account of his work, stopping for awhile to discuss the Gladstone-Ingersoll controversy; and he was followed by Evangelist Chas. H. Yatman, of New Jersey, who recalled the influence of Mount Hermon, two years ago, in the cause of missions, relating, by way of illumination, several telling personal incidents and experiences.

THE THIRD DAY.

At the morning session Mr. Moody gave his second

TALK ON ST. PAUL'S WRITINGS.

Taking up 1 Corinthians xiii., he said: If we could get the Church of God to live in this chapter for thirty days, I believe the disciples of Christ would be doubled. It was one of the highest mountain peaks to which Paul ever climbed. It told us whether we had the Spirit of Christ. Many a man is preaching the Gospel who would do as well if he only blew a tin horn, or rang a tin bell. A man might be a very good doctor, lawyer, merchant, astronomer, or geologist, but not a Christian, without love. Love surpassed even prophecy. It is better than faith.

I have very little sympathy with heresy-hunters. A man may be ever so unsound in patience and love, without hindrance, but if the least tincture of unsoundness in faith is detected, then he is pounced upon and driven away. When men like George Peabody gave large endowments to good institutions, God looked at the motive; if love to God prompted them to do these things, then their acts were acceptable. True love is not easily provoked. If a man gets out of communion with God, he thinks others are full of evil. The only way for us to get this love is to be constantly doing something for God. Some one has described this world as two great mountains, one of sorrow, and the other of gladness. If we could take a little from the first and add to the second, we would keep in the love of God.

If there is no one loves you, it is because you don't love anyone else. The way to reach men is to let them know that you love them. Life is an echo, after all. I snap you, and you snap back. You let one of your family be a snapping turtle, and you have a good deal of grace or you will be snapping back. Urging the importance of doing what we can for the friends we love, Mr. Moody said that a kind word before people die is worth a ton after they are gone.

The other address of the morning was by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, who first asked Mr. Stebbins to sing, "In the Secret of His Presence." It struck the key-note in the address, in which Mr. Taylor showed how we are to live in the spirit of the chapter just expounded. He said: First put Christ in this chapter, and then put yourselves inside of Christ.

IS IT TO BE BY THE IMITATION OF CHRIST?

You might paint a beautiful picture of a tree, but could not make it bear any fruit. It is the fruit we want that has its seed in itself. That makes the difference between fruit and work. It is not by imitating Christ's character that you will get it reproduced. Reading 2 Cor. iii. 18, the speaker continued: The idea of the original is that of mirroring, both beholding and reflecting. It is the work of the Lord to give, develop, increase, and perpetuate the spirit of life. Neither drawing nor painting, but the very thing itself is to be reflected in you, and you are to be plain mirrors, without a veil, looking directly into that love of Him. When we pray in his name and go out to live in it, He recognises us, because we have a right to it.

One hears many of God's children talking about their leanness, weakness, and poverty. We ought to be done with all this. Can't we leave behind our poverty and weakness and needs and littleness—nay, our very selves, when we have all the wealth of God? You take a mirror and hold before it a nosegay of flowers. What do you see reflected? "Grace for grace" (John i. 16). As many flowers as there are in the nosegay, so many are there in the mirror. As many hues as there are in the nosegay, so many hues are there in the mirror. It is not a poor copy, but the very thing; and as long as you keep that nosegay there, it is mirrored in the glass. We want to be like the Master, having all the graces blended so that you can't tell which is prominent. But if you take a little veil and put it before one of these flowers, that flower will not be represented in the mirror. There are so many veils between, and we don't take time to be holy. You can't be holy in a hurry. Unless the Lord attunes your heart every morning before anybody else strikes it, you can't get it in tune again all day. We must so love our Master that we can love to be alone with Him. We rush into the closet, and pour out our cares, discharge our volley, so to speak, and then rush off, without waiting for what He has to say to us. Is it any wonder that He is grieved and withdraws Himself as the bridegroom does in the song of Solomon? Let us take time to receive of his fulness, and meditate on his character. If we were more on the mount, we should see more of the transfiguration of Christ. And when we come from the mount, our faces would shine like that of Moses. Moses was forty days alone with the Lord, and some of us have not forty minutes a week alone with Him. Is it any wonder that our faces don't glow like that man's? Praise God for conventions, but I would rather lose them all than lose the time alone with Jesus. We hear of Him and are helped toward Him in the meetings, but it is when we are alone with Him that He feeds us. If we want to keep up this oil of gladness, we must be alone with the Master.

There were two informal meetings in the afternoon, Mrs. George C. Needham talking at Stone Hall on woman's mission, and Mr. Yatman upon the nuggets of gold from God's Word. In the evening the hall was again filled, when Rev. W. W. Clark gave a sermon on "Christ in Hebrews," in which he showed that the great lesson of the book is looking unto Jesus as He sits on the throne.

THE FOURTH DAY.

Interest is on the increase as the meetings progress, and the last day of the week was much more inspiring to the many souls here, than the first. Mr. Moody treated in an expository manner dwelling at length upon the number of those who had witnessed the resurrection of Christ. That this resurrection could have been palmed off, as stated by those who thought it was a sham, would be a greater miracle than the resurrection itself. The question of how this was done, so constantly harped upon by Christians and sceptics, was referred to. While Mr. Moody did not understand the mysteries of the "how," he let in much light by his happy illustrations, by reference to the dead seed that springs up and becomes the beautiful plant, and the noxious caterpillar, which weaves its shroud about itself, and then becomes a beautiful butterfly. His peroration upon the sting of death, taken away by this resurrection of Christ, was most beautiful and impressive.

1 CORINTHIANS XV.,

Mr. Hudson Taylor then took up the same theme in his cheery hopeful manner, so conducive to higher living. He said: If you would be filled with the Spirit, you must be emptied of sin. Two bodies cannot occupy the same space, nor can the Spirit of God and sin dwell in the heart at the same time. I have met Cambridge men in my work in China who have left all behind to work for Christ in that land, and they are wonderfully filled with his Spirit as a reward for their sacrifice. Sometimes we must give up good things for this indwelling of Christ. On returning to England, I was so pressed with work that I could not find time for communion with Christ. I asked God in prayer if I should give up any of my engagements. The reply came, "If the pressure brings you nearer Me, then it is all right." And God blessed me in the work.

In the afternoon Mrs. Capron gave an account of her work in India, before a large number of women. In the evening Dr. Chester gave a stimulating address upon missions, which led Mr. Moody to remark at the close that such a man must weigh a ton in God's sight, and he prayed that more men might be forthcoming to prosecute this glorious work. Then Mr. C. H. Yatman, whose bright loving face speaks of the Godly spirit within, dilated most affectionately upon the Holy Ghost, urging all to pray for this power from on high.

The Niagara Conference.

The believers' meeting for Bible study was held as usual, at Niagara, July 18 to 25. The gathering proved to be one of the largest, and one of the most notable, ever held at this place. The little village of Niagara, lying at the broad mouth of the river of that name, just where the waters of the river blend with those of Lake Ontario, seemed sleepy enough in the summer sunshine to busy Americans and Canadians coming from bustling towns and cities; but even this was gratifying and refreshing. The very perpetual drowsiness of the place, with its departed glories of deserted barracks and forts, only added to the appropriateness of the locality for a place where tired workers had come for quiet meditation. One has enough of bustle all the year round to make a few peaceful days appreciated. The village, the still-flowing river, the placid lake, the blue skies, the crimson sunsets, all seemed to breathe over again that message of long ago, "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile!"

But no natural causes, however efficient, can explain the blessings of peace that came upon us at the Conference. The Holy Spirit will have the praise for this, now and for ever. His presence was felt very manifestly from the first. It was soon evident that the many visitors had come together in the spirit of unity, and in the bond of peace, gathered for the single purpose of worshipping our common Head, even Jesus, who is our peace. Thus the spirit of prayer brooded over the audience day by day; prayer for personal blessing and consecration, prayer for the hearers, and prayer for the several speakers. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, after one of his addresses, spoke of this, as if speaking had been made easy. But he did not need to mention it; we had seen it in his talk, and had known that we were helpers together with him.

Oftentimes this silent prayer would find its overflow. And, oh! what burning words would be poured forth from hearts burning with desires almost too deep for utterance. There would be no waiting for others, then; no "filling up of time"; nothing formal or oratorical; but quick, quiet, yet intensely earnest, pleadings for the outpouring of God's Spirit, and the coming of Christ's kingdom. Many of us learned at such times that the presence of the Holy Spirit settles many difficulties; that the wounds of all denominational differences were healed before the Name that is as sweet ointment poured forth; that the problems of methods, and ways, and means were all solved; that where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty—liberty of worship, of communion, and of service.

It was the habit of the Conference to meet every morning at 9.30, to spend half an hour or an hour in prayer and in praise. Immediately after this came the first morning Bible-study, and at 10.30 the second morning study, till 12. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon came another study, and at 4 further teaching was listened to, until 5 o'clock. Again at 8 in the evening the people met for testimony and prayer, or to listen to some special topic, such as a talk upon missions. These meetings were all held in the Pavilion, built in the hotel grounds overlooking the Lake.

The subjects this year were peculiarly helpful for such trying times as these last days. Satan has insinuated himself into many holy places in America during the last few years, preaching from more than one pulpit to the unsettling of faith, promoting forms of godliness, but denying the power thereof. "The devil is most devilish," says one, "when he is most respectable," and one needs to be well warned against his respectability, if one is to see his devilishness. Deep and reverent study of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," is the only thing that will do this, and it was just this that the Lord graciously permitted and provided for us. Prof. T. O. Lowe, of Ohio, spoke upon the Holy Spirit in the Pentateuch; Dr. Munhall, of Pennsylvania, upon Inspiration; Rev. Wm. J. Erdman, a rarely gifted and rarely humble man, upon The Personal and Premillennial Coming of Christ, in the Pentateuch; Mr. Geo. C. Needham, of Massachusetts, upon the Spiritual Man; Prof. W. G. Moorehead, of Ohio, upon The Person and Work of Christ, in the Pentateuch; and Dr. Albert Erdman, of New Jersey, upon The Blessed Hope. At other times, Rev. T. C. Des Barres, of Toronto, spoke on Fellowship; Dr. S. H. Kellog, of the same place, on the Gospels and History of Christian Doctrine; Rev. E. P. Gardner, of Missouri, Christ our Life; Prof. Lowe, upon the Holy Spirit in Joshua; and Dr. J. F. Kendall, of Indiana, on the Antichrist. Upon the morning of the Lord's Day, Rev. T. C. Des Barres preached in the Pavilion on the Christian Soldier, while other brethren spoke from various pulpits in the village. At twilight the Lord's death was remembered, and in the evening an evangelistic service was held, led by Mr. Thane Miller, of Ohio, in which several young men, active in connection with the Y.M.C.A. work, gave short addresses. On Monday, the Bible teaching was resumed, and continued through Wednesday. Dr. Albert Erdman opening up Methods of Bible Study, Prof. Moorehead giving expositions of 1 Thess. iv., 2 Thess. ii., and Rev. xix.; Rev. J. G. Scofield, of Texas, speaking of Bible Study, considered it from the standpoint of dispensational truth. Rev. Wm. J. Erdman opened the treasures of Rom. viii., as well as teaching us of the work of the Holy Spirit throughout the Gospels and Epistles.

With such subjects and teachers, and, above all, with the Holy Spirit performing his office work of testifying of Christ, one may imagine that deep and abiding impressions were made on human hearts. Indeed, one might have thought that no more could be given, and, certainly, no more contained. But God's measure is always running over, as well as pressed down and shaken together; and many of us learned such lessons of God's giving power, as well as of God's enlarging power, over human hearts, as we had never known before. Where God's presence and power have been felt, one does not like to speak of men, but it is needful. And we Americans are almost glad it is so for once, at least—for this time we have to speak of Englishmen; not "cousins," but brothers in the Lord, who, coming amongst us in all lowliness of mind, but in all fulness of faith, have been used to quicken and deepen the spiritual lives of some of our best Christian workers, and to promote among large numbers of our people altogether a new interest in our Lord's work in the foreign field. The names of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe have become as dear to many of us as to many across the sea. Twice at the Conference Mr. Taylor spoke from the fulness of his experience concerning the Lord's leading at home and abroad. The story of the China Inland Mission was told with such power and pathos as to be, to all who heard it, nothing short of a new revelation, not of Mr. Taylor, but of Mr. Taylor's God, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob—the God who hears and answers prayer. We will not soon forget Mr. Radcliffe either, whose voice was more than once raised in pleadings for the regions beyond. Many of us at such times realised, as never before, the sins of the Church in respect to the heathen, and such a spirit of prayer has been awakened in behalf of the Churches of England and America as will bring, we trust, showers of blessing upon these thirsty lands, and so upon the lands that lie in the region of the shadow of death.

Dr. Howard Taylor also spoke to us, telling us of the Lord's dealings with him in preparing him for work in China, and endeared himself by all that he said to the large audience present. The sweet story of God's dealing with Mr. G. B. Studd in China was also listened to with deep interest.

As a result of the rich Bible teaching given us during the Conference, a marked spirit of consecration was developed among most of the people present. One could not have told what the outcome was to be, or how soon it was to be manifested; but all of us felt as if the Lord Himself were moving deeply and mysteriously amongst us. Finally, a young man came to the Conference by invitation, and spoke upon Missions. His address was given on the last evening of the session, and was one of marked power. The speaker was Robert P. Wilder, the Princeton student who has been so much used among the colleges. This proved to be the Spirit's opportunity. Some twelve persons offered themselves for foreign service. One lady sent in a cheque for the support of a missionary for a year in connection with the China Inland Mission. Another lady promised to do the same. Six young ladies banded themselves together, asking for four others to unite with them in the support of a missionary. The four immediately responded. The Conference, as a whole, also gave money enough for still another missionary. Since the close of the Conference one young man has given a cheque for the support of another missionary, and two other gentleman, one a working man, have signified their intention of each having a representative in the foreign field.

All of these offerings were given to support workers in connection with the China Inland Mission, and the wish is expressed that the missionaries should be chosen from such workers as may desire to go out from the United States or Canada.

Will the Christian people who read this record of God's faithfulness unite with the people of the Niagara Conference in praise for God's presence and blessing; and will they pray that the good work begun may go on, led of the Spirit, to the glory of the Saviour's name.

The visit of Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe have been wondrously blessed. Mr. Taylor first attended the Students' Convention at Northfield, then the Niagara Conference, then went on to Chicago, afterwards spoke at the Ocean Grove Conference, then again at Northfield at the General Conference, then at Springfield; on August 12 and 13 at Clifton Springs, and then went on to Leockport. After speaking there, he visits Stratford (Miss Macpherson's Home), Belleville, Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, and, for a second time, Chicago, as he proceeds out West for Vancouver, en route to China. Mr. Radcliffe has been with Mr. Taylor so far, and will keep with him for the most part, till they reach Chicago. Everywhere they have gone, deep impressions have been made.

"Dr. Pentecost's power as a teacher and expositor of the Word is anew displayed in these Addresses; and we are not surprised to learn that there has been an earnest demand for their publication."—Word and Work.

"The Readings have lately been given to large numbers on the Author's late visit to London; and most profitable and spiritual they are."—Footsteps of Truth.

IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK.

OR, THE PLEASURE AND PROFIT OF BIBLE STUDY. Being an Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures.

By DR. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

With Introduction by Rev. JOSEPH COOK, and Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of THE BOOK. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

The workers are all honorary, receiving no salary whatever. Thus we are enabled to keep any person for a sum that seems quite impossible to many ladies and gentlemen. MRS. GINEVER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

SOME months ago, a lady visiting one of these Homes wrote in your columns an interesting account of her visit, so I thought, dear children, you would like to know a little more about this Home, and the two connected with it.

Of course, you all like flowers, especially those which grow in your own gardens; but if you did not plant a bulb, or a root, or sow seed, no flowers would spring up to gladden and cheer you. These beautiful tokens of God's love are cared for by Him, for vain would be your planting, if He did not send sunshine and shower. Alas! like all earthly joys, they pass away; but there is a garden you may all help to cultivate, that will blossom throughout eternity. It is Christ's own sowing and reaping ground in which he rears young plants for his heavenly kingdom, and He wants happy earthly homes in which these tender buds can be trained and taught to serve and love the great Husbandman. So He has given you parents to care for you, to look after your bodies, and seek the salvation of your souls.

There are many little children, who once, like you, watched for father to come home, and who lived in comfortable houses, and had a good mother to care for them, but who are now orphans and homeless. When they saw those they loved laid in the cold grave, their little hearts were very desolate, and they did not know what would become of them, but the Lord knew, for He opens houses which we call orphanages, to receive such needy ones, and sends all they want; but in so doing He uses earthly instruments, and sometimes very small ones.

When I was a little girl I purposed in my heart caring for orphans, and when I grew up the Lord carried out his purposes through me, so that now there are 130 orphans daily fed at the King's table and watched over and sheltered by the King and his servants. One Home has pleasant nurseries and many little cots, in which babies as young as ten weeks, and four months, old have been nursed tenderly and brought up to lisp the name of Jesus. In another Home, besides a few very wee bairns, there are a number of bright, happy children, who are being trained usefully, so as to be able by and by to earn their own livelihood. Several who have been brought up in that Home are now young women, and when they get their wages they do not forget to send help to the present inmates. These two Homes are in Holloway.

Besides these there is a seaside Home, Cuthbert House, Broadstairs, where dear children are received, who are not only orphaned and homeless, but crippled, paralysed, or otherwise afflicted. Notwithstanding their suffering condition, they are very happy, and enjoy the lovely sea and their pleasant garden. Many cannot walk, but have to be taken out in invalid carriages and perambulators. One little girl living there has had one leg amputated at Guy's Hospital, one has lost a foot, one a hand, another, a little French girl, was brought, quite helpless through spinal paralysis, from the University Hospital; one had her ancle bone removed at Shadwell; two were left afflicted and homeless at Mildmay. One little fellow who was received from Great Ormond-street after an operation, was expected to be always lame, but he has quite recovered and grown a fine boy. Some baby boys are now quite big, so now a Home is wanted where these boys can be educated and trained.

Some time ago, when this was much on my mind, a friend asked if I wanted money for any particular purpose, as she felt led to have a sale of work. I told her what was needed, and we agreed to use the money thus procured for the purchase of furniture and bedding.

After that an opportunity offered of selling our present house, and taking two large ones in the same neighbourhood; where, after necessary alterations are completed, there will be good accommodation for boys on one side, and girls on the other.

One evening a parcel of nicely made garments was left by the carrier. In it was a slip of paper, "From Ministering Children at Kew." A few days later, a missionary clergyman wrote to ask if a box of clothing and toys made by "ministering children" at Belize, and brought five thousand miles across the ocean would be acceptable. You may be sure I said "Yes," and it caused great pleasure to the orphans to see the box unpacked, which had been sent by the little black children. This led me to think that perhaps there were many little ones would like to help to furnish the new Home, so we determined to have a stall for the sale of any garments, toys, books, &c., that may be sent from children. It is always pleasing to receive children's gifts, and many in boarding schools, &c., have thus helped.

In one school the novel expedient has been adopted of lending each pupil a donation box for a week, and I am glad to hear our young friends have been gleaning more than enough to furnish one bed, which costs £5. One family has an annual drawing-room sale; and with the money thus gained maintain an orphan chosen for their very own.

Of course there would be no need of "ministering children," if there were none to minister unto, so our Heavenly Father says in his Word that "The poor shall not cease out of the land." Have you ever thought that the Lord in his loving wisdom has ordained it so, that your sympathy may be drawn out, and your character refined and purified by loving deeds and self-denying acts. When Jesus was on earth He not only helped the suffering and needy, but came into personal contact with them. The family who provide for one child, pray for her, write to her, invite her to visit them, and I am sure, if you would come and see us, and choose a little orphan boy or girl to befriend, there would be a joy in your hearts and lives hitherto unknown. And whilst you were praying for your own little one, their Saviour and yours would draw very nigh to you, and would abundantly bless "his ministering children." PHŒBE GINEVER.

A POEM FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

"Be sure your sin will find you out."—NUMB. xxxii. 23.

"Mamma, till now I never knew
Where I the text could find:
'Be sure your sin will find you out,'
So dwelling in my mind:

"It is in Numbers thirty-two,
And at verse twenty-three;
I'm glad I have discovered it,"
Said Willie dear, with glee.

"I'm glad you have, my darling boy,'
His mother kindly said;
"The words are very, very true
Which you have found and read.

"When tempted to commit a fault,
Or say a wicked word,
Or lie, or steal, or aught that is Displeasing to the Lord,

"Remember them, forget them not,
And know, without a doubt,
The words of God are true, 'Be sure
Your sin will find you out.'

"And may He grant that you, my boy,
May, by his grace, refuse
All naughty, wicked, sinful ways,
And all that's lovely choose!"

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Sept. 2, Mark xi. 18—33; Monday, Sept. 3, Mark xii. 1—12; Tuesday, Sept. 4, Mark xii. 13—27; Wednesday, Sept. 5, Mark xii. 28—44; Thursday, Sept. 6, Mark xiii. 1—10; Friday, Sept. 7, Mark xiii. 11—23; Saturday, Sept. 8, Mark xiii. 24—37.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

During the past few days the weather has been more favourable than formerly for meetings on the sands around the coast, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. Mr. J. Spiers has been labouring at Blackpool, where the services have been very largely attended, particularly at the south end of the town, where there have been gatherings of about one thousand children and adults. Many children and young people have been led to the Saviour. At one meeting, while urging decision for Christ, Mr. Spiers asked the question, "Who will decide now?" One boy, forgetting all around him, cried out, "I will." A great many stayed behind for a little quiet talk after the others left, and several said they had found Christ.

At Eastbourne, also, times of blessing have been experienced. Rev. C. F. Harford-Battersby, writes:—"The petition to the Town Council, complaining of beach services did not refer to us. There is no idea of our being disturbed. We have great reason to believe that many of the children have accepted Christ as their Saviour; parents, also, have taken a most hearty interest in our services. Several ladies have kindly assisted us in the singing, which has been the means of attracting many outsiders. An excellent boys' meeting was held last Friday, and at the after-meeting many decided for Christ. The afternoons spent in cricket and tennis have been very pleasant, and last Friday our sports were carried out with great success. The girls and young ladies have not been neglected this year, special meetings having been held for them, conducted by ladies. Our morning prayer-meeting at St. Paul's Church has been well attended, and this quiet hour with God has been to us a great source of strength. Two lantern services have been held, the first of which was one of the largest we have ever witnessed."

Mr. Henry Hutchinson writes from Bridlington Quay:—"We have, indeed, had good times here. On Sunday, August 19, we had an experience that must be almost, if not quite, unique in the annals of the C.S.S.M. We occupied in the afternoon for children's services all the four churches of the town—Rev. C. H. Boutflower addressing the children in Holy Trinity; Rev. Hodgson Jones (who is with us on a flying visit), at the old Priory Church; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, at Christ Church; and Mr. S. R. Cambie, at Hilderthorpe. At Priory Church, Rev. Prebendary Whittington, of St. Peter's, Cornhill, and Bishop Hillmuth took part in the service, the Bishop expressing his sympathy with us in the work of the Mission."

Good work has been progressing in Weston-super-Mare, whence Mr. H. G. Harris writes: This is my eighth summer here, and I can say that we have met several who are living evidences that the work of former missions has been lasting, and to the glory of God.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—This Union has now commenced its ninth year. The members pray for a fresh enduement of power from on high, to bring souls to Christ for the glory of God. The membership at July 5 last was 3655. Much heavenly blessing has been poured down in answer to the prayers of the members. Many ministers of the Gospel and missionaries have joined the Union. A monthly paper, entitled The Soul-Winner, is issued, with news of work for Christ at home and abroad. It also contains special requests for prayer and thanksgiving; daily Bible-reading, and other interesting matter. Cards of membership can be had from Mr. J. C. Smith, Newport-on-Tay, N.B.

Y.M.C.A. WORLD'S CONFERENCE.

Stockholm, Aug. 15—20, 1888.

Sweden is a country with a history, in which old-fashioned and well-established usages in Church and State hold their own against all kinds of modern innovation. But Swedish hearts are true and kind, and are ever ready to welcome old and new friends. So the Y.M.C.A. delegates proved when, in units and in tens, they reached Stockholm from all parts of the world. The most striking feature of the Conference was its size. More than 650 names were published in the first return of delegates. The building intended to be used for the Conference meetings proved far too small, so from the first the gatherings were held in the large and airy Blasieholms Church, kindly lent by the Rev. G. E. Beskow, Court Chaplain. This popular preacher, who himself designed the church on the model of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, was the officiating minister at the recent wedding at Bournemouth of Prince Oscar and Miss Munck. His hearty sympathy and frequent presence at the Conference meetings were warmly appreciated.

The Conference was also noteworthy for the interest manifested in its assembling by the King and Queen of Sweden and Norway, and by other members of the royal family. The opening services were conducted by Rev. W. Rudin, Professor at Upsala University; words of welcome were spoken by Baron Ugglas, ex-Governor of Stockholm, and the opening address was delivered by the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Visby, K. H. Gez von Schéele, D.D. As these inaugural proceedings, together with some intermingled singing, were all conducted in the vernacular of the country, the honour intended to be conferred was somewhat qualified by the weariness which resulted.

Although unmarked by any very striking features the Conference elicited some excellent papers, notably one by Mr. Tritton, and many profitable discussions. One manifest advantage of such gatherings is the forming of friendships and the increase of brotherly love on the part of secretaries and workers generally. Another benefit is the manifestation of the extent and unity of the work amongst young men throughout all lands.

The greatest credit is due to the local committee and secretaries, especially to Professor Schulthess, for the admirable execution of all the complicated arrangements of such an immense conference. Being a young and comparatively small Association, without any previous experience of such responsibilities, Stockholm merits distinction for the courage displayed in the undertaking, and warm congratulations for the efficiency and éclat which attended its execution. The tedium of the constant sittings was relieved by two well-planned excursions.

In some minor details there was room for criticism, when, for instance, the chairman appointed for a whole day made no apparent effort to adhere to the arrangements as to time which were published in the programme. Some friction was also apparent when in a small meeting, towards the close of the Conference, an important and debatable matter, without previous notice, was introduced and decided, without scrutiny, by a narrow majority. The graces of patience and brotherly love were, however, in all cases equal to the strain. Benefit will doubtless result if this experience leads to the avoidance of similar unbusinesslike procedure in the future.

There was very little opportunity for free prayer, and no meetings for mutual Bible study were held during the Conference. Notwithstanding these few shadows, which may, perhaps, be regarded as the foil to enhance its pleasure and profit, the Conference will be remembered with gratification and thankfulness by all who were privileged to take part in its deliberations.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, witnessed the opening of the Eleventh Triennial International Conference, known in Y.M.C.A. circles as a "World's Conference," to distinguish it from smaller international gatherings. At ten o'clock the large church, which was throughout devoted to the Conference gatherings, was well filled on the ground floor with delegates, and in the galleries by the Christian public. There was also a large attendance of press representatives, both male and female: the latter a praiseworthy Swedish innovation.

Rev. Professor W. Rudin, of the University of Upsala, conducted

THE INAUGURAL SERVICE.

This opening devotional session corresponded with similar daily meetings designated in the programme morning and evening prayer. On each of these occasions a long and elaborate address was delivered. Professor Rudin's words were truly admirable. Basing his remarks on 1 Thess. v. 23: "The God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," he spoke of the responsibility of addressing so many men gathered from so many countries. He had therefore sought a comprehensive message. Insisting on the vital importance to young men of an aim in life, and of ever keeping it clearly in view, he pointed out that it must perforce reach into eternity. In this sense each man is young, and each can find in the Apostle's words an appropriate "eternal aim." In one word it is "holiness." This cannot be self-acquired. Still, the Apostle makes the believer responsible. How else could he speak of "blamelessness" in connection with this sanctification? Each must freely receive the grace God gives, and afford it space to develop in his being. This unspeakably great sanctification is not the fruit of merely a few moments' work, or of a sudden resolve to give oneself wholly to Christ. This may be a starting point, but it is the work of a lifetime, or rather it is the work of God throughout one's life.

Our whole being must be sanctified—spirit, soul, and body. (1) The spirit must be sanctified—the divine, the royal part of our being. By this spirit man reigns over this world. This spirit must now in deep submission be given up to God. Then results a worshipping of God in the spirit; a priestly serving in the spirit; a living in the spirit. Our spirit, while thus becoming a vassal of God, will still reign over two kingdoms—soul and body.

(2) The soul must be sanctified. What a multiform life it has, full of inhabitants as it were; each one in a way independent, but now all to be absolutely subjected to the spirit which itself is governed and occupied by God. And the spirit shall learn how to take possession of this domain. It must not, like a weak king, allow the soul life to go its own way, nor allow a single one of its emotions loose without control. The spirit must pervade all. This is sanctification of the soul.

The second kingdom of the spirit is (3) the body. This also is a world of wonders, with its capital, its officers, its servants, its roads, rivers and canals; its mob and its roving freebooters. This bodily life also must be pervaded by the renewed spirit. The Holy Scripture is most rigorous in its demands concerning this sanctification. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice unto God." The body should be honoured, disciplined, kept in exercise and taken care of, so that it may serve the highest purpose, and become the organ of the spirit. Thus the slightest matter in our lives will be sacred. Protestants have a great deal to regain in this respect; our religion and morality want body, reality. While salvation depends on faith, and by faith man receives a fundamental participation in the holiness of Christ; blamelessness depends on continued sanctification in faith. After a few by Baron G. af Ugglas, the late Governor of Stockholm, and President of the Swedish Committee of Reception, the chair was taken by the Right Rev. K. H. Gez von Schéele, D.D., Bishop of Visby, who delivered the formal opening address. It was a masterly production, full of wisdom and of the spirit of Christ. The Bishop commenced with a learned treatise on "The value of life." He spoke of the revival of Buddhist teaching in pseudo-modern guise. Ignorant of the highest good, Buddhism concentrates the sum of all worldly wisdom in the three following sentences: (1) The principal element of life is pain; (2) the desire to live is the cause of all pain; (3) the end of pain is the end of life, which consequently is the only true good. Professedly on the ground of self-sacrifice, but really because "conscience doth make cowards of us all," modern Buddhists fail to carry out their doctrine to its logical issue. They thus display a glaring lack of conformity between their words and actions. As to the constantly repeated experience of youthful enthusiasm in the quest for happiness passing into the hopelessness of manhood and old age, the Bishop showed how the Word of God alone reveals the truth, according to which both old and young may spend rejoicing lives in active service to the glory of God, and for the welfare of their fellow-creatures. There lies an immeasurable blessing in the possibility that Jesus Christ has revealed of enjoying life with youthful zest without thereby being at war with the truth.

The common fundamental error concerning the object of life is that men ask, "What has life to offer?" instead of "What does life demand?" To give oneself up to God's service, to receive eternal life, and to carry it into this earthly life, is not only the sum of all that life demands, but is also the most enjoyable heritage that can here be ours. When one has received the assurance that the right is imperishable, and that the good will conquer for ever, then, but not till then, is life worth living. The Bishop proceeded to set forth the principle and the object of the Universal Conference of Y.M.C. Associations. The Bishop concluded with wise and loving words of greeting to the several delegations in French, English, German, Scandinavian, and in Swedish; also special words to the Russians, Dutch, Spanish, and Italians, with whose tongues he was unfamiliar.

At this point a Song of Greeting was sung to exquisite music, by a large male-voiced choir. A telegram of greeting was despatched to the King of Sweden and Norway. In the course of a brief interval, a reply was received from His Majesty, praying that God's blessing might rest on the work of the Conference, and regretting that he was unable to be present. A downpour of rain greatly hindered the re-assembling of the delegates. In a small meeting the triennial report of the Central International Committee was read by Rev. G. Tophel, of Geneva, President of Committee. It set forth the international communication which had been maintained through the agency of the Committee during the ten years of its existence. The Committee has regularly arranged for the universal week of prayer amongst Associations throughout the world, and has recieved many evidences of benefit resulting.

In obedience to the instructions of the last Conference, special labour has been bestowed on associations in Italy, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. A first National Association Conference was held in Florence in 1887, and a National Union, consisting of thirty-two associations, was formed, with Turin as its centre. A second National Conference will be held there next year (1889), coinciding with the grand anniversary of the return of the Vaudois. Greater difficulties have presented themselves to Association progress in Spain, in the shape of intense Romish persecution. The Secretary spent three months in the country seeking to promote evangelisstion, the necessary forerunner of Association work. Our valiant brother, Albricias, has not only laboured diligently, but, amidst much threatening, has edited a Spanish Association organ, El Etalaya (The Watchman), which already numbers five hundred subscribers. As the result of the Secretary's prolonged visit to Sweden, a Swedish National Union was formed in May last with twenty-one associations affiliated. Austria, Belgium, and Alsace and Loraine have also been visited; and earnest efforts have been concentrated on Switzerland, with encouraging results.

The Committee being deeply concerned for the welfare of the young men of the world have gladly availed themselves of the services of Mr. Wishard, late College Secretary in America, as Secretary for the Mission Stations and the Universities. His maintenance is provided from private sources; he will labour on the basis of the Evangelical Alliance and in perfect harmony with the missionary societies.

The report closes with the expression of a determination to vigorously prosecute the work of the Committee in the countries which claim its assistance and support; especially so in view of the solemn days in which our lot is cast, when the war between light and darkness is waxing hotter and is perhaps entering upon its closing stage.

Encouraging reports were given of Association work in several countries, namely: Germany, by Pastor Klug, of Elberfeld; Great Britain and Ireland, by Mr. W. H. Mills, London; Belgium, by Mons. Jean de Looper, Hainaut; Holland, by Herr W. van Oosterwijk-Bruijn, of Utrecht; Switzerland, by Mons. Hans Baeschlin, of Bern; Norway, by Prof. Waage, of Christiania; Russia, by Pastor Findeisen, of St. Petersburgh; Italy, by Signor Davis, of Casalmaggiore; Denmark, by Pastor Schousboe, of Copenhagen.

As many of these testimonies were not translated, it was impossible for a general interest to be created. The British report (which is printed with many interesting appendices, and can be obtained on application at Exeter Hall) spoke of rapid growth, the extension now permeating smaller towns, and even villages. Since the last International Conference, the number of associations in England, Ireland, and Wales has extended from 216 to 354—increase 138; with a corresponding increase in a converted membership of 6808 young men. The work of the English National Council has been extending and deepening; and the activity of their agents, the travelling secretaries, has been greatly owned and blessed of God, both in England and in Ireland.

Professor WAAGE reported great progress in Norway, especially in Christiania. The Association was holding regular meetings in the theatre in that city. Above all, there was a marked increase in the spirit of prayer.

Pastor FINDEISEN stated that for twenty years Russia had been unrepresented. He also could report much blessing, notwithstanding difficulties and persecution. In St. Petersburgh the Association now numbers 120 members.

Signor DAVIS reported, with much joy and fervour, that in Italy they now possessed complete political and religious liberty. The Association work was prospering, but the workers still asked for earnest sympathy and prayer.

Pastor SCHOUSBOE reported that in Denmark there are now eighty associations, with two thousand members. Great progress is being made; a secretary is now engaged to visit and organise. While the work goes on quietly, from week to week, its influence is shown by the hundreds of young men who gather on anniversary and other special occasions.

Concerning Sweden, it was reported that great progress has been effected since the Berlin Conference, in 1884. Earnest prayer was still earnestly solicited, as there remained much land to be possessed.

The report from America was crowded out; but the statistics and other information, showing the great extension of the work, were given subsequently in a paper read by Mr. R. C. Morse, the International Secretary of the United States and Canada.

Soon after three o'clock the delegates adjourned for dinner, in common, in a large and beautiful room in the Hotel Rydberg, where dinner was also served daily throughout the Conference. At five o'clock the church was re-opened for a public meeting, when addresses were delivered by Rev. E. Zophel, of Geneva, on the Holy Spirit. The address was given in French, and was untranslated even in summary, which was to be regretted, as it was full of power and unction. Extemporary earnest addresses were also given by Pastor Krummacher, of Elberfeld, in German; by Rev. Joh. Söholt, of Draunen, Norway, on "Leading Principles that should animate all Work of Young Men's Christian Associations." An encouraging, rallying speech was warmly seconded by Mr. George Williams in a brief exhortation full of spirit and fervour.

The labours of a long day were not yet complete, for, following these lengthy exercises, came evening prayers, conducted by Rev. G. E. Beskow, Court Chaplain, and minister of the church in which the meetings assembled. He took for his text the passage: "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles: they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." In an address, full of sustained interest, he expounded his text. There are many weary youths; some with inherited languor, others as the result of sin. Youth, with its light and sunshine, is seed-time for harvests to come; a period often spent in bold, sometimes insolent, self-reliance, with the selfish desire of making a position or finding pleasure. All who thus strive will grow weary; sooner or later they will stumble and fall; they will then look round for help, for man cannot help himself. He has stumbled, and needs to be supported; he has sinned, and wants forgiveness; he is spiritually dead, and wants new life. Here the Gospel meets him, and will accomplish its work of salvation, if he be not still filled with pharisaical self-sufficiency. The Atonement has no place in the doctrinal system of the pharisees.

"They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." Waiting on the Lord in the Old Testament meant looking for Messiah's Coming. In the New Testament it means expecting his return—the day of full salvation. When thou findest Jesus, the deadly weariness shall give way. The Lord has become thy strength and thy power. "They shall mount up on wings, as eagles." The higher he rises, the smaller seem all earthly things. Faith and hope are called eagles' wings. The eagle also uses his wings as arms, and gives mighty blows. We learn how to fight the good fight of faith. "They shall run, and not be weary." Champions strain their forces to the utmost; the shortest delay might deprive them of the victor's crown. They were encouraged by friendly spectators. We strive for an incorruptible crown—a symbol of the glory of the saved. But no one is crowned unless he strive lawfully. So run that ye may obtain. "They shall walk, and not faint." The weary Elijah ate the heaven-provided food, and went in the strength of it forty days and forty nights unto the mount of God. When the strength of youth is proved to fail, the weary traveller who rises up, and eats and drinks (comes to Jesus and believes in Him), shall go in the strength of that bread of life to the mountain of God (Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem). He shall hunger no more, neither shall he any more be thirsty.

The long day's interesting proceedings closed with a social gathering in the rooms of the Association in Kingsgatan (King-street), presided over by Rev. Dr. W. Staaff, rector of Adolph Frederick's Church. Some excellent singing was interspersed with a few brief speeches.

A TRUSTFUL PRAYER.

WHEN the path I tread is brightest,
And the cross I bear is lightest,
In my joys stand Thou near by;
Let me feel Thee ever nigh.

When the road is rough and toilsome,
And my heart is sad and lonesome,
Let me know that Thou art near,
Therefore I need have no fear.

When the way is dark and dreary,
Let me falter not nor weary;
Knowing Thou wilt lead me on,
Safe to thine eternal home.

Thus through joys and sorrows lead me,
Thus 'mid cares and pleasures keep me,
Till I reach the home above,
And rest eternally in love.
And through the shadows came a still small voice,
"Thy prayer is heard; lay by thy fears, rejoice."

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

FIFTY missionaries about to proceed to India were present at a large meeting of friends of the Salvation Army at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday last week. Thirty of the party were women, and the entire contingent will bring the officers in India, native and European, up to three hundred in number. The meeting was presided over by General Booth, who was supported by Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff. During the past twelve months as much as £7000 has been spent upon land and buildings in India, and £5000 has been laid out in maintaining the work.

General Booth presented his daughter, Mrs. Booth-Tucker, with her commission as joint leader of the forces in the Indian Empire. In the course of an address, he said that if the Salvation Army can send out batches of fifty missionaries, surely the great Christian corporations ought to be sending out hundreds and thousands of agents. More workers are badly wanted. Ten years ago the total number of the Salvation Army officers was only 300, whilst it is now 6400, of whom 3000 are labouring abroad. Some persons no doubt say there is no fault to be found with the number of missionaries, but they must take objection to the quality. His answer was that it was impossible to find fault as regards the devotion or the self-sacrifice of the people. Many of those going away were leaving luxurious homes and tender-hearted friends to face the sultry climate of India, and to live as natives, begging their bread as they went.

Only recently, continued General Booth, some Indian officers were stricken by small-pox, which was followed by cholera and fever. Several deaths resulted, but they bore all with patience. Nothing could be said against their success, for no other religious bodies could show such results. One of the great difficulties in the way of increasing the number of foreign missionaries was the want of money. To meet this want in the Army there would be a week of self-sacrifice throughout their ranks early in October, by which they expected to raise £5000, and he should call upon the rich to contribute a similar amount. Short addresses were given by Mrs. Booth-Tucker, Mr. R. Cory, and several of the missionaries. Subsequently the General "consecrated" the contingent.

DR. BAEDEKER has left for Germany. After spending a fortnight in that country, he proposes to go straight to Russia. He writes to us:—"I have been favoured with a permit from high authorities, to visit the prisons in the Russian Empire, with the view of giving New Testaments to the prisoners. Will you request prayer for this special mission to the many thousands who are bound with fetters that are stronger than prison chains and bars?"

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose to give portrait and sketch of Miss Hedenstrom, of the Scandinavian Seaman's Temperance Home.

The Editor is obliged to announce that he cannot undertake to return rejected manuscripts. Contributors will do well to preserve copies of special articles sent.

One of the greatest mysteries of modern daily journalism is the hatching of startling rumours that are contradicted the day after their publication. We gave no manner of credence to the report that the Princess Christian was about to avow herself a disciple of the Romish Communion, and were, therefore, prepared for its denial.

Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, in the August issue of The Truth, takes a very pessimistic view of the present condition of the churches on both sides of the Atlantic. Writing on "The Effect of Error," he says:—

> If the defection goes on, it can not be long before the professing Christian body in Great Britain will become a hissing, a reproach, a stench in the nostrils of honest men, as it certainly will be spued out of the mouth of our insulted Lord with unutterable loathing. Think of the influence wielded by such blatant blatherskites as Dr. R. W. Dale and Dr. Joseph Parker among the Congregationalists, of the shocking teachings heard from Dr. Marcus Dods and Professor Drummond among the Presbyterians, of the Baptist leaders from whom Spurgeon has been forced to separate himself, of Canon Farrar and many others in the Establishment, and then no longer wonder that the Church of the mother country is becoming a by-word and a humbug. It is a ray of comfort to know that some of the American delegates to the late Pan-Presbyterian Council went for the infidelity and nonsense of Dr. Marcus Dods, in vigorous and most appropriate language. The same monstrous apostasy is making frightful progress here. It has invaded nearly all of our theological seminaries. It has taken possession of our most popular pulpits. It touches and taints the very sources of spiritual strength among the people.

We feel as strongly as Dr. Brookes can do the ominous tendencies in the present day to wander from the safe and the well-tried paths of evangelical doctrine, into the trackless, bewildering regions of human speculation. But we have serious doubts as to any good resulting from the use of such personal and disrespectful epithets as "blatant blatherskites" and "humbugs." The servant of the Lord, according to a high authority, must be gentle unto all, patient and meek, if he would win back those whom he believes to have strayed from the old paths. We would that our good brother of St. Louis might bear a word of earnest remonstrance, and adopt a more excellent way in his controversial writing and speech.

A correspondent of The Daily News draws attention to the extent and gravity of the gambling which still goes on upon the Atlantic steamers during their transit to and from America. He describes the elaborate procedure by which the variations in the speed of the vessels are utilised for the purposes of betting, and hints at devices on the part of professional gamesters for defrauding the less expert. It appears that incessant card playing for very high stakes is usual during the Atlantic passages, and that gangs of sharpers are in the habit of crossing and re-crossing the ocean for the purpose of preying upon the ordinary passengers. This is a state of things which ought not to be allowed to continue. Apart from the dishonesty and immorality of gambling in the abstract, it invariably leads to fraud and deception when carried on in public.

By international law, ships are considered a portion of the soil of the country whose flag they fly, and the law of that country is paramount on board. Consequently, it is the duty of Government to enforce the laws which prohibit gambling, at sea as well as on land, and to put down this growing and alarming scandal with an iron hand. Many a promising career has been blighted by exposure to the temptations of this degrading vice, and those in authority must be held responsible if they do not all that lies in their power to suppress it.

"A City Man" writing to The Times, calls attention to the abuse, introduced by the extremer Ritualists, of separating the sexes in God's house, and his dignified protest is well worth serious attention. As he forcibly points out, individual families, uniting together in the worship of God in his house, are a miniature representation of the Christian family throughout the world, that, with the Lord Jesus at its head, offers up prayer and praise without ceasing before the throne of God. The separation of husband and wife, brother and sister, parents and children, can only serve to bring discord, and subject families more and more to the rule and ordinance of an arrogant and overbearing priesthood.

It is curious to note the varied and contradictory impressions which were created on the minds of some of our readers by a few quoted remarks in THE CHRISTIAN of August 17. One correspondent asks whether it is true that Pastor Fliedner holds such doctrines; another inquires what can Mildmay or THE CHRISTIAN be thinking of to propagate such views; a third thinks that giving publicity to such teaching is helping to spread error; and a fourth proposes to use the extract to convince a young friend, who is inclined towards Romanism, of the false doctrine of that system. We need hardly say that the last use of the lines is a true interpretation of our object in inserting the extract in question, which, of course, did not express Pastor Fliedner's belief, but was his quotation from recent official utterances in Spain.

Our readers who have followed with interest and sympathy the conflict against licensed sin in India will be prepared to hear that there are great calls for rescue work in some of the large cities of India, and especially at Bombay. In answer to an appeal for rescue workers from Mr. and Mrs. Gladwin, of Bombay, which appeared in our columns a few weeks since, several volunteers, with peculiar qualifications for this sphere, have offered themselves to the Committee of the Gospel Purity Association. That Committee, however, have recently spent so much in their admirable efforts to secure the abolition of licensed vice in British possessions, that they find themselves unable to send out these volunteers for rescue work. Will some of our readers who feel thankful for the victories for national righteousness already gained, subscribe the sum needed to place in the field the workers in question? Contributions may be sent to the Editor of this paper, or to the Secretary of the Gospel Purity Association, 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.

It is lamentably true that money has often been spoken of as if it were the one thing needful to convert the world; on the other hand, it is no less true that while some of our brightest young Christian lives are offered for missionary work of various kinds in any land, the one thing that hinders their being sent is the want of a missionary spirit in those who cannot go, but who could help others with the means of going. "How shall they preach except they be sent?"

A correspondent points out the danger which besets boys and girls who are sent abroad for their education. Surrounded by Romish institutions, and continually under Romish influence, there can be little wonder that such children grow up superstitious on the one hand, or irreligious on the other. Attracted by the Romish churches, and impressed by the earnestness of the worshippers, youths, who neither know the implication of Papal tenets and actions, nor the facts and reasons of Protestantism, may easily be indoctrinated with error, and captivated by a false system before the apprehension of parents or guardians has been excited. Or, on the other hand, they may be repelled from Christianity through seeing it presented only in a corrupt form. The warning which our correspondent utters is both wise and timely, and we trust it will not be uttered in vain.

In an article on tobacco smoking, The Times expresses doubts as to any great physical evils arising out of the habit, but admits that it may be "partially responsible for certain moral effects which are not likely to be conducive to the greatness of a people." To our thinking that is ground enough for condemnation; while mind and body are so closely allied that moral damage must also injuriously affect the physique. A more sweeping indictment against any prevalent custom was surely never uttered than these words of our contemporary:—

> A lazy tolerance of evil which seems to arise rather from indifference than from charity, a certain flabbiness of character, a fear of responsibility, a shiftiness of purpose, have of late years come into unpleasant prominence in the arena of English public life. Is it over-fanciful to suggest that such a decadence from the virtues by which our empire was won, and by which alone it can be maintained, may be in some small measure attributable to the perpetual employment of a narcotic which, on the very showing of its advocates and admirers, helps men to live in a fool's paradise, and to shut their eyes to facts which it would be unpleasant steadily to contemplate?

The writer might have added, as one of the concomitants of tobacco smoking, the selfish disregard of the feelings and comfort of others that is so often shown by devotees of the weed when travelling in public conveyances.

The railway race between London and Edinburgh has, happily, not lasted long. It was an experiment full of risk, with no balance of advantage, and if any serious accident had resulted, a heavy responsibility would have lain on the shoulders of the managers concerned. Surely the comfort and convenience of travellers ought to be primary considerations with railway companies, and it cannot be said that under our British system these are well met on long distance journeys. All who have had experience of the healthful sanitary arrangements of the American railroads, would be glad to see some similar system adopted in this country.

Young ruffianism not unnaturally awakens very anxious attention among Londoners just now. It is remarkable that this should alarm at the very time when we are boasting of our methods of primary education. It may be questioned whether ours is education or only instruction. But we must go to other causes. These are two: first the endless stream of "penny dreadfuls" that invest brutality and lawless selfishness with an abominable halo of heroism; and then the increasing weakness of parental authority which this age is witnessing. The laws of Moses in the Pentateuch insist on parental authority as essential to national safety. These Bible teachings demand that the fear of father and mother shall be one of the first lessons taught to a child: they predict woe when a son shall set light by his parents, and in Deut. xxi. it is enjoined that the stubborn and rebellious son shall be put away from Israel when he will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother. If our modern society is discarding such precepts it must prepare itself for some awful penalties.

On the other hand, it may be urged that the cause of the ruffianism referred to is not so much contempt of parental authority as the total absence of any such authority. It would doubtless be found that the parents of these youthful disturbers of the peace pay little attention to the moral well-being of their offspring. Surely the great need of society, in its family aspect, is that the natural educators of the young should themselves be educated in the School of Christ.

There must surely be exaggeration about the following:—The New York Times says that in the course of the discussion in relation to Dr. Abbott becoming permanent pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and successor to the late Henry Ward Beecher, a deacon arose and said:

> If I had 10,000 votes I would cast them against Dr. Abbott. (Applause and hisses.) Since he has been with us the church has run down. We want a magnetic preacher. If an angel came down from above and filled our pulpit for six months, and the congregation diminished, I would say, Shoo! fly away. (Laughter.) I would vote for a man I hate if he was in the pulpit and could fill the church. There are persons who have pews here who will go away if Dr. Abbott is elected.

The proverb, "The worse the better," has often its verification. Deacons on both sides of the Atlantic, who read such language, will find in it a timely warning against the disposition to gauge a minister's qualifications, not by his ability to win men to godliness, but to fill the pews of the church with mere hearers, and its exchequer with money.

Dr. Dale, a member of the Royal Commission on Education, has presented a special memorandum on Sunday-schools. The total number of children in England and Wales attending Sunday-schools is 5,200,776. In Wesleyan schools more than 220,000 are over fourteen years of age, which is a large proportion. In Church of England Sunday-schools 10 per cent. of schools are over fourteen; but in schools connected with the Sunday-school Union there would appear to be a proportion of such scholars amounting to 30 per cent. These are remarkable and gratifying figures. There is, however, a caution to be given. Some of the best teachers everywhere complain of a tendency to make Sunday-schools, not excepting ministerial addresses, a diversion, and to allow rivalry between different schools to tolerate an insubordination, which neutralises most earnest work.

The Lambeth Encyclical is objected to in The Times by the Bishop of Liverpool. He says he had no voice or hand in drawing it up, and adds:—

> One glaring defect in the Encyclical I cannot refrain from deploring. That defect is the conspicuous absence of any reference to the "unhappy divisions" about the doctrine and Ritual of the Lord's Supper which are at this moment convulsing the Church of England, and will certainly bring on disruption and disestablishment unless they are healed. The existence and formidable nature of these divisions it is vain to deny. To my eyes they are of cardinal importance, and appear to require far more attention than the condition of the Scandinavian or Greek Churches, or the Old Catholic movement.

The reply of the Archbishop of Canterbury scarcely seems adequate. It was not enough that an Episcopal Manifesto, for all the countries represented in the Conference, should have been passed in the absence of members who were occupied at the time in pressing Diocesan duties. The draft might have been first sent to all. Probably agreement on cardinal truths is becoming further off; the more urgent and imperative, however, is the duty of such a protest as that of Dr. Ryle.

According to La Croix, a daily French Roman Catholic newspaper, there will next month be an extraordinary emigration from Purgatory to Paradise.

> In virtue of the extraordinary power of the Keys, Leo. XIII., prisoner, has resolved to extend the joys of his Jubilee to Purgatory, and on September 27, the whole Church joining him, the Pope will go down to Peter's tomb, in order to shed the Divine blood over the expiatory flames. This mass, without parallel, that Peter, still living, announced to the Church universal, by an Encyclical dated Easter Day, will be the most solemn act ever performed by the Papacy for the deliverance of prisoners in Purgatory—slaves more cruelly tried than those of Africa...On September 27 heaven will be peopled by millions by Leo XIII.

"And if millions," asks Le Signal, "why not all, we would like to know? This is Popery of the present day."

To-day is the bi-centenary of the death of the Puritan Tinker of Bedford, who, shut up within the four walls of a prison, and with no other library than a Bible and Foxe's "Acts and Monuments of the Church," wrote a book which has had a larger circulation than any other except the Bible, and of which the fame is wide as the world. Books may come and books may go—the short-lived creatures of a season—but the "Pilgrim's Progress" has a charm which will endure so long as time shall last. "The child," it has been said, "reads it for its story, the theologian for its doctrine, and the critic for its language."

To this it may be added that the Christian reads it because it is the history of a human soul, in which he may recognise his own spiritual pains, pleasures, and struggles. Here he will find

> Things rare and profitable,
> Things pleasant; dreadful things, and will hear "Nothing but sound and honest Gospel strains." Where is there a more powerful, pathetic, and self-unsparing autobiography than "Grace Abounding," in which the author traces his long and tremendous conflict with, and final triumph over, Satan? Where, again, will the reader look for a more graphic picture of a man fallen, convicted, converted, and renewed, yet still harassed by diabolical attacks and beset by imperfections, than that which the quondam swearer and Sabbath breaker of Elstow has drawn in the wonderful story of "Mansoul"?

It is not only in our own country that the present labour system involves great hardships. From the report of the Bombay Factory Commission, recently issued as a Parliamentary paper, it appears that in India children may be employed at seven years of age—three years earlier than the English limit—and at twelve are considered as adults. Women, in common with men, habitually work eighty hours per week, and in smaller factories often eighteen hours a day for seven days a week, and sometimes even longer, until they are obliged to cease from sheer exhaustion. The Commissioners propose that female labour should be restricted to eleven hours a day; that no child under nine years old should be employed at all; and that those under fourteen should only work nine hours a day. It is already three years since this Commission made its investigations, and no action has yet been taken in the matter, although the proposed amendments have been approved by the Bombay Government. As the ruler of India, England ought to protect the Hindoo, and as the author of the factory system, she is virtually responsible for the physical and moral evils arising from it; and this, apart from any other considerations, should lead to an immediate amendment of the Indian Factory Act, which at present affords little, if any, protection to the workers.

A contemporary quotes from The Wellington Journal a report of the anniversary of the Ludlow Branch of the English Church Union, at which there was a "High celebration" of the Communion, with burning of incense, and "the elevation of the Wafer, with the exclamation, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.'" Gradually the veil, with which it was thought prudent to hide these things, is being thrown aside, and almost every day witnesses some bolder and more open attack upon evangelical truth. It may be there is an impression that the ground has been sufficiently well prepared for the seed of Romish doctrine; or is it that these Romanists in disguise believe the religious conscience of England to be asleep?

Doubtless most individuals of the comfortable classes eat more than they require, and of too stimulating kinds of food. Our chief duty with regard to the body is to keep it under as to its appetites, and to keep it in such a condition of health that it may be an efficient servant of the spirit. Too great a part of the energy, even of Christians, is expended in relation to the question, "What shall we eat? What shall we drink? And wherewithal shall we be clothed?" If our food were simpler, we should be satisfied with less, our digestive apparatus would have less to do, and there would be more vital force of mind and body for the service of Christ.

So far as the advocates of a vegetarian and unstimulating diet are seeking to teach us to leave off living to eat, and, on the contrary, to eat to live, they have our hearty sympathy. Vegetarian conferences are being held in various parts of London; and we are glad to learn from the speakers that an evident increase in the use of fruits is one result of this calm agitation.

On Winning Souls to Christ.

By GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

II.

If not kept single-eyed to this work, and ballasted by Divine grace, we may, through human impulse, wreck a soul; by indiscretion and sectarian zeal wrangle over a soul; or we may, in unwarrantable loyalty to creed or party, worry a soul, and for ever lose our hold upon it. In order, then, to succeed in this honourable task, we need to keep before us the true object of salvation—viz., the glory of God in the redemption of mankind.

It will be readily admitted that there can be no success in this sublime undertaking where consecration to the work is lacking. Consecration implies conversion. There may be devotion to party or politics, to reforms or religion, without conversion to Christ. The Athenians were very devout while yet ignorant of the true God. But devotion to God's work is alien to the unregenerate. Conversion is the turning of the soul to God, which involves the turning of the soul from sin; it is the acquaintance of the soul with God, for "this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." How, then, can we persuade others to enter the paths of salvation, if they are as yet untrodden by our own feet? How can we impart the knowledge of God in his Son Jesus Christ, if we are ignorant of Him ourselves? The Christian alone is that golden link which unites the sinner to Christ. Andrew found the Messiah, and next he found Simon. Finding Christ, that is conversion; finding a brother, that is consecration.

Why should unconverted teachers be placed in our Sunday-schools, who cannot guide a soul to Jesus? As well invite unconverted preachers to our pulpits, unconverted missionaries to our foreign fields, unconverted evangelists to our communities, unconverted singers to our choirs (greatest blunder of all, the worship of God by proxy), as to induce unregenerate persons to teach in our Sunday-schools. I have heard many arguments to the contrary view, but not one that was based on Scripture. Let us away with this folly, and have no partnership in such deceit.

An essential element of consecration is that of compassion. How fully this tender quality characterised Jesus. When He saw the thronging multitudes, weary, hungry, like sheep without a shepherd, He was moved with compassion toward them. When a leper, wretched, friendless, diseased, crossed his pathway, He was moved with compassion for him. After priest and Levite passed by the wounded man, the good Samaritan had compassion on him. One of the qualities of Israel's priesthood was to "have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way." Yet herein both priest and Levite failed. Their bowels of mercies were restrained, while our great High Priest, touched with the feeling of our infirmities, has within his human heart an ever-flowing fount of compassion. And when out of his fulness we receive, when the tender love of Christ throbs within our life, then shall we too be strangely moved with a like tenderness toward the teeming millions of lost souls in the world to-day.

Nehemiah was a man of unbounded compassion. Soon as he heard of Jerusalem's degradation, that her gates were burned, her walls razed to the ground, and her people in reproach, it affected him to weeping, fasting, praying, and mourning certain days before the God of heaven. Love for his brethren impelled him to consecrate himself to the service of the city's restoration and the salvation of his people.

Jesus said to Peter, "'Lovest thou Me?' If so, 'feed my lambs,'..'tend my sheep.'" Did the fisherman of Galilee lack refinement? Was he but a boorish peasant? Were the graces of culture and polish wanting? As a disciple was he impulsive, blundering? Even so. Yet in Peter's heart the love of Jesus held sway. And to those possessing this Divine quality the great Shepherd can commit the care of his costly purchased and dearly loved flock. This, then, is the grace of all graces needed in soul-winning. Without it, how shall we win them? Some souls are sensitive to an unusual degree. They cannot be coaxed, they must not be coerced. Love, however, is very inventive. The loving worker will employ the lover's art, and, with noble purpose, draw them sweetly to Christ. The four men in the Gospel who had compassion on their sick friend persevered in their mission, were inventive in their methods, and were successful in the humane task voluntarily undertaken by them, to lay a helpless neighbour at the feet of the great Physician. So may we live and labour to the end.

The Agony in Gethsemane.

The story of our Lord's passion in the Garden of Gethsemane has no parallel in any part of his antecedent life. Matthew, Mark, and Luke tell this story. All the recorded facts are ascertained only by reading the three narratives together: Matt. xxvi. 36—46; Mark xiv. 32—42; and Luke xxii. 39—46.

Jesus, previously to going into the Garden of Gethsemane late at night, had spent several hours with his disciples in an "upper room" in Jerusalem. He there kept the Jewish passover, appointed the Lord's Supper to commemorate his death, predicted the denials of Peter and the dispersion of his disciples, pointed out Judas as the traitor, and uttered those memorable words which are recorded in the fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth chapters of the Gospel of John. Nothing appeared in his conduct or language, during all these hours, to indicate the slightest consternation or dread in view of what He knew to be immediately impending over his head, and what He had foreseen and predicted when making his last journey to Jerusalem. There was no change in the outward facts and circumstances, at the time of his agony, with the single exception that He was in the Garden of Gethsemane, whither He had voluntarily gone, and not in the "upper room." The whole change, whatever it may have been, was in Himself.

And yet this calm and self-collected Jesus, whose life had been one of perfect purity and the most intimate companionship with God the Father, had no sooner entered the Garden of Gethsemane than He began to exhibit the signs of extreme mental suffering. He "began to be sorrowful and very heavy," and "sore amazed." He described his own condition by saying to Peter, James, and John: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; tarry ye here and watch with Me." Going a little distance from them, He "fell on his face and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." He repeated the prayer at three different times. Luke tells us that, "being in an agony, He prayed more earnestly," and that "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground," and that an angel was deputed from heaven to strengthen him. The Epistle to the Hebrews refers to this scene, and says that Jesus "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears." The words describing his agony are few and simple; and yet words never painted a scene of greater apparent distress.

This agony came upon Jesus suddenly, without any change in outward circumstances, and then left Him just as suddenly. He suddenly passed into it from a state of complete serenity, and as suddenly passed out of it and resumed his usual serenity. No sooner did Judas and the soldiers appear for his arrest than this agony came to an end. It was instantaneous in its coming, and equally so in its departure, while overwhelming during its continuance.

It is worthy of special notice that the Evangelists simply state the facts of our Lord's passion—when it began and when it ended; what He did and what He said, and how He appeared—thus setting the scene before us without a single word explanatory of its direct cause. They did not attempt to be philosophers, and, as such, to account for the facts which they state. Christians had better imitate their example in this respect. They will best impress their own hearts by simply reading the narrative, and, in contemplative thought, vividly seeing their Saviour just as He is presented in the narrative. It is enough to know that in the plan of God suffering was appointed to this Saviour, and that in the Garden of Gethsemane He was a sufferer in the extremest form of mental anguish, without attempting to be curiously wise above what is written. Mere human speculation here is out of place, and had better be omitted altogether. Next to the simple record itself, we prefer Tappan's lines to anything we have ever seen or read in regard to the agony of Gethsemane:—

'Tis midnight—and on Olive's brow
  The star is dimmed that lately shone;
'Tis midnight—in the garden now
  The suffering Saviour prays alone.

'Tis midnight—and from all removed
  Immanuel wrestles 'lone with fears;
Ev'n the disciple that He loved
  Heeds not his Master's grief and tears.

'Tis midnight—and for others' guilt
  The Man of Sorrows weeps in blood;
Yet He that hath in anguish knelt,
  Is not forsaken by his God.

'Tis midnight—and from ether-plains
  Is borne the song that angels know;
Unheard by mortals are the strains
  That sweetly soothe the Saviour's woe.

This hymn, while beautiful and touching as poetry, has its basis in the facts of the Biblical record, and, like the record itself, sets before us Jesus of Nazareth as He was when enduring the mysterious agony of Gethsemane. Let us never forget that our Saviour was a sufferer. Let his words be our guide when we are called to suffer: "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." The Christian should thus qualify every prayer he makes. The example of Jesus should be followed in even the bitterest anguish of his earthly life.—New York Independent.

ORPHANS AT WALTHAMSTOW.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers are interested in our orphan children, as proved by the help sent from time to time. I am sure many more would gladly help if they only knew how urgent is our need. These are not the days in which any effort to rescue and save the girls should languish or collapse for want of support. The "bitter cry" of orphanhood and destitution is heard as loudly to-day as when we opened our little Home twenty-two years ago, notwithstanding the increased number of such institutions now existing.

The past year has been one of much difficulty; we are quite £100 short of what is needed. In prayerful confidence I would ask your readers to come to our help in this matter, that we may go forward with lightened heart and free hands.—Yours faithfully, Mary Parsons.

Eastfield House, Hoe-street, Walthamstow.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.—A correspondent, referring to the letter of "E. H." in our last issue, draws attention to the existence of the "Proportionate Giving Union," the object of which is identical with that of the Society in America lately mentioned by Dr. Gordon. The names of persons willing to become members should be sent to Rev. E. A. Watkins, Ubbeston Vicarage, Yoxford, Suffolk, who will forward cards of membership, together with pamphlets for distribution.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

IT was with deep regret I left the Northfield Conference before its close, to keep an appointment in Colorado. But the few days there at the commencement guaranteed a specially interesting and spiritually profitable Convention. Mr. Moody entered upon his great responsibility of oversight with confidence and hope. His first audience was larger than on former occasions. Visitors poured in until every building was full of guests, the magnificent new "Northfield" Hotel, already overflowing; while the villagers were preparing their best rooms, that none might be without shelter. The spiritual feasts of the past had been relished so keenly that the participators had not forgotten to return. New faces also beamed from their sittings, and each train for those first three days brought others to the banquet.

. . . .

Doubtless, extracts from the addresses will reach your columns, that the readers may be enriched. Mr. Moody expounded daily Paul's grand chapters—Rom. viii., 1 Cor. xiii., 1 Cor. xv. His comments were full of juice, coming out of a ripe and ever-mellowing experience. The addresses were calculated to exalt God's Word, and the worship of the great assemblies was frequent and hearty. Mr. Sankey sang with unusual pathos; his rich full voice showed no sign of exhaustion, bringing smiles and tears from deeply-affected listeners.

. . . .

The beloved Hudson Taylor and Reginald Radcliffe contributed their share to the spiritual wealth of the meeting. Other missionaries from distant lands came to receive and to give, so that mission work was well represented both in prayer and speech. Our good friend MacGranahan is yet a prisoner of hope. We missed his persuasive voice, yet there was no dearth of song. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, with their rich duets and splended leading, were present; as also Professor and Mrs. Towner, who led in sacred song at Ocean Grove. Oh! that these hallowed seasons may refresh many a weary worker, sending them to their respective fields of labour strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.

. . . .

Reaching Chicago I found myself hustled into an impromptu theological seminary. Our old friend Major Whittle has refused a summer vacation. Not content with nightly Gospel meetings he has gathered a fine band of workers for morning study. About thirty men greet him each day, and with the help of other teachers he instructs this class in the way of the Lord more perfectly. His method is exegetical, doctrinal, and practical. Most of the students are engaged in mission work, and this summer school under the leadership of the veteran evangelist will be of incalculable benefit to these young men of the prophets. At Farwell Hall I found the noon prayer-meeting full of vigour. While other cities have allowed this important meeting to die out, Chicago Christians still hold the fort. The Evangelisation Society is doing a noble work through tent meetings and other forms of evangelism. If this city is intense in its wickedness, her workers are, thank God, intense for righteousness.

* * * *

I have had abundant proof of late that infidelity is alarmingly aggressive. Leaders of free thought are dangerously busy, and cheap atheistic pamphlets flood the country. I am not aware of any organised method to deal with this monster, but that which Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, has set in motion. By his lectures and tracts he is sounding an alarm, and combating the enemy. Yet I fear he has not the backing which his work deserves. During his recent tour through England he involved himself in a pecuniary difficulty in order to meet his expenses, and do the grand work for Britain which he has done. Surely it was an oversight—a grave error on the part of English friends to allow him to bear this heavy burden. I am told that he is £400 out of pocket while fighting British infidelity on English soil. Certainly these things ought not so to be, and rich brethren, who so deeply appreciated his visit, ought to refund to this self-denying man of God this outlay. It would, no doubt, lift a burden from his heart, and encourage him in his important campaign against this raging and unclean beast—infidelity.

TENT WORK.

A GOOD work has been done in the Wandsworth-road, S.W., where for seven weeks a tent belonging to the Union Hall Mission, Harlesden, N.W., was pitched. Large numbers of people, many of them of the very poorest class, attended the services nightly, going thither through all weathers. The word of God, which was earnestly and faithfully preached by many well-known evangelists, was in the power of the Holy Spirit, and in much assurance, and as the result many have turned to the Lord. On several occasions the Gospel was preached by two noted characters, who were themselves brought to Christ under these canvas tents, about eight years ago.

Messrs. Thompson and Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation, have for nearly five weeks been holding tent services at Randalstown, co. Antrim. Christians have manifested much interest in the meetings, and great anxiety of mind has prevailed amongst the unsaved. Numbers have professed conversion.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

IN a letter to The Times of Saturday, Commander Lovett Cameron says:—

Unless the question of slavery be grappled with at once, the fertile and healthy countries lying around the two lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika will be robbed of their population, and be rendered valueless to merchant and planter alike. Cardinal Lavigerie, Lieutenant Wissman, and others, have told us how the evil effects of slave trading are spreading far and wide, and we hear how large tracts of country a few short years, nay, months ago, peopled by happy and prosperous villagers have, by the doings of Tipo-tipo and his associates, been rendered howling wildernesses.

It is not necessary here to enter into a recital of the crimes and barbarities committed by Sayol, Kahunda, and others of the inhuman gang, but it may be pointed out that the Congo Free State, which, be it remembered, recognises domestic slavery as a legal institution, is apparently quite unable to cope with the destruction that is being wrought within its nominal borders. Worse indeed than this, if Dr. Summers, a missionary residing on the Lulua, is to be believed, the officers of the Congo State permit their followers to engage in slaving, thus lowering their caravans to the level of those led by Alvez, Coimbra, and other rascally negroes and mulattoes.

I trust that what we are now daily hearing as to the doings of the slave traders in Africa may stir up our national feeling, and that by being the first in the field to free the downtrodden peoples of the lake regions we may yet further strengthen their indefeasible rights to be arbiters of the future we have already gained by our being first in exploration, missionary enterprise, and commercial undertakings. I am willing to co-operate in every possible way with all who wish to grapple with this dread demon of slavery, and to insure, so far as in me lies, that that part of Africa which I helped to reveal to the civilised world may yet be the home of a happy and contented people dwelling in peace and security.

REVIVAL AMONG WALDENSIANS.

I AM sure your readers will unite with us in thanking the Lord for the progress of religious life and work among the Waldensians of Italy.

Three years ago a revival commenced in the Girls' Orphanage. Forty at least professed to belong to Christ, after having wept over their sins during three days, so deep in them was the work of repentance. After two years we were able to ascertain that all except three had persevered, and even these were afterwards brought back to the Good Shepherd's fold. The spiritual atmosphere of that house, joined with the perfect cleanliness and order with which it was kept, was quite celestial. The Godly directress, after twenty-four years' experience, had just reached the point she had oftentimes yearned after. The House was now a real training home for the service of our blessed Redeemer.

Such an intense religious life was too much to be borne by a people whose past is indeed glorious, but which, like many Churches of the Reformation, had fallen, more or less, into spiritual deadness. When, sixty years ago, Felix Neff, the celebrated evangelist of the High Alps went in the Valleys, he had to deal with a worldly Church. After having held a few meetings, he was compelled to cross the frontier of France. He left, meanwhile, a few spiritual children, among whom stood an eminent elder, who was soon expelled from the Church. Their example, however, gradually improved the general state of matters in the Valleys, so that actually, we rejoice to say, all their ministers profess to be evangelical.

How sad it is, notwithstanding, to think that the "Table Vaudoise," the highest representation of the Waldensian Church, have thought proper to ask the dear and honoured directress and the oldest girls to leave the Orphanage; because, as one of their most spiritual ministers told us, "having never themselvase xperienced a revival among children, they imagined that it was mere excitement and folly," and to justify the strong step they had to take, they called the said movement a Salvationist one.

The year that followed that step was one of mourning for the Church, but of mighty spiritual blessing for the friends of the revival. A well-known and honoured sister in Christ, Miss Emma Green, from England, settled herself in the Valleys to help on the dismissed directress in her new field of labour, and with a pious and courageous elder of the Waldensian Church, they organised religious meetings, in which many souls have found peace in believing. Recently they were most encouraged to see a dear young pastor, truly revived and baptized with the Holy Spirit, coming to take the lead. His faithful ministry has been sealed already by many true conversions. Old Christians have been revived; and a multitude of young worldly men and women, and persons of every age, after having wept bitterly over their sins, are now confessing Christ as their Almighty Saviour. The writer of these lines had his heart filled with gratitude and joy in spending the month of July last among them, and witnessing unmistakable signs of a wonderful work of God Himself. He saw, for instance, a dozen young men, formerly frequenters of taverns and promoters of dances, &c., leaving early on a Sunday to go and evangelise the numerous shepherds of the higher valleys, and returning in the evening with faces beaming with the purest joy.

As our friends have hired three halls, and want to extend their work in districts where they are much wanted, they will be very thankful for any contributions sent to Miss Emma Green, Boers, Luserna-San-Giovanni, Italy.

MR. S. WALTON IN CAPE TOWN.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Spencer Walton's mission in Cape Town and its suburbs closes this week. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been very manifest, and we are praising God for glorious results. From the first the interest increased steadily. The halls which were available proved too small for the numbers who came. The large Wesleyan Church was offered, and filled nightly for about a week. The committee then decided to hire the Exhibition Building for ten days, and here numbers were found at the meetings who would not have entered a church. The interest aroused was real and deep, and on the last night about 2000 persons were admitted, and many were turned away for want of room. The number brought under conviction each evening has been remarkable, and in several instances whole families have professed conversion.

All the evangelical churches have united in this mission. Mr. Walton has preached in the Nonconformist churches as well as in some of the Dutch Reformed, and in the Presbyterian Church. He has also held drawing-room meetings for the upper classes, who have thus heard the Gospel. Christians have been greatly revived and helped by the afternoon Bible-readings.

Mr. Walton has won the confidence of all who love the truth, and many are hoping for his return to the colony, if possible to remain. Prayer is earnestly desired for blessing on his visit to Kimberley, notorious for vice and crime. He has also received an invitation from Johannesberg, the gold centre in the Transvaal. The opportunity is God-given. The results will depend on the believing prayers of his people.

"POISONOUS TRASH."

An interesting letter received from a lady residing in a provincial town which has recently been visited by a Bible-carriage sent out by the Christian Colportage Association shows that this is at least one excellent method of counteracting what she aptly calls the "Poisonous Trash" so widely sold. She says:—

"We have had a week of great blessing in this town, through the 'William Tyndale' Bible-carriage being here. The meetings held each evening have been greatly blessed to many, souls have been saved, and God's own children built up and refreshed. In fact a revival has begun which we pray may go on. The sale of Bibles, books, &c., has been very good. There is a factory here, and we have heard that some of the girls have bought several of the books, which have been passed round to the others and eagerly read. It did our hearts good on Saturday evening to see the people from the country returning home from market, most of them with packets of the books in their hands; thus the good seed will be sown in many villages, and will doubtless spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. We are so thankful for this visit of the Bible-carriage, because we see more and more how necessary it is to have an abundant supply of pure literature supplied at a low price to counteract the bad effects of the cheap novels so largely bought and read, especially by the young. We feel convinced that if our young men and women could have the opportunity oftener of purchasing their books from such a source as this, they would lose the feverish longing created by reading the poisonous trash crowding up so many of our booksellers' shops in the present day."

Doubtless the work of the Bible-carriage, but still more of the colporteur who regularly and systematically visits from door to door, is one of the most effective methods of dealing with this evil.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S AFRICAN MISSION

The work of God under Bishop William Taylor is being successfully carried on in Angola. Jesus is being put before the people both by example and precept. Working with our hands, we show them that they must be diligent in business. By precept, we teach them the way of salvation through a once crucified, but now risen and exalted Redeemer. The spiritual part of the work consists in two native services every Sunday. These are largely attended, and open-air services are also held. We are carrying on a little business for the Lord, in the shape of a shop; also a good timber business. It has fallen to my lot to have charge of the shop. In this way I am brought into contact with about one hundred souls every day. I have great opportunities of preaching Jesus to them. They are finding out that we trade honestly with them, and we are fast gaining their confidence.

A few days ago there came a man to me, who said he wanted to buy a god. I told him that I had one God, and that He made the world and all men. The man said, "Show me your God." I replied, that He was not made of wood or stone, neither by men's hands. I went on to say that God made the world and all men, and that He was near to everyone: further, that whosoever would call on Him would be heard and saved. I also told my inquirer that God loved men, and gave his Son to die for their sins. The poor man thought this was a strange thing. We have thus an open door set before us many times in the day to preach Jesus.

No wonder Bishop Taylor weeps like a child over poor, lost Africa. But, glory be to God, the knowledge of Him who saves from sin is being spread among the people. All that the poor African needs is Jesus. I would ask the readers of The Christian to bear us up in the arms of their faith and love before the throne. "Prayer moves the Hand that moves the world."

FORTHCOMING CONFERENCES.

The twenty-ninth annual Christian Conference at Perth will be held, God willing, September 11 to 13. The subject for consideration on the first day is: "Partnership and Fellowship with Christ;" on the second day, "Power in Christ for Service;" and on the third day, "At Rest in Christ, and Complete in Him." Lord Polwarth is chairman of the Conference. It is expected that Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar will preside at the Communion of the Lord's Supper on the afternoon of the third day. Several special meetings have been arranged by the Ladies' Committee.

The fourteenth Salisbury Conference has been fixed for September 24 to 28 inclusive. The subjects for the morning meetings will be: "The Service of the King," in various phases; and in the evenings "Foundation Truths" will be considered. Bible-readings and prayer-meetings have also been arranged. The Maundrel Hall is the appointed place of assembly.

On September 25 to 27 the annual Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held at Plymouth. The subjects include: "The Holy Spirit in the Church;" "The Unity of the Body of Christ;" "The Bible a Witness in all ages to the common salvation and to the unity of God's people;" "The Dulness of the Christian Life;" "The Lord's Day." At public meetings, addresses will be delivered on "National Deliverances: The Spanish Armada 1588, and the Revolution 1688;" "Christianity in Relation to the Social Questions of the Day;" "Fidelity to the Truth;" and "Spiritual Shortcomings, Possibilities, and Determinations." The secretaries may be addressed, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

Clifton Conference (the 26th) has been fixed for October 2 to 4. The subject will be: "The Word of God: (1) Written (2 Tim. iii. 15—17); (2) Incarnate (John i. 14); (3) Indwelling (2 Cor. iii. 3)." Numerous meetings have been arranged.

PRAYERFUL WISHES.

May thy life be pure and holy,
  Crowned with love and joy and peace;
This sweet motto—"Jesus only"—
  Be thy own till life shall cease.

Loving words by thee be spoken,
  Holy deeds be done each day,
Render to thy Lord true service,
  Trust Him fully and obey.

Surely thou canst trust thy Master:
  He will give thee nought to do,
But will grant thee grace and courage,
  And the strength to do it too.

May the loving Saviour bless thee,—
  May He keep thee day by day;
May the angel of his presence
  Guard thee on thy homeward way.

What is better than his blessing?
  What is sweeter than his care?
That these may be thine for ever
  Is my earnest, heartfelt prayer.

Lean thy whole weight on thy Saviour.
  Cling to his dear, loving hand;
Very gently may He lead thee
  To the bright and better land.

Look to Him in days of darkness
  As thy Helper, Friend, and Guide
Jesus never, never faileth;
  Trust in Him whate'er betide.

When the evening shadows lengthen,
  At the close of life's short day,
May his presence cheer and comfort,
  May He be thy strength and stay.

AN EARNEST PROHIBITIONIST.

Mr. W. Jennings Demorest is a New York philanthropist, who is giving time, money, and influence to the cause of prohibiting the liquor traffic. Although he is largely interested in giant business concerns, publications, and estates, his best attention is devoted to the American Prohibition Movement in connection with their New York Bureau. Mr. Demorest is a thorough enthusiast, and has wholly abandoned himself to the task of crushing the liquor traffic.

On Wednesday, last week, he was received in Manchester by the United Kingdom Alliance. In an address of some length, he essayed to show the fallacy of half measures in dealing with the drink monopoly. For centuries men have treated the alcoholic poison as though it were one of the good gifts of God; it is deplorable to think that so many of the clergy not only tolerate it, but habitually use it. The most aggravating thing in the whole history of jurisprudence is the sanction given by law, for a monetary consideration, to the sale of the poison. Under this encouragement, the consumption of intoxicating drink had become so great that our very civilisation is in danger of being obliterated. Prohibition will accomplish, in the shortest possible time, the end we have in view; the full meaning of it is the suppression of evil and the protection of good.

Mr. Demorest flatly contradicted the statement frequently made that the Maine Law is a failure. Where $11,000,000 were spent on liquor before the passing of this law less than $1,000,000 is spent now. In America the prohibitionists are thoroughly organised, and hold the balance of power between the two political parties.

From an interview with Mr. Demorest in The Echo we learn that he seeks to interest young people by giving valuable medals for oratorical contests on Prohibition. Young people in Bands of Hope and Sunday-schools all over the land may enter the lists. Mr. Demorest announces his willingness to furnish an unlimited number of these medals in England and America.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF DECLINE.—A YOUNG WOMAN at FORDHAM.

Two years from the time at which I write (in May), this patient, Miss LETITIA GERMANY, of FORDHAM, near COLCHESTER, applied to me by the recommendation of Rev. W. KING, who, for seventeen years, was pastor of the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S CHURCH at that place, but had retired from the ministry.

She had been always delicate, but when Mr. King wrote was "confined to her bed, or nearly so," and the doctor had said "her lungs were going."

Her illness had commenced with bronchitis twelve months before this, followed by fresh colds. Then cough, phlegm mixed with blood, constant severe pains, short breathing, palpitations, perspirations, loss of flesh, and weakness, followed in the usual course of the patient's symptoms when the lungs are diseased. Mr. King wrote, "Please help if you can."

In two months she was able to write:—"I am so much better, I am able to get about. I think I shall soon be able to begin my work again." She persevered till well.

The present minister, Rev. W. Davidson, writing me April 11, '88, says:—"The young woman, Letitia Germany, whose case was considered hopeless, and who, in a few months, completely recovered, has continued well ever since."

PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE.

The tenth annual Conference at Pakefield, near Lowestoft, for the promotion of growth in grace, has just taken place. Three meetings were held each day, which were attended by a larger number of people than on any former occasion. Valuable addresses were delivered, the presence of the Lord was realised, and much blessing was received.

Rev. H. Pelham Stokes took his subject from the heading of Esth. v., "Esther, adventuring on the king's favour, obtained the grace of the golden sceptre." The word "grace" lifts the Old Testament into the New Testament dispensation. "Grace" tells of God's dealing with men only; Milton says it is "not for angels, but for men"; it is for men who have a free will, and on this account have fallen from the high position God intended for them. But "grace" in all its beauty and glory comes in through Jesus Christ.

If a person unbidden found grace in the Persian king's sight, he held out to him the golden sceptre, as a sign "that he may live." Esther boldly ventures into the king's presence, without caring whether she perished or not; she goes probably with a believing faith, and the result is that the king holds out to her the golden sceptre. We are bidden to go into the presence of the great King, who is too high, too pure, and too holy to endure any kind of sin. And as with Esther, so there is with us, a dread and fear to enter into that presence, because of our unworthiness, and, considering his holiness, there is none fit to approach Him. If we go into God's presence with faith, in the name of Jesus, the golden sceptre will be held out to us, for "God is love." Let us come boldly into God's presence, in his name, and with true holiness in our hearts, and then we shall "obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

MORE AND MORE.

In the afternoon Rev. Edward Brewer delivered an address on this subject. In the three closing verses of Rom. iv. we have the ground work of all life; for as soon as we can rest on the finished work of Christ, and see what He is to us, and what He has done for us, then we can realise that we are "justified by faith." The speaker noticed at length the beautiful progression indicated in chap. v.: "Being justified by faith" we have (1) peace, (2) access into this grace, (3) we stand, (4) we rejoice in hope of the glory of God, (5) we glory in tribulations, knowing, (6) we shall be saved by his life, (7) not only so, ver. 11; (8) much more the grace of God, and (9) grace did much more abound.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF THE WORLD.

Canon Ripley spoke powerfully on this subject, "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God." The Lord Jesus Christ knew that the world was a scene of danger and temptation to his people, so He prayed to his Father to keep them (John xvii. 11). In 1 John ii. 12—15 the Apostle speaks to all classes of Christians. He bids all to "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world" (ver. 15), for it is the love of the world that too often hinders blessing from Christians. In the parable of the great supper, what was the excuse, but the world? We are to learn to use the world, not to abuse it. We abuse the world if we set our hearts on anything in it.

THE CHRISTIAN'S CALLING.

On Thursday morning Rev. J. J. Luce spoke from 2 Tim. i. 7—9. We are saved first, then called, set free from our sins in order that we may serve and live for God. We are called into fellowship with Christ, to be partakers of his suffering, to be one with Jesus, and to be of the same nature as Christ after his resurrection. In the Sermon on the Mount we have given to us the character of the followers of Christ: (1) poor in spirit, (2) mourners, (3) meek, (4) merciful, (5) pure in heart, (6) peacemakers, (7) persecuted. God never witholds anything from his servants. He had to teach Israel that all must be given up for Him. We are commanded to "put on the whole armour of God," not a part of it. Let us ask counsel of God at all times, wherever we may be; and in going forth to work for Him, let us say, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

THE WORK OF THE HOLY GHOST.

Rev. L. Price gave an address on the threefold work of the Spirit. He shall convince the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment (John xvi. 8). The work of Christ was to accomplish our redemption, and the work of the Holy Ghost is to apply it. Christ did his work by the Holy Ghost. By the Holy Ghost He was conceived, led, cast out devils, preached the Gospel, offered Himself to God, and rose again. Christ now by the same Spirit appropriates the redemption to them that believe, by convincing them of sin, righteousness, and judgment. Thus the Holy Ghost convinces us of our sin and need first, then proceeds to convince us of righteousness—righteousness of Christ. Need is the only qualification. We cannot value Christ except as we need Him. Righteousness is most important to the sinful and needy. The righteousness of the law requires perfect obedience from us, and perfect satisfaction or atonement for sin. Every fallen creature is absolutely helpless to meet these demands of the law. Hence our need of Christ and his righteousness. He fulfilled these demands in our stead. He rendered perfect obedience to the law, and "became the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth;" He has made full satisfaction and atonement for sin by the sacrifice of Himself, thereby putting away sin, and bringing in everlasting righteousness. His righteousness covers our justification, imputed in the former, and imparted in the latter; hence, not of works, but only of grace. Lastly, the Holy Ghost convinces of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged. Christ saves us not only from sin, but also from the devil, the author of sin. Redemption is complete when it saves from sin and its author. Sin has been put away by Christ, the law fulfilled, and the penalty of death paid, hence, the devil is judged and his power destroyed, and our humanity redeemed. To convince us of this judgment is the final work of the Holy Ghost.

At the closing meeting Rev. C. H. Leathes spoke on Christian progress, basing his remarks on Eph. iv. 14, 15.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION.—The missionary in charge of one of the Gospel tents last year writes:—A man whose character for many years was most wretched called to see me the other day in respectable circumstances. He professed to find Christ at one of the services last season. Another, who kept in the field behind the tent, called also a short time since, clean and decent, and gratefully told of blessing received. We hope to erect six marquees this year, and we stand in need of help.

Alton, Hants. T. Chinn.

INFIDELITY IN THE LONDON PARKS.—For some time past, the great activity of infidels on Sundays, in the public parks of London, has been painfully realised by Christian workers. Prayer has been offered to God that the people frequenting such places may be graciously inclined to listen to Divine truth rather than to atheistic harangues. At the noonday prayer-meeting of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday last, it was announced that the sceptics have already left some of the parks, because the people will only flock round preachers of the Gospel. In other directions, also, there are evident signs of the hearing ear being vouchsafed to people who have been wont to spend their Sundays to little purposes, walking about in the parks. Reference was also made to the fact that for many years not a few Christians have made it a point to earnestly pray for the enlightenment of the infidel leaders. A request was made that fervent petitions should continue to be offered to God, to the end that atheists and others may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

OBITUARY.

REV. T. PENRY EVANS.

One of the ablest of the Welsh preachers and platform speakers has just died. Rev. T. Penry Evans, of Pontardulais, Carmarthenshire, had for some time suffered from heart disease, and had recently been resting. He intended resigning his ministry last Sunday, but after the congregation had gathered the news came that he had passed away, and no service was held. He was ordained in 1868, and had attained an influential position among the Congregationalists of the Principality.

REV. ROBERT MILLIGAN, DUNDEE.

Great grief has been occasioned at Dundee by the sad death of Rev. Robert Milligan, who was drowned while bathing a few days ago at Montrose, where he was spending a brief holiday with his family. Mr. Milligan had not gone far into the water when he was carried off his feet and dragged out to sea by a strong current that was running at the place. Efforts to rescue him were in vain, but the body was afterwards recovered. Mr. Milligan was ordained in 1863, and was a well-known Free Church minister. For years past he has reported the Dundee Conference for our columns, and was expecting to do the same this year.

MR. HENRY RICHARD, M.P.

This well-known Christian legislator passed away on Tuesday morning, last week, in his 77th year. The son of a rural schoolmaster, the deceased gentleman became connected in early life with the Calvinistic Methodists, and was ordained one of their ministers. Devoting himself afterwards to the cause of peace, he advocated international unity and disarmament. Duties in connection with this important and urgent cause led Mr. Richard to give up his pastoral work. During many years, in and out of Parliament, he has spoken vigorously in favour of religious equality and international arbitration, and his efforts have been seconded by an ever-growing and increasingly influential body of politicians and philanthropists.

MRS. BARKER HARRISON.

On Monday week Mrs. Barker Harrison (Adeline Cooper) passed away, in her sixty-sixth year. She had for years been in failing health, and never quite recovered from a fall which she sustained in November last. A sincere disciple of Christ, she was highly respected by the poor of Westminster, where she laboured with great diligence. Over thirty years ago she opened her little ragged school in the "One Tun" public-house, and since then many other useful agencies have been added. Larger premises having been taken, the work now includes day and Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, boot club, a penny bank, and mothers' meetings; while a youth's institute, Gospel services, and evangelistic efforts go to complete this happy work. It is to be hoped that others will carry on these good agencies.

PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.

This distinguished scientist and devoted servant of Christ has entered into rest. His laborious researches as a naturalist, and his long-continued microscopical studies gained him a world-wide fame; while his thoughtful works on Divine revelation, and the warrant of the faith of the Gospel, gained for him high esteem as a Biblical expositor. For five months past Mr. Gosse had been an invalid, suffering, first from bronchitis, and latterly from supervening maladies. On Thursday morning, last week, after much suffering, borne with a patience befitting the lively hope which he had, he passed away in his sleep, at the age of 79. Reserving for a future issue further particulars of the career of this truly good man, we may add that his beloved wife has been wonderfully sustained in her bereavement.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on Gospel services at St. George's, Bristol, from Sept. 8 to 12, by Mr. J. N. Howells, Cardiff.——For blessing on mission services in Glasgow Free Churches, South Side, commencing Sunday, Sept. 2, conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie.——For blessing on Gospel services on Sunday and Monday next, at Pontymoile, South Wales.——For blessing on the Convention on the Pre-Millennial Coming of Christ, to be held in Edinburgh in October next.——For blessing on Christian work at Clyde, Hawkes Bay, New Zealand.——For blessing on a Gospel mission, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne in Southport, from Sept. 9 to 17.

Letters to the Editor.

DID JESUS TEACH THE ATONEMENT?

Sir,—I thank you for publishing my last letter (July 27), and specially thank "The Writer of the Article" for his reply. The kindness and fairness of that reply I willingly acknowledge, as well as the force of much of it; but one could not help feeling that the writer had not met my main contention, which was that our Lord did not preach the Atonement, and that, therefore, it is not essential to the presentation of the Christian Gospel. This is "more clearly and definitely answered" in your issue of August 10, by "H. D. B.," who heads his article, "Jesus Taught the Atonement." With your permission, I make the following remarks on his paper:—

Of its seven paragraphs, five do not concern us. The first two are introductory and general, the third an explanation why Jesus did not always teach the doctrine, and the last two a defence of the doctrine itself. Only the remaining two bring forward evidence that Jesus taught it. The former of them treats of Christ's moral teaching, especially the Sermon on the Mount; the latter adduces four texts of apparently direct application.

As to the Sermon on the Mount, "H. D. B." says it shows the absolute necessity for an atonement by holding up a standard to which none of us attain. This may be true; it is not Jesus's teaching. The conclusion He enforces is not: You can never be holy like this, so you need an Atonement; but it is this: Having heard these things, do them (Matt. vii. 21—28). I cannot see how anyone can say that here our Lord even hints at the ideas of atonement, substitution, or imputed righteousness. (I am sorry that I cannot see the relevance of the text quoted at the end of this paragraph.)

In the next paragraph "H. D. B." quotes four texts. Surely they must be very explicit, if they—four lines—are to justify his heading. The first and third are certainly not so, being references to our Lord's death as a fact (if the latter be indeed that) without any suggestion of its doctrinal significance. To say Jesus mentioned his death is not to prove "Jesus taught the Atonement." The second text appears to be more direct, but that is because it is out of its context, which manifestly shows that what our Lord was teaching at the time was a lesson of humility. To say He was teaching substitution is to make the whole passage meaningless, and surely a phrase must be judged by its setting and not by itself. The last quotation is different. One cannot discuss that difficult passage here; but, even granting it to mean what "H. D. B." would have it mean, I ask two questions: (1) Is that word of institution enough to justify the statement, "Jesus taught the Atonement"? (2) If that be the only evidence, and, really, I humbly submit that the rest of "H. D. B.'s" evidence amounts to nil—does not that prove my original contention that in Christ's preaching the doctrine had no place. I must repeat that I do not in the least deny the truth of the doctrine; all I say is, if it was not proclaimed by Christ in his Gospel, it is not an essential of Gospel preaching.

"H. D. B." does not discuss the immense negative evidence. Look at the parables: the Prodigal Son, or the last judgment. Look at our Lord's conversations, e.g., with the Scribe who answered discreetly. Look at that sublime passage in which our Lord more distinctly than anywhere else speaks of the meaning of his death, and enunciates the principle, not of atonement, but of self-sacrifice (John xii. 23—25). Look, finally, at the risen Lord's commission, in which He tells his disciples not to preach the Atonement, but to teach the nations his commands. This negative evidence is overwhelming in comparison with "H. D. B.'s."

One of your contributors said that for Christ the Gospel of the Atonement was an "impossible" Gospel; another says He "did teach the Atonement." Is not this much undeniable: that our Lord saved sinners by telling them to follow Him day by day in life? And I ask again, why may not his ministers, humbly yet hopefully do the same?—Yours, &c., A Student.

P.S.—I find this letter, written hurriedly, reads somewhat curtly and controversially. Please believe this is owing to the attempt to be concise.

REPLY.

The writer of this letter makes several erroneous statements. I note a few of the more important.

(1) He says that, if the doctrine of the Atonement was not proclaimed by Christ in his Gospel, it is not an essential of Gospel preaching. This might be true if the whole of Scripture, including both Old and New Testaments, were uninspired, with the exception of the four "Gospels" or narratives of our Lord's life on earth. I do not know if "A Student" maintains that position.

(2) He adduces what he calls "the immense negative evidence," namely, many of our Lord's parables and discourses, in which no direct reference was made to the Atonement, as if it proved that our Lord did not teach that doctrine. Had the question been, Did our Lord teach nothing else? this would undoubtedly have proved his case; but as that is not the question, this "negative evidence" proves nothing.

(3) Referring to one of the passages quoted, "This cup is the New Covenant in my blood which is shed for you," he thinks that, even granting it conveys the meaning we attach to it, it is not sufficient to justify the statement that Jesus taught the Atonement. I maintain that, even had it been the only recorded occasion when our Lord referred to this great fundamental truth, it is alone a complete justification of the statement. But he is mistaken also in supposing that the few quotations given were the only ones where our Lord taught this great truth. In fact, our Lord taught this truth over and over again in language that is clear and unmistakable: First, if the plain and obvious meaning of the words be taken, and not as "A Student" does, in supposing that when Jesus said, "He came to give his life a ransom for many," He was simply teaching a "lesson of humility!" and second, if the clear references to Old Testament Scripture be in view.

Lastly, Our risen Lord did not only tell his disciples to "teach the nations his commands"; He told them to "preach the Gospel," and He promised them the "Spirit of Truth" to guide them into all truth, to "teach them all things," and to "bring all things to your remembrance whatsoeevr I have said unto you." Is it, then, within the bounds of reason to suppose that under the inspiration of that "Spirit of Truth" the Apostles taught what Jesus, who commissioned them, had never taught? although, for reasons already given, they now both understood and taught it with greater fulness.

We are glad to see that "A Student" "does not in the least deny the truth of the doctrine"; only he considers it to be "not an essential of Gospel preaching." But surely, if he weighs the matter well, he will be led to see that, if it be true, it can be nothing less than the very corner stone of the Gospel, and that it is the one grand theme of the whole Word of God, including our Lord's teaching during his earthly ministry. H. D. B.

HOLIDAYS FOR POOR CLERGY.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to say a word on this subject. Of late years it has forced itself on my reflection in a very painful manner, namely, by the want of it. Let me say at once, I am a very poor curate, with a very large family; a very small stipend; no prospects whatever of promotion, as far as I can see, although for many years I have done my duty honestly, to the very best of my power, and I have ample evidence to show that my labours have not been devoid of fruit. Yet, like Ixion, I am tied to the wheel year in year out. Now, surely there are many of the Lord's people who are stewards of the things of this world, and who would, if they only gave the matter a thought, be pleased to offer the Lord's poor struggling ministers hospitality.

Is there no Scriptural warrant for this? One of the qualifications of a widow was, "If she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted." We are told the labourer is worthy of his hire. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine," say Paul. He himself was much refreshed by the kindness of the Philippians in sending him relief. If we go to the Old Testament, we see the Shunamite a worthy hostess to the prophet Elisha. She made an addition to her house for his sake in the shape of a little room—the prophet's chamber; and furnished it very plainly for him. No doubt the prophet was thankful for this quiet privacy. These cases are enough to show that in extending hospitality to the Lord's servants, those who have the means would be treading in the footsteps of good people.

And really we want a change. Our work is very laborious and very trying. Shall one of the richest churches in Christendom suffer its poorer clergy to work on, year after year, amid scenes that are wearying, inadequately provided for, who have to suffer untold privations in their families, and who are frowned at, despised, because of a poverty they cannot help, and this without any change or relaxation? Little do the wealthy know of the depression, the burden, the life and death struggles of the poor curate and his family.

I am often told that among other things I ought not to have got married, and so have run the risk of having a family I can so inadequately provide for. Well, all I can say is, that I fully believed honest, hard work would certainly have brought me preferment. It has not done so. Everything I have applied for has been denied me. I have no influential patron, no friend at Court, and so I am left struggling on to carry a burden that has well nigh become unbearable. This is after many years of hard work in very laborious parishes. And I have no means of taking even a day's holiday. This wear and tear is fast breaking me up. My hair is very white. It cannot be very long ere I humbly trust I shall hear the Master's voice calling me to a higher service still. I feel very tired in his service often now. The flesh indeed is weak. I am not tired of his service. And, still, I must say that amidst much kindness that I have not deserved, I have also witnessed much undeserved harshness.

Will not those to whom the Lord has committed the riches of this world try and alleviate the lot of his poor struggling servants by endeavouring to give them a change every year? They could invite them to their houses. Everyone would, I presume, know of one or more who would be glad of such a change. And it would, indeed, be no disadvantage to the wealthy in that great day of account: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of these little ones, ye have done it unto Me."

A Curate of Many Years' Standing.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

Dear Sir,—May I, through your columns, say a few words to your correspondent "E. H." Whilst one would earnestly stir the Lord's people to liberal giving, and encourage all to be systematic in that, as in every grace (2 Cor. ix. 6—9), yet is it not well to keep within Scriptural principles? remembering that, not only the term, but also the idea of "the Lord's tenth" is entirely foreign to the New Testament?

It is curious to notice what a day this is for forming unions beyond those grand seven unities of Eph. iv. 3—6. Is there no danger of a lurking desire to have something in the pledge, or the badge, or the association to lean upon, besides the grace of the Lord Himself?

I confess that I shrink from the multiplication of these unions, of which I find no trace in Scripture. Let each seek to learn the Lord's will, and to walk in it, before Him. In principle, no longer an Old Testament tenth, but now all that we are and have is his, who for our sakes became poor. Therefore, all our expenditure should be systematically before Him and to Him. But how much easier it is to join a crowd in singing, "Not a mite would I withhold," at a convention, than in quiet, simple home life to yield the holy acceptable sacrifice to God! The Lord's work needs gifts, and we may gather from 1 Cor. xvi., and 2 Cor. viii. and ix., that they form as much a part of worship as anything else. If for "E. H." it be the tenth, well; with many other of the Lord's stewards it is much more than that; and I have known some whose gifts, from very small means, amounted to far less than a tenth, and yet, I doubt not, were "mites" far more precious in the Master's sight than the much larger gifts of many that are rich.

Would not such poor ones of the flock be grieved by a union such as is proposed? Rather let it be, "Every man as he purposeth in his heart, not grudgingly, or of necessity."

Yours faithfully; J. G. Halliday.

EVANGELISATION OR EDUCATION?

Dear Sir,—I have just met with the following very significant declaration in a leading article in The Eastern Star, published in Madras on July 25. It relates to the education controversy which has been exciting much interest there, owing to the mutiny in the Madras Christian College, caused by a native applying for baptism, reference to which has already appeared in your paper. The editor of The Eastern Star, who is a native Christian, says:—

"What distinguishes the Bible from all other sacred books is the great historical fact that God became man in the person of Jesus Christ, and by dying—the Just for the unjust—reconciled the world to Himself, and opened up a way of salvation to repentant and believing sinners. It is to announce this good news to Indians that the missionaries are sent here. Whatever else they do, if they do not do this, their mission is a failure. The Bible, with all its excellent morality, minus 'Christ and Him crucified,' is little better than other sacred books, and ceases to be the power of God unto the salvation of men. The Christian missionary may be a sound educationist, ay, and a consummate politician besides, but if he is not essentially an evangelist, he is a traitor to his Saviour, and a disgrace to his noble calling." . . .

"We cannot bring ourselves to imagine that men, women, and children deny themselves in the far West and send out the Christian missionaries to this country at such cost to themselves, simply to make the natives B.A.'s and M.A.'s, and enable them to earn money and abuse Christianity. The extensive missionary enterprise in this country as well as in other countries is only a fulfilment of the command of the risen Lord Jesus—the command to go and preach the Gospel to all nations. And if the Christian missionary is not to do this, any other kind of work that he may do, how noble soever it be, will satisfy neither himself nor those that send him out."

It seems to me that this Madrassee native Christian has a much truer conception of the great commission than those educational missionaries who are spending their time in teaching Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, and other sciences to poor benighted Hindoos, without God and without hope in the world.

I trust that the supporters in Scotland and elsewhere of this Madras Christian College will lose no time in putting it upon a thoroughly evangelistic basis, and that "Christ and Him crucified" will in future be the theme of the professors, and that the students will no longer be able to say, as they do in one of their memorials to the Senatus, now before me, "that they never for a moment thought the immediate object of the College was conversion," and "that the Principal carefully avoided any active means of conversion."

Yours faithfully, Robert Paton.

MR. B. SHORT, evangelist from Australia, has conducted a short series of services at Bocking, Essex, which were illustrated by a model of the Tabernacle. The addresses were listened to with attention, and it is hoped that much good will be the result.

SUNDAY CLOSING.—The second reading of the English Sunday Closing Bill has been deferred to the Autumn Session. It is believed that an overwhelming majority of the people of England desire the passing of this measure. Friends of the movement can obtain written petitions and all necessary information on application to the Secretary of the Sunday Closing Association, 14, Brown-street, Manchester.

SUNDAY TRAFFIC.—At the meeting recently held of the proprietors of the London Road Car Company, there was some discussion with respect to the running of omnibuses on Sundays. Complaint was made that the men only get one Sunday off each month, and it was urged that they ought to have at least three. A hope was expressed that the Company would one day be in a position to revert to the old custom of not running at all on Sundays. A director stated that the cars were run on Sunday "in order to earn a dividend for the shareholders."

LOCAL PREACHERS IN IRELAND.—The annual meeting of the Belfast Local Preachers' Association has been held. The report was of a most cheering character, and stated that there are about one hundred local preachers in the district. During the year eight mission halls have been regularly worked, a large number of open-air services have been conducted, and these have been attended by thousands who go to no place of worship; a paid evangelist has been employed, who has devoted all his time to the town of Comber, and whose labours have been signally successful; and neighbouring circuits and other churches have received assistance from time to time. Altogether the record of the past year is most encouraging, and gives cause for much thankfulness to God.

Dover Soldiers' Home.—This Institution is in great need of funds. It is trusted that those who are interested in the spiritual welfare of our soldiers may be kindly inclined to help, so far as they are enabled to do so. Contributions will be very thankfully received by Miss Wright, Lady Superintendent, Soldiers' Home, 118, Snargate-street, Dover.

A NEW ALLIANCE.—The Echo, of August 21, gives particulars of a new "Evangelische Bund," formed in Germany in order to arrest the growing interference of Jesuitism or Vaticanism with the social and political life of the commune and the nation, at least throughout Germany and the German-speaking parts of Austria and Switzerland. It appeals, consequently, to the sympathies of Old Catholics as well as of Protestants. There is hardly a theologian of renown throughout Germany who has not become a member of it.

PERSECUTION IN ARMENIA.—Rev. R. Chambers, writing to the Turkish Missions' Aid Society concerning the state of Turkish Armenia, says:—Hundreds of Christians are crowded into the prisons of Erzeroum, Erzingan, Diarbekir, Harpoot, and Van. The most jealously watched prisoners are school teachers and priests. These are suspected of attempts to arouse the national spirit of the Armenians. The country is full of spies. The Sultan has hastened to decorate some of those who have been most prominent in effecting these pitiless and senseless arrests. The gates of Erzeroum are guarded by police, and Christians going out and coming in are searched for books or papers, and imprisoned until any found can be translated and examined.

Dr. A. J. Gordon's New Book.

Grace and Glory (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) is the title of Dr. Gordon's new volume of sermons lately published in this country; and the contents answer well to the promise of such a heading. Christianity, with this preacher, is not a thing that can be called "other worldliness" for his teaching is of the most practical sort. At the same time, Dr. Gordon is strong on the reflex influence that the coming glory ought to have on the every-day life and witness of the believer. Thus he presents a full-orbed Gospel message—grace for the present, glory in the near or distant future. The outstanding characteristics of these twenty chapters are general freshness of treatment and peculiar aptitude in striking illustration. Dr. Gordon finds a heavenly parable where many preachers would only see a common-place phrase. He is a patient and hopeful explorer in the wide realms of spiritual truth, and those who accept his guidance through these sermons will come back from their excursion laden with the goodly fruits of Canaan, and better fitted to continue their pilgrimage towards the promised land.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sunny Fields and Shady Woods. By Madame de Gasparin. 6s. Sampson, Low & Rivington. A series of sketchy tales, with good morals, and every now and then sound spiritual teaching, skilfully introduced. The scenes are naturally laid in foreign countries, and the English, though correct, is tinged with foreign idioms. "A Little Hat" is, perhaps, the best of the series. Some of the tales are, in our opinion, too sentimental, and the authoress, in aiming at conciseness, is at times obscure.

Turkey. By Stanley Lane-Poole. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. This is the fourteenth volume of the excellent series of works in which "The Story of the Nations" is being told. Intensely interesting throughout, and contributing in no small measure to an understanding of the general history of Europe, this work may be safely recommended. It is well illustrated, also furnished with maps. Mr. Lane-Poole has received efficient assistance from Mr. E. J. W. Gibb, Mr. A. Gilman and others, and he is to be congratulated on the success which has attended his efforts to make the book readable as well as reliable.

Bible Sketches. By Rev. S. G. Green, D.D. (Vol. i. Old Testament; Vol. ii. New Testament). Price 3s. each. Religious Tract Society. This work has already met with ready acceptance from Bible students and teachers, and has established its position as an important help for the imparting of Scripture truth to the young. Dr. Green has a happy manner of expounding and illustrating his lessons, which is both effective and interesting to young readers, and to wish these volumes (now revised) an increased measure of success to that which they have already met with is to wish them a great deal, but no more than they deserve.

The Battle of Langside and other Poems. By the late Rev. James G. Small. Nisbet. In this neat little volume, a number of pieces contributed by their respected author to various periodicals, from 1884 to 1887, are brought together. They were well worth publishing in this form. Whatever the theme, spiritual truth or historical incident, Mr. Small was always very happy in poetical expression. Special mention may be made of the beautiful lines on the name Jehovah as conjoined with the words Jireh, Shammah, Shalom, Nissi, and Rophi.

Calvinistic Election not taught in the Bible. By Rev. Robert Wood, of Ramsgate. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard. The author rejoices in having been emancipated from views which some Christians hold, in many cases to their mental trouble and spiritual hurt. He here examines the Epistle to the Romans and other portions of Holy writ, and shows their entire harmony with the free invitations of the Gospel. Excellent in tone, and mainly on the lines of Rev. Dr. Morison's well-known exposition, this pamphlet will doubtless find many appreciative readers.

Fundamental Truths. 1s. Hawkins. This volume contains a series of addresses which were delivered in May last at Conferences of Christians in the Clapham Hall, Stoke Newington. The subjects cover a wide range: prophecy and ministry, sanctification and responsibility are dealt with at considerable length. The book is an excellent compendium of experimental truth and spiritual instruction.

Struggles for Life. By W. Knighton, LL.D 5s. Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C. This is a genuine endeavour to state and illustrate the terrific struggle for life which has long gone on, and still goes on, in the world. Though not having a religious object, the book is calculated to greatly interest thoughtful Christians. The chapters on social struggles, greed, fashion, war, and the extinction of races, demand special attention; they are both eloquent and timely. The fact that this work has reached a third edition is a certain evidence of its high character.

Four Girls at Chautauqua, and Chautauqua Girls at Home. By "Pansy." Partridge & Co. The latter of these books is a sequel to the former. They respectively show how four girls, without any desire for spiritual things, decided to visit a Chautauqua camp meeting, which was the means of their conversion, and how the change manifested itself in their subsequent lives. The lessons taught are of course excellent, but there is a lack of robustness in the characters depicted which minimises their effect. Perhaps the use of American expressions with which English readers are unacquainted may be partially responsible for this impression, but Christian heroines even in story-books should be so represented as to command admiration and respect. Other books of the series are Wise and Otherwise, a very well written tale, which is a sequel to The King's Daughters, and An Endless Chain and Three People. All these may be had in large cheap edition, with coloured paper covers, price 4d. each, and are well suited for cottage and village circulation.

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

CASSELL & CO.

In The Quiver, Rev. W. H. Aitken gives utterance to some very searching and much-needed words on the unselfishness of true evangelical religion. An excellent and well-illustrated sketch is given of Headdon's Kindergarten Training Home for Girls, at Newnham-on-Severn. Rev. Harry Jones writes with much force on "Conversion," its necessity for all, and what it implies. We scarcely like the distinction implied in the title of the Duchess of Rutland's brief paper on "The Temperance and Total Abstinence Movement." The Special Commissioner reports this month an interview with Rev. Teignmouth Shore, and his meetings for children of the "upper classes." Among the "Short Arrows" is a notice of Miss Meredith Brown's work on behalf of factory girls in Lisson-grove.

If we were, in a sentence, to characterise The Woman's World under its present editorship, we should say it has too much that relates to the vain world, and too little that bears on the interests of the true woman. We are charmed, however, with the philosophical insight shown in "A Queen's Thoughts," by "Carmen Sylvia" (the Queen of Roumania). We regret to see the name of a notorious female author of unhealthy fiction in the forefront of the contributors for the month. What is to be said of a writer who can describe the London policeman taking "half an hour to beat out a dog's brains"? Or of a sentence like the following: "A waggon drawn by poor suffering horses, and laden with shrieking children, going to Epping Forest; open-air preachers ranting hideously of hell and the devil; gin-palaces, music-halls, and the flaring gas jets on barrows full of rotting fruit, are all that London provides in the way of enjoyment, or decoration for its multitudes"? Anyone who can exaggerate so grossly must see things through a strangely distorted medium. It is pitiful to see literary talent prostituted in this way.

Sick-Diet and Applications. A useful pamphlet for every home, by Dr. F. W. Cory. 1½d. post free, from Jarvis & Co., printers, Bournemouth.

The Cottar's Saturday Night. In this pretty booklet, sumptuously illustrated by J. Stanley, Burns's well-known poem is presented in a dainty and very attractive form. (1s. Nisbet.)

The Tabernacle in the Wilderness. A very suggestive pamphlet, containing notes on a Bible-reading. The price is 4d. post free, and copies may be had from Mrs. Osmond, 63, London-road, Leicester.

Sunday Afternoon, September 9.

The Covenant with David.—Ps. cxxxii.; Luke i. 67—72.

A full account of the Covenant the Lord made with David is recorded in 2 Sam. vii. In Ps. cxxxii., which is one of the fifteen Pilgrim Psalms, the Covenant is cited (vv. 10—12), probably for the encouragement of the Jewish people after their return from the captivity; and in Luke i. 67—72 we have an authoritative statement which justifies the belief that the promises of the Covenant were fulfilled in the person of the Lord Jesus. Note—

(1) The Old Testament Covenant.—Psalm cxxxii. is a reflection of the Covenant made with David (2 Sam. vii.). Concerning this Covenant note: (a) Its Davidic origin.—"Remember David" (ver. 1; Luke i. 69). David is spoken of in Heb. xi. as one who "obtained promises" (vv. 32—33). He obtained the promises of this Covenant. (Comp. 2 Pet. i. 1—4). (b) The mercy that pervades it—Isaiah (lv. 3) and St. Paul (Acts xiii. 34) speak of "the sure mercies of David" (comp. "my mercy shall not depart away from him," 2 Sam. vii. 15, and Solomon's prayer, "Remember the mercies of David, thy servant," 2 Chron. vi. 42). The Lord can only give blessing to sinners in the way of mercy (Gen. xix. 16; Ps. lxvii. 1; Luke i. 78; Titus iii. 5). (c) The regard of the Lord for loving service, which is associated with it (Ps. cxxxii. 1—5).—David's faith in God was manifested by good works. This is seen in his desire to build a house for God, and in the trouble he took to provide for the erection. The expression of this desire led to the making of the Covenant (2 Sam. vii. 1—4). God remembers and rewards all true service (Heb. vi. 10; Matt. x. 42). (d) The prominence it gives to the house of God.—Ps. cxxxii. may have been written by Solomon for the dedication of the Temple (2 Chron. vi. 41, 42). One of the provisions of the Covenant was that Solomon should build a house for God (2 Sam. vii. 13), and it was therefore appropriate that a psalm in honour of the Covenant should be used upon the occasion. Note that the Temple is spoken of as the "rest" of the Lord (Ps. cxxxii. 8), that is the place where He delights to dwell, and see how the description applies to his believing people (2 Cor. vi. 16). The Lord rests where the ark rests. Ministry in God's house must be characterised by "righteousness" (ver. 9). This righteousness is the result of salvation (ver. 16). (e) Its regard for human beings.—There is blessing for David ("make thee an house," 2 Sam. vii. 11), for Solomon (ver. 15), and for their descendants (2 Sam. vii. 10; Ps. cxxxii. 12). The Davidic Covenant is more exclusively Jewish than that made with Abraham ("all the nations of the earth," Gen. xxii. 18). There are probably vast designs of special blessing for Israel foreshadowed herein (Rom. xi. 26). (f) Its prophecy of a perpetual kingdom.—David was to be succeeded on the throne by his son, and his kingdom was to be established. The earthly king was a type of the Heavenly King—"The Lord from heaven" (1 Cor. xv. 47). The kingdom was to be everlasting ("for evermore," Ps. cxxxii. 12); comp. 2 Sam. vii. 13. David does not seem to have grasped the full extent of this promise at first. God said, "for ever"; David said, "for a great while to come" (2 Sam. vii. 19). Christ, as the Son of David, completes the fulfilment of the Divine promise (Rom. i. 3; Rev. xxii. 16). The growing strength of the kingdom of the Messiah is foreshadowed in the promise, "I will make the horn of David to bud." Comp. Isa. ix. 7. (g) Its provision for the pardon of sin (2 Sam. vii. 14, 15).—The house of David must ever have its fountain open for sin (Zech. xiii. 1).

(2) The New Testament Blessing (Luke i. 67—72).—God raised up Zacharias to tell of the fulfilment of the Covenant in the person of Christ. Note concerning Zacharias: (a) His qualification for service (ver. 67).—"Filled with the Holy Ghost." The Holy Ghost spoke of Christ through the ancient prophets (1 Peter i. 10), and does so still in the world (John xvi. 9), and in the hearts of believers (John xvi. 14). (b) His gratitude (ver. 68).—"Blessed." Do we praise God for Jesus? (comp. 2 Cor. ix. 15). (c) His view of God.—"The Lord God of Israel." God had so revealed Himself (Exod. v. 1). The descendants of Jacob were the people of God nationally, though they were not all his in a spiritual sense (Rom. ix. 6). (d) His perception of the incarnate Saviour.—Christ was not yet born (Luke ii. 7); but, in the true spirit of a prophet, he speaks of his birth as if it had really taken place. The advent of Christ was the advent of God, and as such Zacharias regarded it (Isa. vii. 14). (e) His recognition of the Covenant (ver. 69).—He had probably often heard these words; now he sees them fulfilled. It is well to see the Divine working in the fulfilment of promises. (f) His knowledge of Scripture (ver. 70).—"As He spake." He knew what the prophets had said, and this knowledge helped him to see the coming Saviour. See how some went astray because they lacked this knowledge (Matt. xxii. 29). (g) His view of the work of Christ.—See here sympathy ("visited," to look in upon; same word in James i. 27); deliverance ("redeemed," to make a loosing; comp. Ps. cvi. 10, cvii. 2); victory ("salvation," safety or soundness; comp. ver. 77). The Jewish view of salvation was probably deliverance from the yoke of Rome (this blessing might have been enjoyed, had the Jews been faithful, Acts i. 6, 7), but Christ proclaimed and secured for men a better deliverance (Luke xix. 9; Rom. i. 16).

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, September 9.

THE UNBELIEF OF THE PEOPLE.

Num. xiv. 1—10; Golden Text, Heb. iii. 19.

Review of Situation.—The scene is Kadesh Barnea (now Ain Qadees, the holy well), a place about fifty miles south-east of Beersheba, on the extreme southern border of the Promised Land. They had been commanded to go up and possess that land in the name and power of God. But, in the spirit of unbelief, they suggest that chosen men should first reconnoitre the country and report. The reports have just been made (see last lesson)—a majority report from ten spies, and a minority report from two. All agree that the land is good, but they disagree as to the possibility of possessing it. Both parties are agreed that Israel unaided could not possibly enter the land; but then the two faithful spies take God into account. They have his promise of help, and that makes them confident. But the people listen to the unbelieving spies, the frightened ones, the cowards, and here our lesson begins.

The practical End of our Lesson is to show us the awful nature of the sin of unbelief. Few think it a great sin to distrust God. We think of our numerous doubts of his word and promise, as mere frailties, deserving more pity than blame. But, suppose anyone doubts our word, treats our promise as of no account, is that a trifle to us? Scarcely anything cuts an honourable man so much as to have his word called in question either by action or by speech. To call a man a liar is an almost unpardonable offence. In our Houses of Parliament it is never permitted. Illustration.—The writer was once standing beside a little brook, just where it crossed the sands to reach the sea, when a number of school-boys came up. The bigger boys leaped the brook, but the younger ones couldn't. These latter were carried across by the eldest boy, the captain of the school, and all went well till the turn came for a very little boy, who couldn't possibly cross by himself, but who refused to trust himself to the big boy who had carried the others. The elder lad was very patient, and tried every method of persuasion; but all in vain. Nothing could persuade the younger boy to trust himself to the other. The writer will never forget the tone of surprise and injury with which the elder exclaimed, when all efforts had failed, "Why, what a chap you are, that you can't trust a fellow!" Was it not natural that he should feel hurt? What, then, must our distrust of God be to Him.

The Fearful Power of an Evil Example of Unbelief.—God's own people are led into awful sin, one result of which is that for more than a lifetime they must wander in that terrible wilderness, instead of entering the Land of Promise with triumph and glory. Why? Only because ten men forgot God, and gave way to doubt and despair. Sometimes, in a battle, one coward will infect those about him, till the whole regiment is in a panic; and that panic may spread over the entire army. It was so here. They were but ten men among hundreds of thousands; they dared to disbelieve God's promise; their unbelief was infectious, and soon everyone caught their spirit, and an awful calamity happened. If these ten men had believed God, trusting his promise, the entire history of Israel would have been changed.

The Gloom and Sorrow that spring from Distrust of God.—"And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night" (ver. 1). There was not a tear shed at this time, nor a cry uttered, nor a fear felt, but was the result of doubting God. Their sorrow was absolutely needless. It was worse; it was very sinful; it prepared them for further sin, while it took the place of the joy and excitement of hope they would have felt had they only believed in their God. Simple faith in God, quiet trust in his word, are the surest foundation for a happy life. Lacking faith, we shall lack a thousand joys God in his love has prepared for us; we shall also make for ourselves a thousand sorrows, comfortless, sinful, and hurtful sorrows, which He never intended us to feel.

The Deadly Progress of Unbelief.—(1) Doubt brought dejection, disappointment, and dread (ver. 1). (2) Next came murmuring against Moses and Aaron, their leaders, whom God had chosen (ver. 2). This was very base conduct; but worse followed. (3) They dared to suspect the Lord Himself (ver. 3, and Deut. i. 27), both his love and his faithfulness. "Because the Lord hated us, He hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt." As though He, who had shown them such patient, faithful kindness hitherto, actually cherished malice towards them, and was guilty of blackest hypocrisy. (4) Overt rebellion then followed, almost as a matter of course (ver. 4). This was deliberate apostasy, a formal and deliberate casting off of God's authority. (5) Finally, they determined to murder God's witnesses (ver. 10). It is almost certain that if they had carried out their intention they must have gone further, and killed Moses also. In all this we have the natural history of unbelief. How fearful its progress and power!

The Credulity of Unbelief.—The very people who cannot trust God, whose kindness, wisdom, power, and truth they have tested again and again, are quite ready to trust themselves and one another in spite of all their ignorance and weakness. Moses, their great-hearted leader, chosen for them by God, they will not follow; yet they are quite ready to follow one of their choosing. Just so, many boys and girls refuse to trust wise and loving parents, while they give the most foolish confidence to mere strangers, or to foolish schoolmates, little older than themselves. So, too, many who have no real faith in prayer, in providence, or in God, have an absurd confidence in themselves, or in neighbours who utterly disappoint them.

The Debasing Nature of Unbelief.—Try to realise the utter baseness of the people's conduct. How mean and unmanly! How cowardly, perverse, ungrateful, and wicked! Mistrust of God is the root of all this evil feeling and behaviour. Suppose they had believed in God, instead of doubting Him, how changed they would have been! Simple faith in God's promise would have made a noble-hearted soldier of every one of them. The difference between faith in God and unbelief is the difference between nobleness and meanness.

> Oh, how many a glorious record
>   Had the angels of me kept,
> Had I done instead of doubted,
>   Had I warred instead of wept!

Testimony for God by those who believe in Him (vv. 6—10).—Observe the splendid courage of the two men. Two against millions! Yes, but they speak for God and with God. What nerves them to this noble bravery? Simple faith. They know God, that He is good and true. They trust Him fully, and so must speak, though at the peril of life. Learn what a noble thing it is to bear witness for God in face of unbelief.

Practical Application.—Do I know God and trust Him? Are his promises real and precious? Is my life based upon and influenced by a simple and steady faith in God? On this all depends. See John iii. 36 and Heb. iii. 7—19.

THE SEA-SHELL AND CHILDREN'S SCRAP-BOOK MISSION has removed to larger and more suitable premises, 27, Benedict-road, Stockwell, S.W. Princess Victoria Mary of Teck has become the patron. It may not be too late to suggest that children staying at the seaside during September should remember the little ones in the hospitals and homes of the poor in London, and gather shells for distribution by this praiseworthy Mission.

Personalia.

Mr. Sankey hopes to come to England in October for evangelistic work.

General Fisk, the Prohibition candidate for United States President, has accepted his nomination.

Lord Reay, Governor of Bombay, has given a thousand rupees towards the memorial to the late Rev. Geo. Bowen.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is advocating the formation of "Strangers' Rests" in Montreal, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other American ports.

Mr. Moody goes soon to Nova Scotia for his first visit there, and, after the Presidential election, with his family, goes to California for the winter.

Mr. Quintin Hogg has presented a boat-house, with a good selection of boats, at Chiswick, to the Athletic Club of the Polytechnic Young Men's Christian Institute, at a cost of £800.

Mr. F. S. Arnot.—Our readers will be interested to hear that Mr. F. S. Arnot, whose enterprising missionary visit to and sojourn in Southern Africa we have often referred to, is coming home, and may be in London by September 20.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen entertained 250 of the Ragged School workers of the Metropolis, at their Dollis Hill residence, on Monday last. His Lordship was lately appointed President of the Ragged School Union, in succession to the late Earl of Shaftesbury.

Lord Mount Temple writes to The Times declaring that England is rapidly becoming worse morally than France, inasmuch as translations of vile books are selling at the rate of 1000 a week. He insists on the enactment and enforcement of stringent prohibitory laws.

Miss Florence Nightingale, the heroine of the Crimean War, is now a confirmed invalid. The long hours of standing during her hospital work affected her spine, and she has been for some years past an in-patient at St. Thomas's Hospital. She is now in her sixty-ninth year.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon has not yet quite recovered from the effects of a severe cold, recently contracted. During the first three days of last week he performed his usual ministerial functions, and he was enabled to officiate and deliver his ordinary Thursday discourse at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Mr. Stephen Burrowes is doing good service in connection with the Sailors' Rest at Naples; his long experience of the place and the people enables him to deal with the special difficulties of the work. A correspondent says that Mrs. Burrowes is like an angel amongst the seamen. God took two sons from her, but He has given her a hundred, they love her so.

Mr. L. D. Wishard, after a lengthened stay in this country and on the Continent, sailed on Wednesday by the Germanic for New York. He will spend three months in the States and Canada, and expects to sail in December for Japan. His plans embrace three or four years stay in the Orient, during which time he will study the question of the adaptability of the Y.M.C.A. movement to young men in these Eastern lands. There are at present some seventy-five to one hundred associations in the Orient, but Mr. Wishard hopes to organise several in such large cities as Tokio, Madras, &c.

Mr. Malins says Malta has 1500 drink shops, but they are mainly supported by the British, including the sailors and soldiers. The natives are temperate.

Surgeon-Major Pringle, M.D., recently said at Glasgow he found when in India "the soldiers could do the hardest work with nothing but water as an ordinary beverage."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Vernon Ardagh, of the C.M.S., Mombasa, has been obliged to return to England owing to ill-health. He has had several attacks of fever since he went to Africa last year.

A missionary festival was held at Lincoln on Wednesday, last week, advantage being taken of the presence in this country of a number of foreign and colonial bishops, to make the occasion a memorable one.

Rev. Walter Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare, has conducted mission services during the past two months in parish churches and in tents in Bath, Morecambe, Southport, Manchester, and Weston-super-Mare. Mr. Bradbury is now preaching on Weston-super-Mare sands, and holding daily Bible-readings in his house, 5, Claremont-crescent.

Bishop Crowther, of the Niger, occupied the pulpit at the Parish Church, Cromer, on a recent Sunday, and pleaded the cause of the Church Missionary Society. The collections throughout the day realised the sum of £46. Cromer, says The Rock, is now a favourite seaside resort, and the type of services at the Parish Church must be a source of much spiritual comfort to evangelical Churchmen who visit the place in the summer season.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt, of Camberwell, has received an invitation to the church at Ipswich.

The Presbyterian Sunday-schools in and around New South Wales are proposing to form themselves into a Sunday-school Union.

Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, conducted Divine service, after the Presbyterian form, in the new Established Church at Pitlochry, N.B., on Sunday afternoon. The church was crowded.

By the will of the late Mrs. M. R. Smith, of Philadelphia, £4000 has been left to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions; £1000 to the Board of Relief for Disabled Ministers and Widows and Orphans of Deceased Ministers; and £2000 to the Board of Foreign Missions.

The Cumberland Presbyterians in the United States, taking a hint from the Salvation Army, have agreed to set apart the first week in September as a week of self-denial, devoting to the church all that they would otherwise have expended beyond what will provide absolute necessities.

Rev. John M'Neill, of Free M'Crie Roxburgh Church, Edinburgh, who conducted the Sabbath and week day services in Strathpeffer Free Church during the past month, and regularly attracted very large congregations, has been presented with a purse of sovereigns in the name of residents and visitors.

Rev. Robert Lawson, minister of the West Parish, Maybole, Ayrshire, is about to make a tour of India. He is, says The Christian Leader, one of the most earnest evangelists in the West of Scotland, and deeply interested in foreign mission work. It is his intention not only to acquaint himself with the labours of our Christian missionaries in our Eastern Empire, but also to engage personally, as he may find opportunity, in evangelistic work.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

William Hobson, of Cardiff, has just concluded an eight days' mission in Truro, probably the first ever held there by Friends. The attendance throughout was good. Two lectures on the History and Doctrines of Friends seemed to excite special interest. The local Press gave a good report.

Less than three years ago three families of Friends removed to Dakota, U.S.A., but they were devoted Christians. Now, through their earnest efforts, there are four meetings, ever increasing in numbers. Every Sunday William Marshall travels from fifteen to twenty-five miles, attending meetings and preaching the Gospel two or three times. Hence the blessing.

On Sunday last W. Hobson was at Oxford, where the work, begun five months ago, shows signs of health and growth. Besides the meeting for worship and Gospel service, and a hopeful adult school, on Sundays, a band of hope and prayer meeting are held every week. In such a city the need of spiritual religion is real, and local Friends deserve hearty and practical sympathy. The tone and prospect of the work are cheering.

BAPTIST.

Three ladies were to have left Montreal for India yesterday (Thursday), to engage in work under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Union.

Rev. Dr. Vincente Ros de Molina, a Cuban Roman Catholic priest, who, in official position, stood next to the Bishop of Havana, and who was also a professor in the theological seminary, was received on July 5 by baptism to the Baptist Church, of which Rev. A. J. Diaz has charge in Havana.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presided on Monday evening, of last week, at the annual meeting of the Sermon and Tract Society, in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He explained that the Society was formed some years ago for the distribution of sermons and tracts in different parts of the country. The tract distributors have found that though people might refuse tracts, they yet invariably accept the sermons, and there was reason to know that the sermons are not only taken in, and then handed back, but that they are really read. In many cases conversions have followed on their perusal. The annual report stated that there are fifty districts in various parts of the country where Mr. Spurgeon's sermons are distributed. In thirty districts from which statistics have been obtained, there are 5562 houses which received a regular weekly visit. By this means 16,686 persons, at the lowest estimate, are reached, many of whom never attend a place of worship.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel has been opened at Newquay, Cornwall. The stone used in the building was the gift of the Prince of Wales.

The 105th anniversary services of the Tabernacle Sunday-school, Wotton-under-Edge, Glos., were held on Sunday week. In the afternoon a special children's service was held, in which all the schools of the town united.

Rev. E. Reeves Palmer, who has for many years been engaged in missionary work in China and Spain, having latterly been the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent in Madrid, has now entered upon the pastorate of St. Andrew's Church, North Shields.

Rev. Thomas Templeton, New Pitsligo, has received an invitation from the Congregational Union of Natal to undertake a new charge in the rapidly rising town of Johannesberg, in the Transvaal, where a chapel is to be built, the cost of which has been already provided.

METHODIST.

A new Wesleyan chapel has lately been opened in Rouen. A most useful work is carried on here amongst the British and foreign seamen, and amongst the French inhabitants.

The foundation stones of a Wesley Memorial Chapel at Epworth, the birthplace of the Wesleys, is to be laid on Sept. 20. This church will be the centre of an energetic work for God in a large group of Lincolnshire villages.

In the Wesleyan Centenary Chapel at Dewsbury, after an open-air meeting in the market place and a procession through the streets, Rev. Thomas Cook gave a powerful address to working men on the words, "Son, remember!" as a result of which several decided for Christ.

A new hall has been added to the Manchester Central Hall Mission. With a large force of real earnest workers, a number of aggressive agencies are carried on, and the Mission is advancing all along the line. The "out of door" work is prosecuted with great diligence and zeal, and the people listen with a thirst which is most encouraging. At almost every service there are good results.

The character of the village of Walkden, in Lancashire, is being quite changed through the efforts of the members of a mission band formed at the Wesleyan Chapel a few weeks ago, at the instigation of Mr. Fred. H. Poole, of the London West Central Mission, who has been holding special revival services there. The Temperance Hall was hired, and crowded meetings have been held each evening since, at every meeting souls being saved, and total abstinence pledges taken.

The following young men were lately bid farewell at a crowded meeting in King-street Chapel, Derby, on their leaving for missionary work abroad: Messrs. G. E. Newton and A. Kirby for the West Indies, Messrs. B. Taylor and A. J. Clarke for South Africa, Messrs. Fyn Penny and S. B. Solomon, coloured ministers. The two latter are returning home to West Africa, after two years' theological training in England. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Poole are shortly leaving for China, where they go to engage in evangelistic work in connection with the Central China Wesleyan Lay Mission.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A number of persons have professed to have received spiritual blessing lately in a mission tent at Inver, co. Donegal.

Gospel services were held last week by Rev. G. C. Grubb in Ballinderry Parish Church, co. Antrim. Much good is believed to have been done.

A Town Mission, under Methodist auspices, is about to be started in Belfast, and is to be placed in charge of a lay evangelist. A man burning with zeal for souls couldn't have a more splendid field, or a grander opportunity of winning a multitude for Jesus.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Alex. Bradley Burton, for sixteen years rector of Westmeon, Petersfield, Hants, and formerly for some time clerical secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society; he was a devout Christian minister, and earnest in his labours for the extension of the Church of God. —Rev. John Gipps, for thirty-four years pastor of the Potter-street Baptist Church, Harlow. — Mr. George John Stevenson, author of "Memorials of the Wesley Family," and other works, and a contributor to religious publications. — Rev. W. Flavel Hurndall, Ph.D., of Littlehampton, a well-known minister of the Congregational body.—Mrs. Rae, wife of the esteemed secretary of the National Temperance League. — Right Rev. Samuel Smith Harris, D.D., Bishop of Michigan, U.S.A., whilst in England, whither he had come to attend the Lambeth Conference of Bishops.— Rev. Wm. Silver, assistant minister of London-road Congregational Church, Chelmsford.—Rev. Wm. H. Stevenson, Free Church of Scotland missionary at Pachamba, Bengal, India. After more than nine years' eminently successful labour he came home on furlough, and only returned to India again last October.—Hon. and Rev. John Baillie, D.D., an evangelical clergyman, for thirty-six years canon residentiary of York Minster.

Mrs. Mair, who for many years had been a missionary in Africa, testified at the Temperance Congress, Glasgow, from her own experience, of the terrible effects of, the drink traffic among the natives.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who is about to visit India will endeavour to establish branch temperance associations composed of natives and Europeans at Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras. He will also take special interest in visiting mission stations.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Church of Ireland Temperance Society reports a year of vigorous and successful work.

Mr. John Ripley and Mrs. Ripley (Miss M. A. Paull) are to visit Scotland on a lecturing tour.

In London £4,715,724 is spent annually in poor relief; an enormous proportion of it is due to drink.

Some £350, in round figures, has been exacted from illegal beer-sellers in Cardiff during eight days.

The Duke of Portland intends to present the village of Galston with a public park—a good counter-attraction to the public-house.

A great temperance fête was held at the Glasgow Exhibition on Monday, August 20. No intoxicants were sold on the premises during the day. There were over 70,000 persons present.

The Wesleyan Conference remitted the question of a Connexional Temperance Organising Secretary to the District Meetings. If a majority approve, the appointment is to be made next year.

The British Medical Temperance Association has been entertained to breakfast at Glasgow by the Scottish Temperance League and the Scottish branch of the Association. Interesting addresses were delivered. Sir W. Collins presided.

The Committee of the Sunday School Union, Old Bailey, London, E.C., offer prizes of three guineas, two guineas, and one guinea, for the best Sunday-school outline addresses on total abstinence; MS. to be sent not later than September 30.

The temperance party in Eastbourne memorialised the magistrates, praying them to exercise their legal powers in reducing the number of licensed houses in the town. Result: all the old licences were renewed, and of three applications for new extended licences two were granted.

The Free Church Temperance Society claims to be the largest temperance organisation in Scotland, having about 650 abstaining ministers, over 600 congregational societies and bands of hope, and a constantly increasing membership. Some encouraging features mark the report, especially the fact that plough-lads are joining in increasing numbers.

FOREIGN.

Independence, Missouri, is to have no drink saloons for the next four years.

Complaint is made of the apathy of the Christian Church in Australia as to the importance of the temperance question.

During his recent visit to Malta, Mr. J. Malins, G.C.T., addressed a number of temperance meetings. His visit excited much interest.

We regret to learn that in the north-west of Canada permits are being issued to keepers of hotels of a certain capacity to import or sell beer containing 4 per cent. of alcohol, the Government receiving ten cents per gallon!

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Church Army will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergymen on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 & 130, Edgware-road, W.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

IN LAUSANNE 1300 heads of families have requested that their letters should not be delivered at their houses on Sunday.

THE PARIS ORGAN of the Salvation Army, En Avant, announces the birth of a daughter of the Maréchale, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn. Both mother and child are doing well.

ZAMBESI.—The French Foreign Mission has again suffered loss in the death of Mr. H. Dardier, medical missionary. The young Genevese doctor succumbed to fever, &c., February 23.

A RECIPE FOR CONSOLATION, by the Grand-Duchess Louisa of Baden. When addressing the Baden Women's Association the Grand Duchess, who has this year followed to the grave her father, her brother (the late Emperor of Germany), and her son, said: "My life has become poorer through this three-fold sorrow, and now grief can be overcome and strength renewed only by seeking to exercise more love to others, by soothing their sorrows and relieving their need." The Grand Duchess herself suffers from an affection of the eyes.—Wahrheitszeuge.

SPAIN.—Near Bilbao, in the province of Biscay, a colporteur was attacked by some masked men. After overpowering him with blows they left him for dead. Unfortunately for them, they also left behind them one of the sticks, which was produced in the law-court and recognised as the parish priest's walking-stick. At Rubi, near Barcelona, M. Albricias, a member of the Central International Committee of the Y.M.C.A., is still the butt of the Roman Catholic priest and those under his influence. He is subjected to a series of vexations, the object of which is to make him leave the place. As he is at the head of a very interesting little community there, we hope he will not be obliged to abandon Rubi.—Le Evangéliste.

A NEW FRENCH TRANSLATION of the New Testament is about to appear. The translator is Pasteur Edmond Stapfer, of the Paris Theological Faculty, who has prepared a new text, as well as translated it.

THE GREAT EVENT OF NEXT WINTER in the religious world (says Truth) will be the publication of Père Didon's "Life of Christ," on which he has been engaged for many years, and which has long been eagerly expected by those who believe that the renowned Dominican preacher will entirely refute M. Renan's work. Père Didon has spared no pains to ensure accuracy in his statements about localities, for he has paid two long visits to the Holy Land, and has most carefully inspected every spot identified with the events which occur in his narrative. Whatever may be the controversial merits of this book, it is sure to be interesting and eloquent, and will display the profound learning for which the author is famous.

"It seems exceedingly likely that ere long we shall have to engage in a very serious conflict with the growing power of the Papacy in this land of religious liberty. Two things will prepare us for a victorious issue: first, a great increase of spiritual religion; second, the spread of information as to the real present character and designs of the emissaries of Rome. We have no sympathy with those who raise the cry of religious bigotry at every attempt to make known the evil plots and doings of the Jesuits and their allies. Let us get at the facts of the case, and then make them as widely known as possible, above all things acting and speaking in the spirit of Christ.

"In the little volume before us, Dr. Wylie—honoured veteran in the cause—traces the steps whereby the Papal party have been steadily succeeding in removing the ramparts erected by our Protestant forefathers around our religious rights and liberties. He brings forward evidence the most convincing, to prove that the spirit and aim of the Romish Church remain what they were in the days of persecution and martyrdom, and closes with earnest words of warning and appeal.

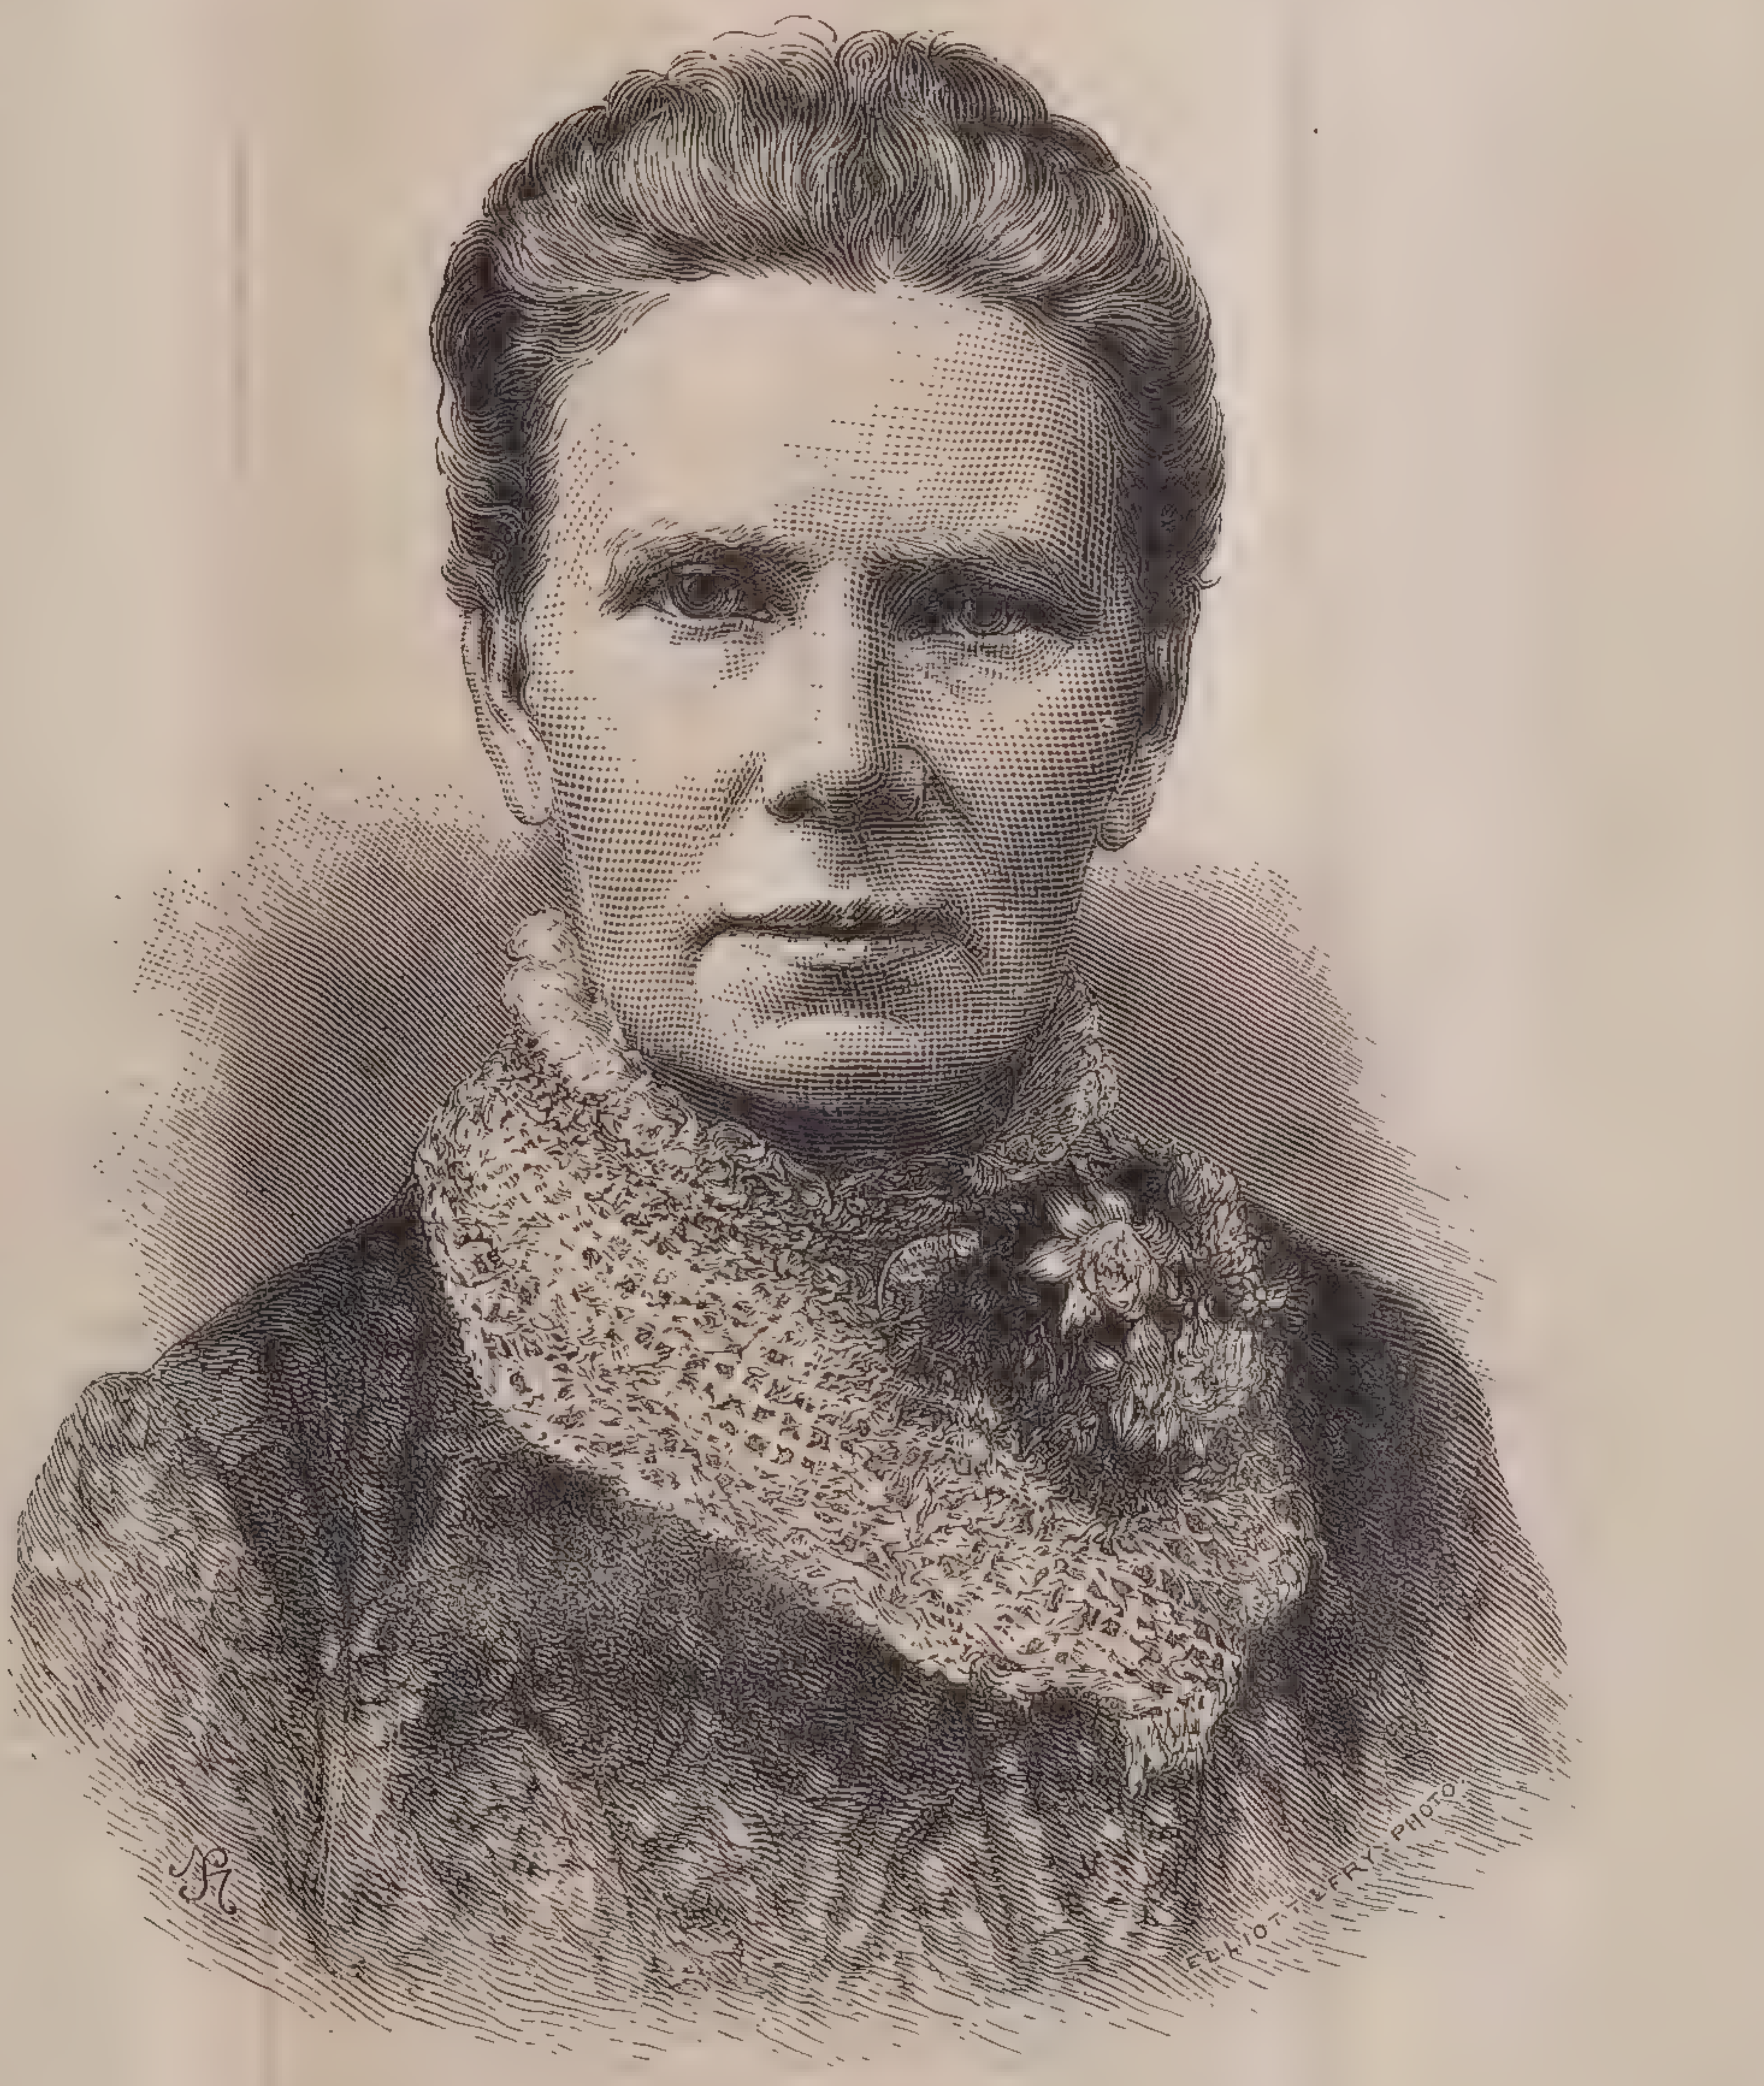
MISS AGNES HEDENSTRÖM,

Scandinavian Seamen's Home.

IT is only during the last twenty years that Gospel work amongst seamen has made much progress; it is remarkable that it has been chiefly by ladies that this difficult but important work has been carried on. Miss Agnes E. Weston's work in the British Navy is well known to our readers; with no less success MISS AGNES HEDENSTRÖM has laboured amongst Scandinavian sailors in London during the last ten years. Perhaps the secret of this success lies in the fact that God has given woman a spirit of abounding forbearance and love. It is the love that "beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things," which overcomes difficulty and opposition, and melts the heart of stone.

Miss Hedenström is a native of Sweden. Her parents died when she was an infant, but she found a home at the house of a relation, a Surgeon-Major in the Swedish army. She received a good education, which, according to Swedish custom, included training in almost every kind of household occupation; this has proved most useful to her in her life work. From her earliest years she was surrounded by influences of a distinctly religious character. It was not, however, till her eighteenth year that she became the subject of definite spiritual concern. That concern deepened into conviction, and no rest was found until she had yielded herself to her Saviour.

Immediately after her conversion, she began to work for God, and He blessed her labours. In the autumn of 1875 she found an opportunity to come to London, of which she availed herself, hoping later to be sent out by some missionary society to India or China. The first part of her stay was a time of great trial, but she was borne up by the thought that God would at length fulfil her heart's desire to tell the glad tidings of salvation to the heathen. At the end of two years it seemed as if it were about to be accomplished. She was accepted by a missionary society for work in India; her trunks were packed, and all was ready for the journey, when suddenly an obstacle arose.



(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

After the usual medical examination, the doctor gave it as his opinion that the missionary candidate's lungs were affected, and that her strength was not sufficient to stand a tropical climate or the exertions of the mission field. This decision fell like a blow upon her, and it was some time before she could resign herself completely to God's will. But "his ways are not our ways," and He had a great work prepared for his servant. During a stay at Plymouth, a little while after, she heard for the first time of the "Strangers' Rest," which had, a month previously, been opened in Ratcliff-highway, London; she determined to pay it a visit on her return to the Metropolis.

One summer's day found her alone and on foot on her way thither, and it was not without difficulty that she reached her destination. Some of the street women, of whom she had inquired her way, seeing her ignorance of the surroundings, seized her by the hair, and, followed by a motley crowd, conducted, or rather, pushed and pulled her, to the "Strangers' Rest." The first person she met there was Miss Annie Macpherson, who begged her to address a group of Scandinavian seamen gathered in a smaller room. Miss Hedenström had not courage at first to do more than sing a hymn with them, and let them disperse; but her new friend would take no denial, and a dozen men were at length brought together again from the street, and thus took place Miss Hedenström's first meeting among the sailors.

The dreadful scenes she saw on her return home, and the remembrance of what had happened on her way to the "Strangers' Rest," made her almost decide never to go there again. When night came she could not sleep. Pictures from Ratcliff-highway life haunted her imagination, and filled her soul with horror. She debated with herself whether this was not the sphere in which God meant her to work. Worn out in mind and body, she promised God she would go there again the next day, if He would only give her sleep, and sleep came. The following afternoon found her again at the "Strangers' Rest," and on her way home she asked God, if it were his will that she should labour there, to give her as a token the joy of winning some sailor to Himself. On the third day Miss Hedenström returned to her lodgings with a joyful and praising heart, for prayer had been abundantly answered, so that she had been enabled to lead two seamen to the feet of her Saviour. For ten years from that time hardly a week has passed without finding Miss Hedenström at the "Rest," almost nightly. Such blessing attended her labours that some years ago it was found necessary to enlarge the "Scandinavian Room" (carried out through the kindness of Mr. T. A. Denny), so that now there is sitting accommodation for about two hundred sailors.

Whilst Miss Hedenström's name is best known in connection with the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, her Gospel work at the "Strangers' Rest" has been, perhaps, of equal or even greater importance. She has an unusual power in speaking, and her plain exposition of Scripture, freely illustrated by interesting narratives, has proved of great blessing to the simple and the educated alike. Not a few persons who take no interest in religious matters admit that Miss Hedenström's work has had a beneficent and elevating influence upon the whole Scandinavian seafaring class. But beyond this, many of these seamen are now themselves most earnest and diligent Christian workers amongst their comrades.

The Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, founded and conducted by Miss Hedenström, has in many ways helped to sustain the religious revival amongst Scandinavian seamen. The good seed sown at the "Strangers' Rest" was very often choked by the companionship formed in the boarding houses they were obliged to lodge at during their stay ashore. Miss Hedenström found that a Christian Home was urgently needed for the sailors. By the generous aid of Mr. T. A. Denny, the houses, 88 and 90, Leman-street, Whitechapel, were taken on lease; they were comfortably fitted up as a Sailors' Home, and opened on October 28, 1880. The publicans, boarding-masters, and keepers of evil houses in the neighbourhood, who were already very malignant against the "Strangers' Rest," became ten times worse against the Temperance Home, which threatened seriously to interfere with their very lucrative business. It would be impossible to relate all the attempts made in order to destroy the work, and bring it into disrepute. The most untruthful reports were circulated amongst the sailors about the Home, and the sons of the sea are, as a rule, rather credulous. Moreover, the boarding-masters did their best to hinder orderly seamen from patronising the Home, and they induced men of the most disreputable character to take their lodgings there, many of whom left the Home in debt; in some cases they had even stolen property from it. In this manner the Home sustained serious losses during the first few years.

At the close of the third year the Committee decided that it would be best for Miss Hedenström to undertake the entire management of the Home herself. The care of the place, therefore, fell entirely on her. What a difficult and trying work she had, few people can imagine. To help with the household work; to keep the accounts; to write a dozen letters; to speak to a score or two sailors, and give them help and advice; and in the evening to conduct a Gospel meeting for two hours: this has been her daily work for eight years past. It seems a miracle that she has been able to stand the mental and physical strain. With God's help she has overcome every difficulty.

An important branch of the work is receiving and banking sailors' wages and savings, and remitting them to parents, wives, or other relations. Last year Miss Hedenström was instrumental in thus sending home about £6300. Of all the acknowledgments of the blessing of her work, there is nothing she values so much as the sailors' trust and love. The Home has become increasingly popular amongst the Scandinavians, and latterly many Englishmen and representatives of almost every European nation have availed themselves of its benefits.

Last year it was found impossible to receive all the sailors who applied. An appeal was made to the English and Scandinavian Christian public for help towards the erection of a new Home, and it met with a truly generous response alike from high and low. A suitable freehold site, contiguous to the West India Docks, was purchased last year, and the erection of the building commenced immediately. In the beginning of this year the work was transferred from Leman-street to its new home in West India Dock-road. The official opening took place on February 13 by H.R.H. Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway, and in the presence of a distinguished company.

The work in the new Home, conducted on Christian principles, has already been of great blessing. Gospel meetings are held four times a week in the large dining-room, and every Monday evening there is a special temperance meeting, generally resulting in a dozen or two seamen taking the blue ribbon. Miss Hedenström continues her meeting thrice a week at the "Strangers' Rest," which, as in days of yore, continues to be much blessed by God.

THE GOVAN MODEL LODGING-HOUSE MISSION has entered upon its second year's work. It is directed by Mr. William S. Ross, of the Clutha Ironworks, who not only presents the Gospel to the people, but provides them with books and papers. These are sent to him by friends interested in the Mission, while at other times the kindness of sympathisers has taken various welcome forms. Mr. Ross's address is: 118, Maclellan-street, Plantation, Glasgow.

BRITTANY.—Le Trémélois states that Pasteur Lecoat has recently been cheered by visits from a number of English friends of his very interesting mission. An esteemed correspondent writes to us: "Christian friends who have tarried awhile at the Pension Evangélique at Tremel testify to the excellent work carried on there against every difficulty which superstition can raise. M. Lecoat has brought to a happy termination the arduous task of translating the entire Bible into the Breton language; in this he has been greatly aided by the Trinitarian Bible Society." A summer visit to Brittany is rendered specially enjoyable by the kindness of Mrs. Lecoat, who, for the good of the mission, carries on her Pension throughout the year.

The Bible and Young Men.

BY MR. J. HERBERT TRITTON.

A Paper Read at the Stockholm Conference.

THE current thought of the day endeavours to put on one side the supernatural element of Christianity; it will accept only those conclusions to which Reason can guide it, and writes folios against Revelation. Let us not be supposed to undervalue Reason. The Christian can appeal to it with the utmost confidence—so far as it will go. Reason and Faith have been compared to the feet and wings of a bird. Her feet enable her to gain her due sustenance, and move about on the surface of the earth; they are good, so far as they go. But the outstretched wings enable her to soar far above the earth, and travel immeasurably greater distances. Let us bring to our aid to-day, and always, Reason and Faith, when we try to consider what the Bible says. Most unhesitatingly I affirm the belief that the Bible is the revelation of God to man, of man to himself, and of the way whereby man may be brought back to God, divinely set forth.

Eliminate the supernatural from the Bible, and the whole falls to pieces. I have no theory of inspiration to hold or to press. Sufficient for me that Christ the Living Word speaks to me from every part of the volume, from Genesis to Exodus. "Bibliolatry!" I hear a scornful voice exclaim. Yes, that is a favourite term of reproach just now; but I shrink not from it, if thereby is meant the belief, the conviction, that to the Bible is due unswerving allegiance, implicit obedience, unquestioning credence. "Thus saith the Lord" must be to all his followers the end of controversy, the settlement of every question.

To the young men of the present day I would, at the outset, point out the accuracy of the historical statements of the Bible, confirmed by every modern discovery; the very stones are crying out, whether on the banks of the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Nile, or the Jordan, in support of the allusions to history over (to say the least of it) a period of 1500 years. Putting the Bible for the moment on the same level as Herodotus, the father of history as he is called, the comparison we are now able to make is immensely in favour of the Bible.

Geographically, again, the Bible is marvellous; so accurate that, as a handbook of Palestine, it is invaluable to-day. When read on the spot, it forces from even hostile or unfriendly critics the admission that the writers knew well the conformation of the land, and described scenes and transactions as eye-witnesses. No other conclusion is in any way possible to one who travels in Bible lands, Bible in hand.

Says one, "I cannot believe in the Bible, because it is hopelessly at variance with science." Indeed! May I ask whether you would expect it to be in accord with the science of to-day, or yesterday, or to-morrow, or the day after? "Science" constantly changes. The Bible, which is for all time and for all stages of human knowledge, stands to-day as when written. No new edition, "brought down to date," is possible. The Bible, God's Word, and nature, God's work, cannot be at variance; seeming inconsistencies are referable to the fact that the terms are incommensurate—that the Bible occupies a different plane to science. Science deals with progress, combinations, evolutions, growth, sequence, laws; the Bible, where it touches the natural world, deals with origins, and with that which is beyond the sphere of science, the will of the Creator—the Word of God. To my mind the very mysteries of the Book proclaim it to be Divine.

Rise yet a step higher, young man, in the consideration of what the Bible says to you. It contains the only history extant of many epoch-making men, of those who have in no small degree left their mark upon the world. Carlyle, in his "Hero Worship," forcibly observes: "Universal history, the history of what man has accomplished in the world, is at bottom the history of the great men who have worked here." Abraham, Joseph, Moses, Joshua, David, Solomon, Daniel—these were heroes indeed. Glance through Heb. xi., that glorious portrait gallery of the great and good in their dependence upon God; and remember, young man, how they, for the most part, had distinguished themselves in their youth.

Outstanding far above all these the Bible goes on to tell of One, the central figure of the ages, a young Man (reverently be it spoken) round whom centuries of devotion on the one hand, and of controversy and unbelief on the other, cluster and jostle; who, nevertheless, to-day occupies, confessedly and notoriously, a unique position in men's minds. "What think ye of Christ?" is still the burning question of the day for young and old. Turn where you will, you cannot get rid of Him. The calm, holy, ineffable eyes of the portrait follow you everywhere. He fills the canvas. He fills the forum. He fills the very atmosphere. He fills the world. Believe in Him or not, "with the true faith of a Christian," there He stands confronting you, the central figure of the universe. "What shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ?" It is of Him the Bible tells from cover to cover. At least four hundred direct references to Him occur in the Old Testament, and innumerable indirect references or allusions are to be found by the diligent seeker after truth; while the New Testament is entirely taken up with his life, his teaching, and his coming again.

I would have any young man who wishes to know more of this wonderful Person, note the significance of his own words, and the way in which they prove Him to be not only the Christ of the New Testament, but of the Old. After years of seclusion, we find Him going straight from his baptism to that mysterious conflict with, and victory over, the tempter. Observe how He uses the Old Testament Scriptures, with a threefold appeal to them, "It is written," thrice repeated. The texts quoted, through which He conquers, are all from a passage in the Pentateuch which the Jewish youths, by direct commandment, had to commit to memory.

Then comes his Sermon on the Mount, in which He confirms the Scriptures of Moses, but implants in them a deeper meaning. Listen! His words compel attention: "I say unto you," eleven times repeated in that one address, concluding with "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," &c.; "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not," &c. "And when He had ended these sayings, the people marvelled." Well they might! Or take the first address in the synagogue at Nazareth: "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." Again "they wondered" at the gracious words. Well they might!

What an interesting subject for a Bible-class would be "his words," from the point of view of the continuity of the Scriptures finishing with one of his last recorded utterances before He left the earth. "These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me."

This is no digression, for I feel deeply the need at the present time, in specially writing for young men of the present day, to emphasise the fact that Christ is the Christ, not only of the New Testament, but of the Old; and that it is impossible to reject the Divine and supernatural in his person, his character, and his words, involved logically in this fact, while retaining a shadowy belief in the perfection of his manhood, as many seem to be striving to do now. What the Bible says to young men is, therefore, from our standpoint, far more than the words and sayings of the great and wise of all ages, and far more than even the words and sayings of the one so-called perfect man. The Bible speaks as the Word of God to man, with continuity of purpose and design from Genesis to Revelation.

Open on what page we will, it has a message, a Divine word, a Christ-word to our hearts. Did God say, "Let there be light," as the earliest verses of the Bible declare, and has the saying, the word, no echo in our hearts when we think of Him who is the "Light of the world"? When sin and death had entered into the world, and Cain, standing over the dead body of his brother, insolently asks, "Am I my brother's keeper?" has the saying no echo in our hearts, surrounded as we are by our brothers dying on every hand? "This is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that ye should love one another" (1 John iii. 11). Does not the thought go to the very root of our Y.M.C. Associations, opening up considerations of service to man, of service to God, and of the highest aspirations of which the human soul is capable.

Or again, "The Lord heard the voice of the lad where he was." What a glorious theme is here of God's loving providence towards young men just where they are!

Or again, "Go seek thy brethren, and see how they fare." Or again, "The Angel that redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads." A very few chapters of Genesis suffice to give these instances of what the Bible says to and about young men, and the whole book is full of similarly suggestive subjects for Bible-classes, or for individual application.

What we want is to have more and more the ability, acquired under the guidance of the Spirit, of so reading the whole Bible as to make it our own; of asking ourselves, in short, as we read, Is this my experience? Am I meant to be warned—to be guided—to be taught—to be helped—by this passage? Let those who have to deal with young men abstain from generalities and mere declamation. The Bible finds its way to the heart as no other book can, and he who expounds it must be full of sympathy and love, and be able to speak out of his own experience of the Living Word, of the power in daily life and daily strife, to be obtained by coming into contact with the One who is mighty to save.

In dealing with young or untaught souls let us remember God's order in his Book. First, the fourfold presentation of Christ's person in the Gospels; let us be never weary of pointing first and foremost to the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Then the simple truths of repentance and faith, as in the Acts of the Apostles. Then the unfolding of Christian gifts and graces, in the deeper spiritual teachings of the Epistles. Lastly, the blessed hope of his return and reign, in the Apocalypse.

But in all this let us beware of neglecting the Old Testament. The person and work and death of Christ cannot be understood without reference to the sacrifices of the law, typical of his atoning blood. Repentance and faith are largely taught in even the historical portions of the Old Testament. The inner gifts and graces of the Spirit come out more fully in the Psalms, when these are placed side by side with the Epistles, and his glorious coming again is foretold in many a glowing page of seer and prophet, as well as in the Revelation.

Has it ever occurred to you to ask why Christ, inimitably alone in this as in all other respects, left behind him no writings whatever: not a single line as the warrant for even the most vital truths from his own hand? Only once, and then in the dust, to be scattered in a few moments to the winds, did He write, so far as we know. Strange, were it not for the fact which I have endeavoured to emphasise, that "holy men of God" had already "spoken as they were moved by the Holy Ghost"; that Christ gathered up into Himself all that they had written, and the "Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things unto your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you" (John xiv. 26).

The result was seen in Peter's first sermons, full of appeal to the Old Testament Scriptures, as also in Stephen's dying address, and Paul's noble arguments, no less than in John's writings, fifty or sixty years later. The continuity of the revealed Word is an assured fact, which neither the dust of ages, nor the winds of criticism can hide or disperse.

Both Old and New Testament, inspired alike by the Holy Ghost, have Christ for their common theme—the one looking onward, the other back; his Person, his Work, his Life, his Death, his Resurrection, his Ascension, and his Coming again. Had He written aught Himself, we had been in danger of ignoring all else, and blindly worshipping the letter, instead of the Saviour.

Young man, the voice of the Son of God calls to thee, not alone across the ages from out his Book; nor yet alone from his lips as He paced the sunny slopes of Palestine, but here and now from the threshold of thy heart to-day—"Young man, I say unto thee, arise. Full many a one has heard My call—the Hebrew lad snatched in babyhood from the river of Egypt to be the leader of My people Israel; the shepherd boy of Bethlehem to become a mighty warrior, poet, and king; the young Judean nobleman, captive in Babylon, to be a revealer of secrets, and the third ruler in a heathen kingdom; the few young fishermen of the Galilean lake to turn the world upside down; the highly cultivated and haughty Pharisee of Tarsus to preach My Gospel in Imperial Rome! I have need of all; I have need of thee!"

"Who art thou, Lord?" may the trembling lips reply. "How may I know Thee? How may I love Thee? How may I yield to Thee? How may I serve Thee? How may I please Thee? How may I overcome?" "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy Word."

Points for Preachers.

"TOO WELL DRESSED."

A young woman, who has a stall in one of the Paris markets, one day said to the ladies conducting a mothers' meeting, "How I thank God for all the good words I have learned here. Why, it is a fortune to know Jesus." At another station, an aged woman who had learned by heart many of the hymns, heard an exposition on "The wedding garment." At the close of the meeting she said to one of the workers:—"I believe this is my last visit to the hall. If I can never come again, you will know where I am gone." "I will come to see you," said the worker, "but if God called you, meanwhile, have you any fear of appearing before Him?" "Oh no, I am too well dressed for that." She meant that she had put on the wedding garment; she had perfectly understood the message of the Gospel.—McAll Mission Report.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Rev. John Spurgeon was going to preach at his chapel in Tollesbury, Essex. It was the Sabbath morning, and as he passed a cottage garden he saw a man digging potatoes. He stopped, and said, "Am I mistaken, or are you? I have come nine miles to preach to-day, thinking it was the Sabbath-day. As I see you are at work, I suppose I must be wrong, and had better go home." The man coloured, and driving his spade into the ground, he said, "No, sir, you are not wrong, but I am; and I will have no more of it. I will be round this afternoon to hear you preach. Nobody has ever spoken to me before, and you've only done your duty." He was at the chapel, and his wife with him. His wife became a member of the church, and he remained a regular attendant upon the means of grace.—C. H. Spurgeon.

MAKE HASTE!

Some years ago, when travelling through Palestine, we were nearly benighted. We had left Hebron in the morning, and had come leisurely along, passing through Bethlehem, and visiting the gardens of Solomon on the way. The sun began to get low ere we caught our first glimpse of Jerusalem, and on reaching the plain of Rephaim we had to increase our speed. In a little the sun set, and we saw a man come out from the Jaffa gate and stand upon a small hillock, shouting with all his might, as if forewarning of danger, and gesticulating wildly, as if to call our attention to what he was announcing.

"What is the man saying?" we asked our guide.

"He is shouting, 'Yellah! Yellah!'"

"What does that mean?"

"Come along! Come along!"

We now found we were about to be shut out, and this messenger had come out to warn us that the gate was about to be closed. We made haste, as we did not at all relish the thought of being kept all night outside the walls. We were just in time; no more. We entered, and the gate closed behind us. "The door was shut" (Matt. xxv. 10).

The lesson we learned was, "Make haste!"—a lesson which some of us never forget. So near being shut out of the earthly Jerusalem! What if we were to be not almost, but altogether, shut out of the Heavenly City!—Dr. H. Bonar.

PREACHING AND PRACTISING.

That was plain and noble testimony that the young man is reported to have given to the examining committee of our church. "Under whose preaching were you converted?" they asked. "Under nobody's preaching," was his reply; "I was converted under my mother's practising." Gracious tribute was that to parental example! And perhaps there was little talking in it all, little urging to duty and exhorting to obedience. The temperature of the mother's life was so sweet and salubrious that it woke and matured the seed of the grace that had been dropped into the heart, and it sprang up spontaneously.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

CHURCH LIFE.

When Napolean retreated from Moscow, a large part of his army perished in the cold and snow. When night came, a body of troops would kindle a little fire as best they could, and then lots would be cast for those who should occupy the places nearest the fire, and the cold was so intense that those in the outermost rows would be found frozen stiff in the morning. Now in every church, there are those who form the very centre—a circle within a circle—gathering close to the person of Christ. These enjoy the warmth of his spiritual presence, while those who content themselves with living at a distance from Christ are soon chilled and frozen in the keen atmosphere of wordliness which enswathes the church.

"THOU SLANDEREST."

Psalm l. 20.

An assassin destroys, or attempts to destroy or injure, the body of his victim secretly. A slanderer destroys, or attempts to destroy or injure the character of his victim secretly.

Secret slander is a cowardly and a wicked act; to hear a statement against a man (and perhaps by persons who endeavour to justify their own conduct by blackening the character of another), and to repeat that statement without having verified it, is a cowardly and a wicked act. Slanderers work unfathomable evil. Many honourable persons are walking under the shade of slanders which they have no opportunity to deny or explain, and so are compelled to carry for long years the evil opinion of those whom they respect.

There is not a man or woman living against whom something might not be said detrimental to character, some construction placed upon words or acts which might be made to appear black, when, if the circumstances were known, they would appear white. Many a man has given up active works of usefulness in a place where he knows that he has been unjustly spoken against by some who have heard ill-natured remarks only too willingly, and only too willingly have spread them. "Thou slanderest" is said of one in Ps. l. 16—21, who is classed with criminals. To slander any person secretly without giving an opportunity of explanation is a direct influence of Satan. Slanderers, whether they call themselves Christians or not, should realise that they are possessed of Satan, and are working out his purposes.

In religious communities, if one person hears something against another (and especially if that other be a prominent worker), he should either disbelieve it and forget it, or else should go to that other for an explanation; or he might in a manly way bring the statement before two or three prominent members of such community, and let the matter be fairly judged; and then, at the mouth of two or three witnesses whom they should call, the slanderer or the offender should be rebuked.

The world to this day is suffering the effects of a slander. Satan, the arch slanderer, slandered God, and so marred his work and wrecked his creature, our ancestor (Gen. ii. 17, iii. 1—4); Joseph was slandered, and imprisoned in consequence (Gen. xxxix.); Moses was slandered by Miriam (Numb. xii. 1), but God covered Miriam with leprosy for it, and only the prayer of Moses could avail to cleanse her; Caleb's fellow-travellers were guilty of slander (Numb. xiii. 32, xiv. 36); the princes of King Hanun slandered David, and the result was the death of 40,000 horsemen and the men of 700 chariots (2 Sam. x. 3); Mephibosheth's servant slandered him to David (2 Sam. xix. 27); the Jews were slandered, which brought about the execution of Haman and the death of 75,810 other persons (Esth. iii. 8, vii. 9, 10).

Amongst the sins which brought the heavy judgments of death, defeat, dispersion upon Israel, was slander (Jer. vi. 28, ix. 4). Three young noblemen were slandered, and were put into a furnace; but God delivered them, and burnt up those who put them in (Dan. iii. 8). A truly noble man by birth and instinct was slandered, and put into a den of lions; but God preserved him, and gave the slanderers to the lions, which devoured them (Dan. vi. 8). David describes a Godly man as one who does not slander (Ps. xv. 3). A very solemn warning is contained in Ps. ci. 5: "Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off." The slanderer may learn something by reflecting upon Ps. lxiv. 3, 7, 8: "arrows" are slanders. See also Prov. x. 18, xvi. 28, xvii. 9, xviii. 8, xxvi. 20, 22.

The Apostle Paul, who was slanderously reported against (Rom. iii. 8), repeats the ninth commandment in Rom. xiii. 9. A consensus of Apostolic teaching condemns the slanderer. See Eph. iv. 31; 1 Tim. iii. 11, v. 15; Titus iii. 2. The Apostle James (i. 26) says that his religion is vain who "bridleth not his tongue." Such is a slanderer. James iii. 5, iv. 11, and 1 Pet. iv. 15 afford reflections, too, for the slanderer. John the Baptist was slandered (Matt. xi. 18). Our Lord Jesus Christ was exposed to a continuous assault of slander during his whole ministry, even to his being accused of blasphemy (Matt. ix. 3). Satan, the chief of slanderers, was busy in his assaults by himself and by his emissaries (those "vipers" who belonged to the true family of the "old serpent") all through our Lord's career; which assaults culminated in the mock trials, and the false witnessing which led to Calvary.

Our duty towards a slanderer is to show him an "angry countenance." "The north wind driveth away rain, so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue" (Prov. xxv. 23). Sacred history furnishes many more examples than those given above. Secular history, too, is full of corroborative evidence, especially concerning the martyrs and others of the Lord's people. Let the slanderer take warning that he is Satan's instrument. Let the slandered be comforted in remembering that God knows, and that God reigns. C. F. D.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

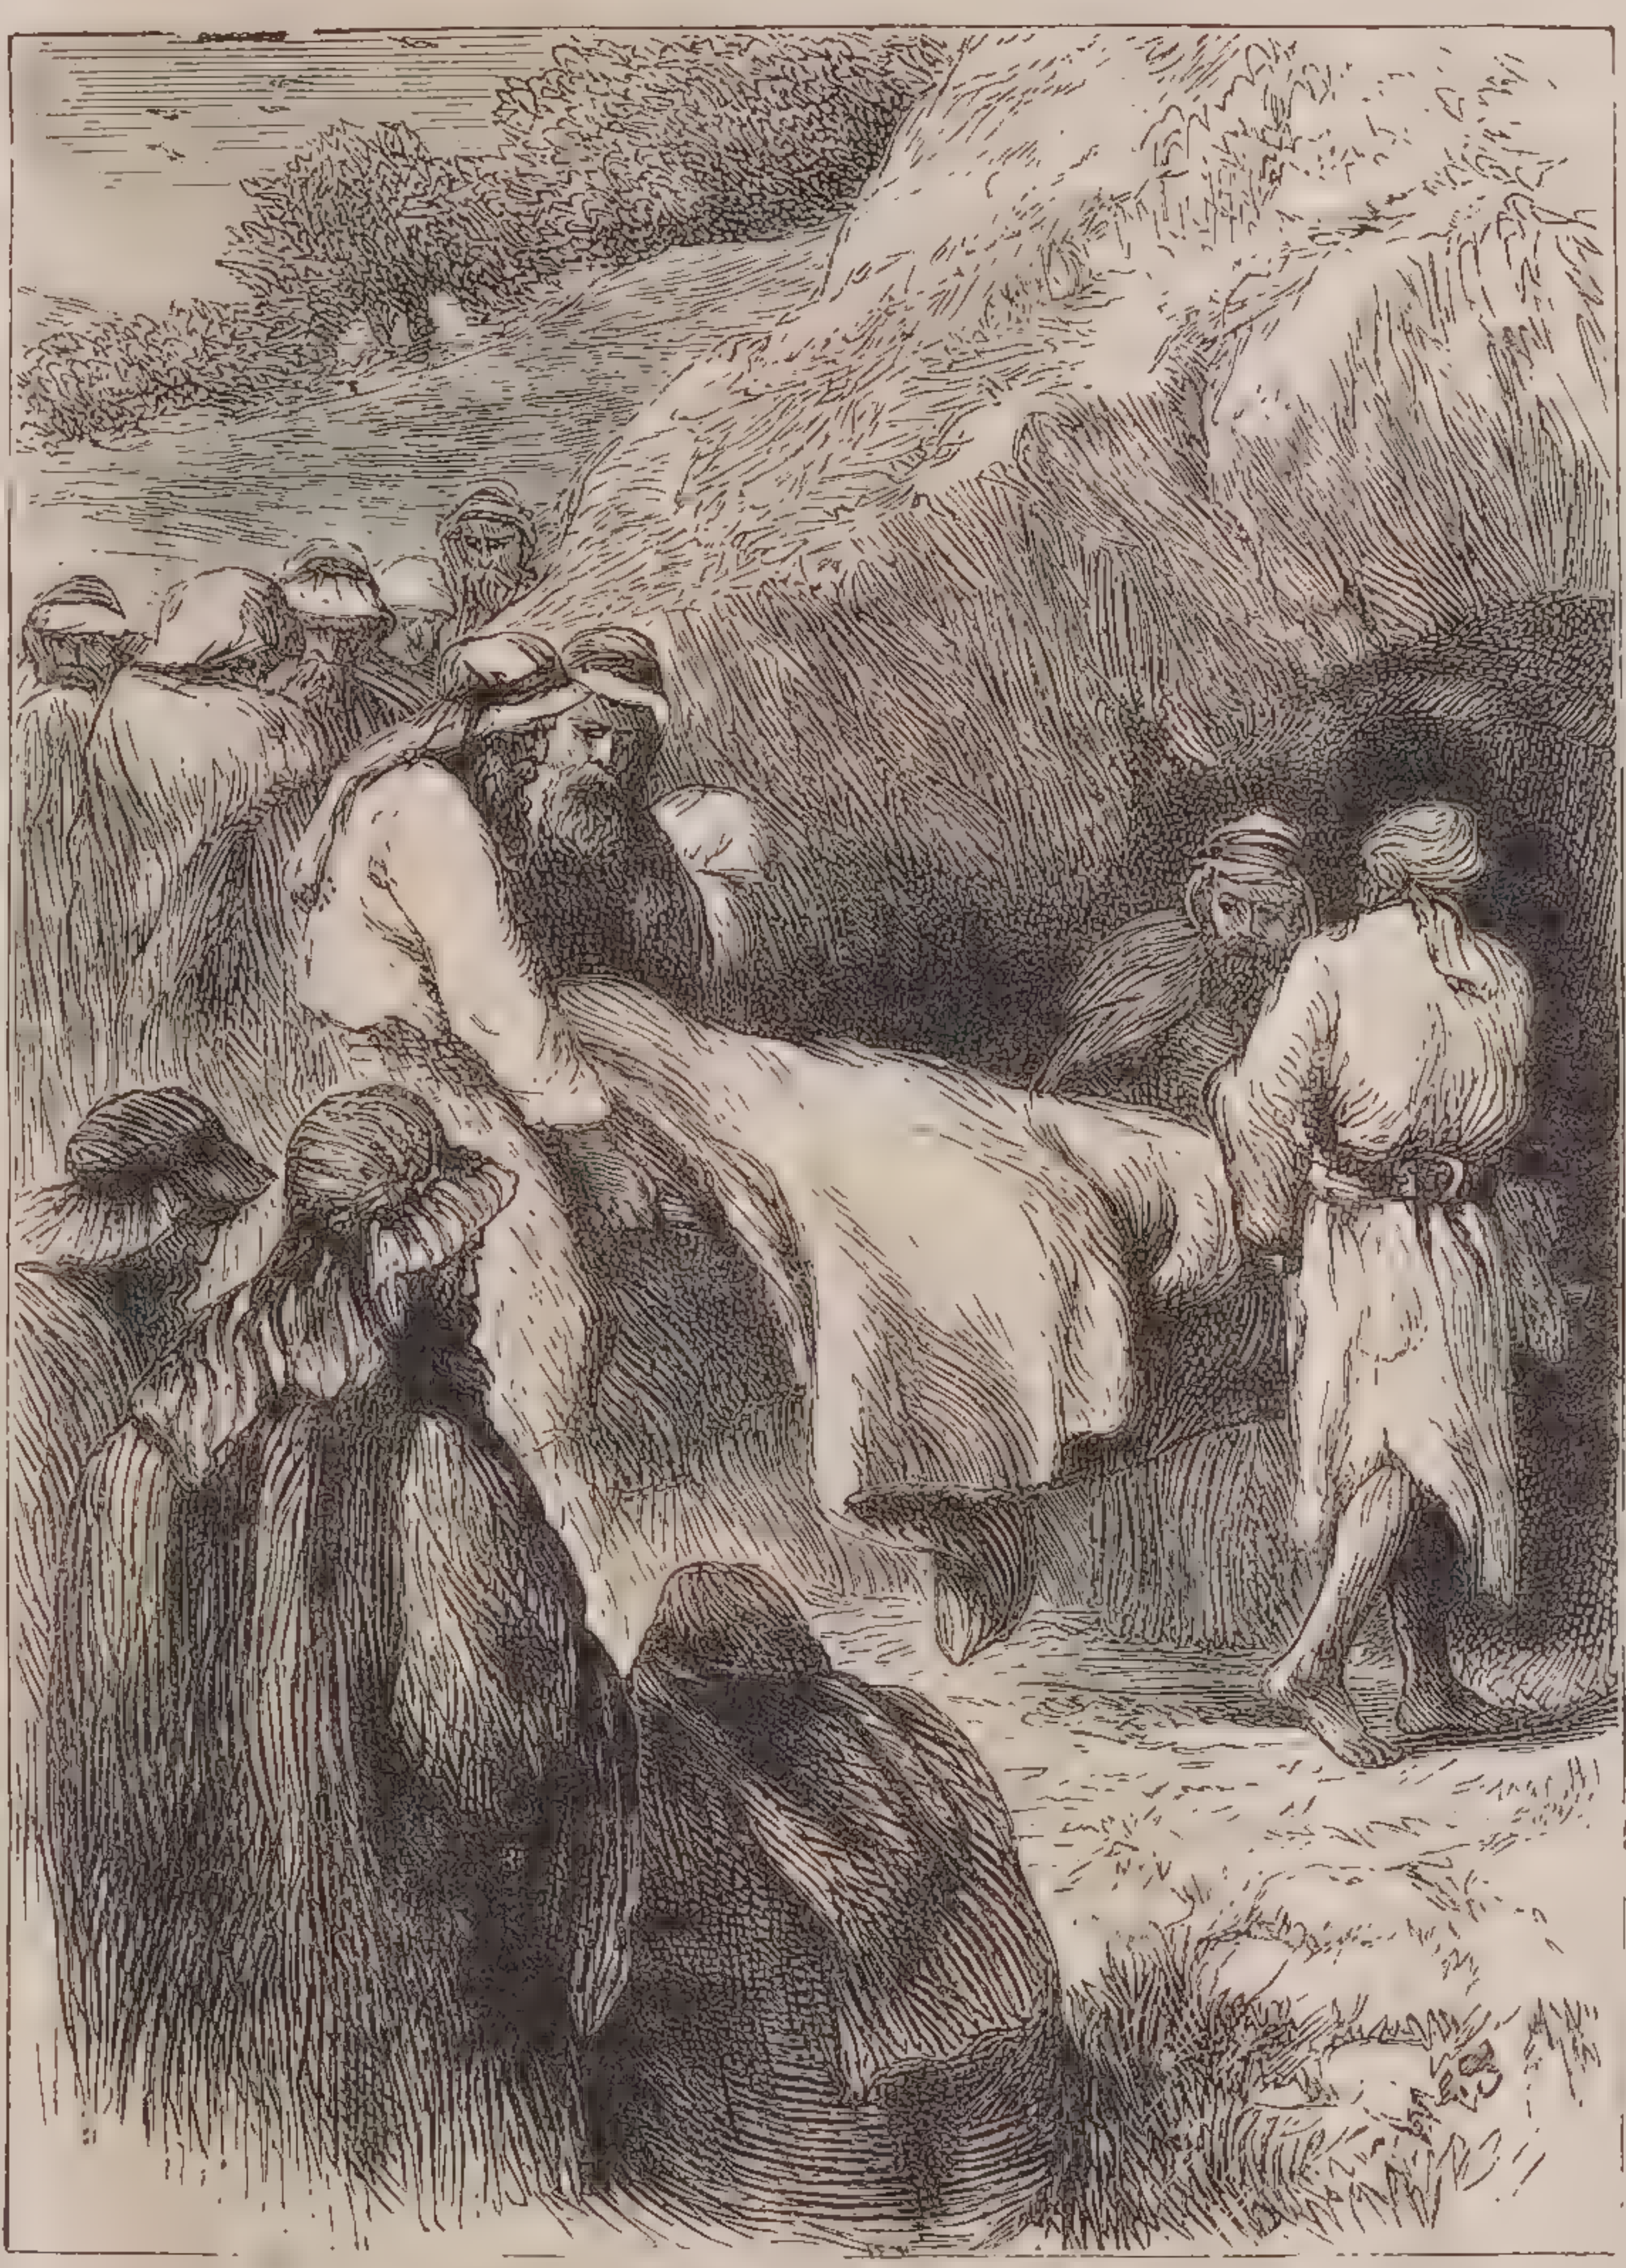
By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXV.—Gathered to His People.

Gen. xxv.

No human name can vie with Abraham's for the widespread reverence which it has evoked amongst all races and throughout all time. It was the aspiration of the pious Jew to repose in death in the bosom of Father Abraham. The fact of descent from him was counted by thousands sufficient to secure them a passport into heaven. Apostles so opposite as Paul and James united in commending his example to the imitation of primitive Christians, in an age which had seen the Lord Jesus Himself. The mediæval Church canonised Abraham alone among Old Testament worthies, by no decree, but by popular consent. Devout Mohammedans reverence his name as second only to that of their prophet. What was the secret of this widespread renown? It is not because he headed one of the greatest movements of the human family, nor yet because he evinced manly and intellectual vigour, nor because he possessed vast wealth. It was rather the remarkable nobility and grandeur of his religious life that has made him the object of veneration to all generations of mankind.

At the basis of his character was a mighty faith.—"Abraham believed God." In that faith he left his native land, and travelled to one which was promised, but not clearly indicated. In that faith he felt able to let Lot choose the best he could for himself, because he was sure that none could do better for himself than God was prepared to do for the one that trusted Him. In that faith he waited through long years, sure that God would give him the promised child. In that faith he lived a nomad life, dwelling in tents, and making no attempt to return to the settled country from which he had come out. Indeed, his soul was consumed with the passionate expectancy of the city of God. In that faith he was prepared to offer Isaac, and buried Sarah.



THE DEATH OF ABRAHAM.

Do not suppose that his faith dwelt alone. On the contrary, it bore much fruit; for if we test him by those catalogues of the fruits of faith which are provided in the New Testament, we shall find that he manifested them each and all. Take, for instance, that chain of linked graces enumerated in the Second Epistle by the Apostle Peter; a kind of golden ladder, stretched across the chasm between heaven and earth, and uniting them.

To Faith he added Virtue, or Manly Courage.—What could have been more manly than the speed with which he armed his trained servants, and the heroism with which he broke, with a train of undisciplined shepherds, on the disciplined bands of Assyria, driving them before him as the chaff before the whirlwind, and returning victorious down the long valley of the Jordan?

And to Manly Courage he added Knowledge.—All his life he was a student in God's college of divinity. Year by year fresh revelations of the character and attributes of God broke upon his soul. He grew in the knowledge of God, and the Divine nature, which at the first had been to him a terra incognita. An unknown country grew beneath his gaze, as he climbed through the years into closer fellowship with God, and from the summit looked down upon its lengths and breadths, its depths and heights, its oceans, mountain-ranges, and plains.

And to Knowledge he added Temperance, or Self-Control.—That he was master of himself is evident from the way in which he repelled the offer of the King of Sodom; and curbed his spirit amid the irritations caused by Lot's herdsmen, and yielded to the solicitations of Sarah for the expulsion of Hagar. The strongest spirits are those which have the strongest hand upon themselves, and are able, therefore, to do things which weaker men would fail in. There is no type of character more splendid than that of the man who is master of himself, because he is the servant of God; and who can rule others rightly because he can rule himself well.

And to Temperance, Patience.—Speaking of him, the voice of New Testament inspiration affirms that he "patiently endured." No ordinary patience was that which waited through the long years, not murmuring or complaining, but prepared to abide God's time; weaned from the breasts of earthly consolation and help, and quieted after the manner of the Psalmist, who said, "I have quieted myself as a child that is weaned of his mother. Let Israel hope in the Lord from henceforth and for ever."

And to his Patience he added Godliness.—One of his chief characteristics was his piety—a constant sense of the presence of God in his life, and a love and devotion to Him. Wherever he pitched his tent, there his first care was to rear an altar. Shechem, Hebron, Beersheba, alike saw these tokens of his reverence and love. In every time of trouble he turned as naturally to God as a child to its father; and there was such holy intercourse between his spirit and that of God, that the name by which he is now best known throughout the East is "the friend"—a name which he holds par excellence, and which has almost overshadowed the use of that name by which we know him best.

And to Godliness he added Brotherly Kindness.—Some men who are devoted towards God are lacking in the tenderer qualities towards those most closely knit with them in family bonds. Not so was it with Abraham; he was full of affection. Beneath the calm exterior and the erect bearing of the mighty chieftain there beat a warm and affectionate heart. Listen to that passionate cry, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee!" Remember God's own testimony to the affection he bore towards Isaac—"Thine only son, whom thou lovest." His nature therefore may be compared to those ranges of mighty hills, whose summits rear themselves above the region of storms, and hold converse with the skies, whilst their lower slopes are clothed with woods and meadows, where homesteads nestle and bright children string their necklaces of flowers with merry laughter.

And to Brotherly Kindness he added Charity, or Love.—In his dealings with men he could afford to be generous, open-hearted, open-handed, willing to pay down the large price demanded for Machpelah's cave without haggling or complaint, destitute of petty pride, affable, courteous, able to break out into sunny laughter; right with God, and therefore able to shed upon men the rays of a genial, restful, noble heart.

All these things were in him and abounded, and they made him neither barren nor unfaithful; they made his calling and election sure; they prepared for him an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God our Saviour. The thought that underlies those expressions in the Greek is richly significant. They denote the welcome given by choral songs and joyous greetings to the conqueror who, laden with spoils, returned to his native city; and they indicate that for some favoured souls, at least, there is waiting on the threshold of the other world a welcome so exuberant, so boisterous in its unutterable joy, so royally demonstrative, as to resemble that given in all times to those who have conferred great benefits, or who have learnt the art of stirring the loyal devotion of their fellows. If such an entrance could be accorded to anyone, certainly it would be to Abraham, when, stooping beneath the weight of one hundred threescore and fifteen years, "he gave up the ghost, and died at a good old age, an old man, full of years, and was gathered to his people."

"Abraham gave up the ghost."—There was no reluctance in his death; he did not cling to life, he was glad to be gone; and when the angel messenger summoned him, without a struggle, nay, with the readiness of glad consent, his spirit returned to God who gave it.

He was gathered to his people.—This cannot refer to his body, for that did not sleep beside his ancestors, but side by side with Sarah's. Surely then it must refer to his spirit. The world's grey fathers knew little of the future, but they felt that there was somewhere a mustering place of their clan, whither devout and holy souls were being gathered, one by one, so that each spirit, as it passed from this world, went to rejoin its people; the people from which it had sprung; the people whose name it bore; the people to which by its tastes and sympathies it was akin.

What a lovely synonym for death! To die is to rejoin our people; to pass into a world where the great clan is gathering, welcoming with shouts each new-comer through the shadows. Where are your people? I trust they are God's people; and if so, those that bear your name, standing on the other shore, are more numerous than the handful gathered around you here; many whom you have never known, but who know you; many whom you have loved and lost awhile; many who without you cannot be made perfect in their happiness. There they are, rank on rank, company on company, regiment on regiment, watching for your coming. Be sure you do not disappoint them. But remember, if your people are God's people, you cannot be gathered to them unless first in faith and love you are gathered to Him.

Little doubt had this noble man of the recognition of saintly spirits in the other world, and, indeed, it is an untrue conception which has filled the future with strange spirits, unknowing and unknown. Heaven is not a prison with tier on tier of cells, but a home; and what is home without the recognition and love of fond hearts? So long as we read of David going to his child, of Paul anticipating the pleasure of meeting again his converts, of the women and disciples being able to recognise the appearance and the love of the Saviour amid the glory of the resurrection body, we may be prepared to believe, with the patriarch, that dying is reunion with those to whom in the deepest sense we are related. Spiritual affinities are for all time and for eternity, and will discover themselves through all worlds.

"And his sons, Isaac and Ishmael, buried him in the cave of Machpelah."—There were great differences between these two. Ishmael, the child of his slave; Isaac, of the wedded wife. Ishmael, the offspring of expediency; Isaac, of promise. Ishmael, wild and masterful, "the wild ass," strongly marked in his individuality, proud, independent, swift to take an insult, swift to avenge it; Isaac, quiet and retiring, submissive and meek, willing to carry wood, to be kept in the dark, to be bound, to yield up his wells, and to let his wife govern his house. And yet all differences were wiped out in that moment of supreme sorrow; and coming from his desert fastnesses, surrounded by his wild and ruffian freebooters, Ishmael united with the other son of their common father, who had displaced him in his inheritance, and who was so great a contrast to himself; but all differences were smoothed out in that hour.

Many an ancient chieftain may have been gathered by that ancient cave to join in one last act of respect to the mighty prince, who had dwelt amongst them for so long. Amid the wail of the women, and the dirge which even to this day tells of sorrow for departed worth in Eastern lands, borne by a band of his trusted retainers, whilst a vast concourse of the camp stood wrapped in reverent silence around, the remains of the man who had dared to trust God at all costs, and who with pilgrim steps had traversed so many weary miles, were solemnly laid beside the dust of Sarah, his faithful wife. There, in all probability, they rest even to this day, and from thence they will be raised at the coming of the King.

Out of materials which were by no means extraordinary, God built up a character with which He could hold fellowship as friend with friend; and a life which has exerted a profound influence on all after time. It would seem as if He can raise any crop He chooses, when the soil of the heart and life are entirely surrendered to Him. Why should not we henceforth yield ourselves utterly to his Divine husbandry, asking Him to fulfil in us the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power? Only let us trust Him fully, and obey Him instantly and utterly; and as the years pass by they shall witness results which shall bring glory to God in the highest, whilst they fill us with ceaseless praise.

MISSION HALL AND TENT.

MR. J. C. RAINEY writes to a friend from Paignton, South Devon:—

We opened our new mission hall on June 10. It has been in God's good hand a grand success. We do not know our comfort, having suffered so much discomfort in our former place, the temperance hall. The people, residents and visitors, evidently appreciate the change likewise, for the audience is now two to one compared with our previous hall. Everyone declares we have as complete and pleasant a hall as they have ever seen.

There has been no flagging in the attendance since the opening; we have steadily had to increase our sitting accommodation, and, best of all, God has given us blessing in conversions. Our great desire in removing into our better quarters has been to go out unitedly with our fellow-Christians of each communion in Gospel work. They warmly responded to our overtures, and each favourable Sunday evening has found us banded together on the commodious green adjacent to the sea, holding forth the word of life, by song and speech, to the hundreds of promenaders. The new hymns of the "Additional Songs and Solos" have proved most helpful and attractive. As the evenings close in earlier, I think the audience increases; as many, Nicodemus-like, will listen behind the curtain of darkness. Then our tent has been in full operation in the villages. At Stokeinteignhead, where we first pitched, God gave a very gracious outpouring of his Spirit, and there was a real revival, especially among the men. Not a few now are witnessing among their fellow-workmen of the power of Christ to deliver from the power of sin. We are at present working among the shipwrights in a parish, near Brixham, called Churston, and numbers of the men are constant and impressed attendants. Pray that they may be brought to Christ!

The visitors and children, too, have taken up the Special Service Mission on the sands, morning by morning. The vicar of Christ Church and myself have been greatly encouraged, and letters from many of the children testify that the word of the Lord has been with power on their hearts. Thus we rejoice in having our share on the up-grade line, and doing duty as signalmen and porters for God and men.

THE FEARFUL HEART AND ITS BEST FRIEND.

MY craven heart in fear and doubt,
Cried, "Lo, I sink, no more to rise!"
When, as of old, the kindly eyes
That sought poor erring Peter out,
Looked down on me, and Jesus said,
"The waves shall not go o'er thy head."

"The clouds of circumstance are grey,
I cannot see a step," I cried.
The Saviour patiently replied,
"O trembling one! I am the Way;
Try not the unknown path to see;
Certainly I will be with thee."

"I am so weak, so very frail;
I dread this cold world's bitter blast."
Said Jesus, "All your burdens cast
On Me, and, whatsoe'er assail,
Oh, hush, my child, these sad alarms;
You shall be carried in my arms."

"Joys are but fleeting; many a grief
And care beset my chequered life."
His accents stilled my spirit's strife,
And to my heart brought sweet relief:
"Lo, I have all you need," said He;
For God hath given all things to Me."

"I am so tired, the road is steep,
And weary are my wavering feet."
He said in tones surpassing sweet,
"Nay, child belovèd, do not weep;
Come unto Me, O sore oppressed
And burdened, I will give you rest."

"Friends have dispersed; in solitude
I think of those no longer nigh."
In voice of tenderest sympathy,—
So well my case He understood—
He answered me: "I am your Friend;
I will be with you to the end."

"Heaven seems so far; I long to see
The land to which my soul aspires."
"I'll satisfy thy heart's desires;
Rest in the Lord, wait patiently.
My life for thee I freely gave,
And with Me all things thou shalt have."

OUR LITTLE NOMADS.—SIR,—A fortnight ago I visited twelve families of gipsies; out of the forty-four men, women, and children only three could read and write a line. On Monday, last week, I visited thirty-four families at a fair in Leicestershire, numbering from 140 to 160 men, women, and children, and only about twelve could read and write. A day later I visited a feast in Northamptonshire, and found six van families in a most neglected, ignorant, and disgraceful state. Some of the gipsies and van dwellers who have more than once threatened my life for trying to improve the condition of their children, now openly praise my plans for lifting their children out of the mire of sin and shame, to place them on a level with other children. Our nomads are in the mud, and our legislature will keep them there unless public opinion goads it to action in the Autumn Session. GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XXIII.—WHERE ARE YOUR SINS?

GOD is a prayer-answering God, and the way in which He answers is sometimes very remarkable. I knew a gentleman who was a worldly man, full of fun, joking continually. He went after his pleasure and left his wife and family to go after theirs. He said they enjoyed themselves singing, and so did he, though it was not exactly the same kind. He knew that he was the subject of their earnest prayers, and that they were continually pleading for his conversion.

"All right," he said, "go on praying, and if I am to have greater pleasures than I have now, so much the better!"

Soon after this, he began to get very uneasy, a certain undefined fear took hold on his conscience. He thought to himself, "What if I die as I am! What if I am sent away to hell!"

Such thoughts haunted him, so that he did not know what to do. He told me afterwards that he used to smoke a cigar to try and soothe his troubled mind, and sometimes took a glass of whisky to cheer his spirits. With all these helps, however, he could not get away from himself, or his unwelcome thoughts.

One night when he was feeling worse than usual, he resolved to go out hunting the next day. Thinking about this, his mind was diverted, and he fell asleep.

When he came down to breakfast, he declared that it was the best thing in the world for him to go out with the hounds. It was a fine morning, and he went off in good spirits, saying to his wife, "I am going to a meeting. You like meetings, don't you?"

He went to the meet, and together with a large party set off in style to pursue a poor jaded fox which had been cooped up all night.

What went with the fox, or the hounds, my friend never knew; for, as he was galloping along, both he and his horse came to grief. Just as the animal approached an easy ditch and was about to jump over, some geese which happened to be at the bottom of it, suddenly rose up and put out their wings. The horse, thus startled, missed its spring and fell heavily upon the ground, throwing his master a long way forward.

My friend was taken up and carried home on a board; expecting to die every minute.

His wife, who was standing looking out of the window, observed a little knot of men coming along, but could not imagine what was the matter. Presently she descried something scarlet in the midst of the men. She said, "They are carrying a soldier, but why are they bringing him here?"

However, on nearer approach the truth dawned upon her. She saw that it was none other than her own Nimrod being brought home in this sorrowful plight.

"What is the matter?" she cried.

One of the men said, "Please, ma'am, the master is much hurted in hunting."

The sufferer was brought in tenderly and placed upon the dining-room sofa. Soon the doctor arrived. He feared that there was much injury to the back and spine, and therefore charged his patient to lie quite still until he returned with some remedies. In the meantime I was brought in to see my friend.

He told me what had happened, and how it came about. "Oh, dear," he said, "I am so dreadfully sorry I went out this morning—I felt somehow that I ought not to go. What will become of me?"

"That altogether depends," I answered, "upon your position with God. Where are your sins?"

"My sins," said the gentleman looking straight at me, "are all here," putting his hand upon his breast—"a great load here."

"How long have you felt them there?" I inquired.

"For weeks and weeks," he replied, "I have been miserable for days and nights. I was so wretched that I thought I would go for a run to get rid of my low spirits."

I said: "It is a good thing for you that you did not succeed. You should remember that, if you get rid of the striving of the Holy Spirit, He will leave you altogether. I thank God that you still feel your load, or burden of sin."

"Yes, indeed," he added, "my load of sin is dreadful."

"Now, friend," I continued, "look here; the Scripture says, your sins were laid upon Jesus, and that He bore them in His own body on the tree."

"I feel them here," he said, in an agony of distress.

"My dear friend, which am I to believe, God's Word, or your feelings? God says, He laid all your sins upon Jesus, and I believe Him. If Jesus died for every man, He surely died for you. What is the difference between you and me—Christ died for both of us. I believe this, and, believing, rejoice; you do not believe, and consequently are miserable. Come, let us thank Him for his love in dying for you."

Soon the light began to dawn upon his mind. He said: "Do you think I may with safety believe this? You will not deceive me, will you?"

"Certainly not," I replied: "Believe and live. There is life for a look at the crucified One."

Putting his hands together he said earnestly, "O God, I do believe; I will believe."

"Then, thank Him," I said, "and thus acknowledge your faith."

"I do, I do," he said, clapping his hands.

Presently he sat up, praising God; and shortly after rose and walked round the table, doing the same. His wife, hearing a noise, came in, and said, "Oh, my dear, do lie down and be still." He replied, "I cannot be still, my sins were laid upon Jesus, and I am happy, rejoicing."

"Oh, my dear," repeated his wife, as if in distress, "do lie down till the doctor comes."

"Never mind the doctor," he answered, "I am all right now, my sins are pardoned; the load is gone; praise God."

In her fears she had forgotten her prayers, and did not recognise the answer which was come in this unexpected way. I said: "Let us thank God together. That fall has been the means of your husband's salvation."

"Do you say so," exclaimed the lady. "Children, children, come here; oh come and praise God with us."

We did so, and no one was happier than the gentleman himself, who continued walking about rejoicing.

In the midst of this thanksgiving, the doctor arrived, and was amazed to see and hear his broken-backed patient.

"It is all right, doctor; thank God for that tumble. I wonder how my poor horse is. We must send and inquire about him."

"How are you?" said the medical man to the gentleman.

"Oh," was the reply, "you dear old doctor, you are as great a heathen as I used to be; now I must preach to you!"

"Yes, yes, you shall; but please sit down and let me examine you."

"I do not think you will find much the matter, doctor; but to think, if I had broken my neck, I should have been in hell by this time! Thank God I am saved."

The doctor examined his patient, and found nothing more serious than bruises; but our friend had had a miraculous deliverance, and he was deeply grateful for it.

BIBLE STUDY AT OCEAN GROVE.

AN esteemed American friend writes:—Perhaps the most noteworthy feature in the recent religious life of America is an increased recognition of the importance of Bible study. One by one the leading colleges of the country are making provision for a more systematic examination of the sacred Word. Summer Conferences, specifically designed for the assembling of men "mighty in the Scriptures" and their eager disciples, are multiplying throughout the land. In some of the older encampments, hitherto devoted chiefly to other ends, adequate attention is beginning to be granted to lines of solid instruction which must form the basis of all fruitful effort.

In illustration of this "new departure," there has just been held for the first time, at Ocean Grove, New Jersey, an "Inter-denominational Conference for Bible Study," continuing one week, and occupying the largest auditorium in the place. The organiser of the gathering was Dr. L. W. Munhall, who usually spends his summer vacation at Ocean Grove. It may here be mentioned that Dr. Munhall, in all his remarkable career as an evangelist, was never more successful in turning many to righteousness than during the season of labour from the effects of which he is now recuperating. He was able to visit Toronto (Canada), Columbus and Cleveland (Ohio), Baltimore, Buffalo, Macon (Georgia), and St. Paul. In those cities, the aggregate number of those who publicly confessed Christ, and indicated the churches of their preference, was about 8000. In St. Paul alone, the number of conversions was estimated at 2000.

The Conference, whose sessions have just closed, was well attended. On one occasion, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, addressed no fewer than 5000 persons. Dr. Munhall, who presided throughout, was assisted in the department of song by Prof. and Mrs. Towner. The speakers were the following: Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of London, England; Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, England; Bishop Newman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Prof. Luther T. Townsend, of Boston University (Methodist); Prof. W. G. Morehead, of the United Presbyterian Seminary at Xenia, Ohio; Rev. Dr. W. J. Erdman; Judge Thomas O. Lowe (Presbyterian), of Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. Dr. Thomas Marrow, of Philadelphia, agent of the American Bible Society of Pennsylvania; Prof. S. G. Bowman, of De Pauw University (Methodist), Indiana; Dr. Duggan Clark, of Earlham College (Friends), Indiana; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Needham; Rev. W. W. Clark, of Brooklyn. Dr. Munhall delivered the opening and the closing addresses.

RESCUE WORK IN BOHEMIA.—It has been resolved to extend the work which is being done among fallen girls in Prague. Every move is, however, the outcome of much faith, for the community among whom these praiseworthy efforts are being made by no means realises the importance of rescuing perishing young women. Mrs. A. W. Clark, Smichov 280, Prague, is president of the ladies' committee of the Home, which was founded about a year ago.

THE EAST LONDON EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY carries on a very interesting lodging-house mission. In East and West end alike, the common kitchens are visited, and services are held every Sunday by members of the Society. The report, just published, states that last year 820 Gospel services were conducted in the Metropolis in connection with this special agency, some of them in houses under the very shadow of Westminster Abbey. It is estimated that 239,340 persons who are not in the habit of attending places of public worship, thus heard of a Saviour willing and ready to save. Among the several adjuncts of the Mission is an excellent system of tract distribution, by which no fewer than 1,196,340 tracts were last year scattered abroad. Tracts and other help may be sent to Mr. John Harvey, hon. sec., 29, Senrab-street, Stepney, E.

The Missionary Crusade in Scotland.

After the Aberdeen engagements were over, Dr. and Mrs. Gordon (as already stated in our columns) were obliged to leave for America. Willingly would they have remained a few weeks longer, had not urgent engagements at home stood in the way. The Committee very gratefully acknowledge their deep obligation to Dr. and Mrs. Gordon for the services they rendered. Their labours were abundant, and many through them were inspired with fresh zeal and truer consecration to the Master's service.

Rev. James Scott, of Natal, and Mrs. Stott, of China, both of whom have been associated with the delegates throughout this tour, kindly undertook to fulfil Dr. and Mrs. Gordon's remaining engagements. The delegates were in Glasgow on Sunday, August 12. During the day, missionary services were held in several of the city churches, and in the evening a crowded and deeply interesting meeting was held in the Queen's rooms. Dr. Pierson delivered a most impressive address which touched the hearts of many. In Glasgow, as indeed in all the places visited by the delegates, the ministers of all denominations co-operated most heartily and enthusiastically in promoting the success of the meetings. This unity and co-operation, so signally manifested at the great Missionary Conference in London, have been gratifying and encouraging features of this movement from its commencement.

From Glasgow as a centre, on successive days of the week the delegates visited Hamilton, Dunoon, Helensburgh, Rothesay, and Coatbridge, where most successful meetings were held. With the exception of the Edinburgh meetings, perhaps the most successful of the whole series were those held in Hamilton. At the evening meeting, Dr. Pierson said it would make any man feel very solemn who rose to address an audience on missions so near to the home of Dr. Livingstone. If individual Christians made up their minds to go with the Gospel to the heathen, should the opportunity arise, they would see a great revival over Scotland and over the world. In the course of his remarks, the speaker, in his vehemence, broke the pointer he held in his hand. He said he wished he could break in pieces the apathy which prevails on this subject in the Church of Christ. Dr. Pierson spoke for upwards of an hour with great power and eloquence, and called forth an enthusiasm that has not been manifested at any meeting on behalf of missions for many years in Hamilton.

From the Glasgow district, the delegates proceeded to Dundee, where, on Sunday, August 19, they conducted special missionary services in several of the churches. In the evening a crowded meeting was held at which ex-Provost Moncur presided, and again with great power, and, as on every occasion, with fresh arguments and illustrations, Dr. Pierson enforced the claims of missions. On Monday afternoon a ladies' meeting was held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, when Mrs. Stott, and others, gave stirring testimony to the value of women's work in the mission field. On the Monday evening, Montrose was visited, and on the following days, Brechin, Forfar, Arbroath, and Broughty Ferry. In each of these places large and enthusiastic meetings were held.

With the meeting at Broughty Ferry, the present series of meetings closed. The beloved brethren and sisters who have been so devotedly engaged in this work now need a rest. Dr. and Mrs. Pierson have gone to the Continent for a fortnight or three weeks. Within that time Dr. Pierson expects to receive a letter from his church in America, which will enable him to say definitely whether or not he can prolong his stay in this country, and resume the work in which God has so manifestly blessed him, and for which he is so remarkably qualified. From all parts of the country pressing requests for a visit have been received, and are still coming in. Let much prayer be made to God, that, if it be his will, his honoured servant may have a clear indication as to the path of duty. Whether Dr. Pierson is permitted to remain a little longer amongst us or not, this crusade, which has been so successfully inaugurated, and which has been a time of quickening and refreshing to many, ought not to cease. The world's evangelisation is the work of the Church, and the Churches of Christ throughout our land need to be reminded of their responsibility, and stirred up to discharge their duty. For such a work, the most talented men in the ministry at home, our missionaries on furlough, and our laymen conversant with the subject of missions, and able to enforce their claims, should be enlisted, and, doubtless, many such would joyfully give their time and strength to promote such an enterprise.

For the Young.

AMONG THE CHINESE.

The following extracts from a letter, received on Friday last, from Miss Annie Sanderson, of the China Inland Mission, Chefoo, will, we think, be interesting to our young readers. Speaking of "the future world, according to what the Chinese mind imagines it," she writes :—

The Chinese think that the spirit world is an exact counterpart of this, and that what a man has done here he will do there. At the death of a person, beautifully made paper things are burnt, from the supposition that in being consumed they will become realities and minister to the necessities and the pleasure of the departed spirits. All imaginable things, in paper—houses, gardens, mules, chairs, money, &c.—are burnt according to what a man's trade or profession has been—e.g., for a tailor, garments, scissors, &c. Some of them candidly say they do not really believe in all this, but "Our ancestors did it, and why should not we?"

One of their most extraordinary ideas about spirits is shown by the marriage of two corpses. That actually happened lately at Ninghai, a place near here where Mr. C. H. Judd is working, and even horrified some of the people. The first death was that of a young woman of twenty, who for some reason had never been betrothed. A man who had not been married died about the same time, and his friends thought, "What would this poor lonely spirit do in the other world, with no one to wash his clothes or cook his food?" So they brought the dead bodies, laid them side by side, and went through the performances, feast, &c., in the morning, and in the evening had funeral rites. Then the spirits were supposed to be united for ever!

I have lately learned some very sad things about the lives of the women as wives. From infancy to marriage they are the drudges of their mothers-in-law, and thenceforward of their husbands and the latter's brothers—getting all the kicks and cuffs, the potato-peelings left from their husbands' meals, in fact, the worst and poorest of everything. The only thing that makes life a little brighter is the birth of a son. They are then "So-and-so's mother." A Chinaman never thinks of saying "my wife," but always, if he has a son, "my son's mother" (giving the child's name). If they are unfortunate enough to have a daughter, evil spirits are said to have been at work in the house, and then they are more despised than ever. A mother has been known to kill eight daughters in succession, her reason being, "Why should they live? They will only grow up to such a life as mine has been." One thing that causes this brutality is, perhaps, their religion. They are taught from the writings of Confucius that a son must love and reverence his mother, because, if she dies, he can never get another; but if a man beats his wife to death, what does it matter?—he can go next door and easily get another, or as many as he likes!

When the men become Christians there is a difference in their feelings and conduct toward their wives and children. Is not that an encouragement to preach to them? There is a great difference too in the appearance of the Christians. The teacher that Mr. and Mrs. Stooke have is the son of a native Christian pastor, and so has been brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, in a sense. When Mr. McCarthy, sen., was here a few weeks back this man asked whether his son (Mr. Frank McCarthy) did not love his father very much. That showed the man understood the love of father and child, at any rate. He often talks about his wife (which is unusual) and his child, a girl, whose feet he will not have bound according to heathen custom. That process is attended with agonising pain. The toes are bent right under the foot, and bound so that the heel is pressed up to the ankle and kept so by tight bandages. I saw a picture of a foot bound in another way in Mrs. Bryson's "Child Life in Chinese Homes." That book is very interesting. I should like it to be within reach of our little ones. Such books judiciously given to children may do a great deal in educating their zeal for missionary work.

THE GOSPEL FOR COSTA RICA.

This country, rich in natural resources, and with a population stated to be now upwards of a quarter of a million, has hitherto had no missionary of the Gospel. The language is Spanish, the dominant religion is Roman Catholic, but there are thousands of English-speaking people—especially Jamaicans, who, for the most part, go to work on the railway as labourers.

The Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society has just sent an agent to Costa Rica—Rev. J. H. Sobey, a well-tried and successful pastor and evangelist. He has been joyfully received, and there is every prospect of success in the salvation of souls. The same Society has deeply interesting missions in Cuba, Hayti, &c.. For further information apply to the hon. sec. Rev. E. J. Hewett, Anchovy P.O., Jamaica.

MADEIRA.—On Tuesday, 18th inst., a sale of work will be held at the residence of Mrs. A. Townend, Linkfield, Reigate-road, Redhill, on behalf of the Protestant Mission carried on in Madeira by Mr. G. Smart. This Mission is a greatly needed one in the island, and its operations have been blessed in the past. Mrs. Townend will be glad of any contributions in work or money.

GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL ORPHAN HOME, TOTTENHAM.—More than 800 girls have been trained in this Institution since it was established in 1858. Recently, when last year's report was issued, there were twelve inmates; others could be taken in and educated, but the funds had not for some time been adequate to the reception of the full number for which there is accommodation. The superintendence is still in the hands of Miss Jefferies, who is assisted by Miss Wahlstrohm. Several evangelistic agencies are worked in connection with the Home.

On Winning Souls to Christ.

BY GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

III.

THE truly consecrated Christian, whose absorbing thought is to win souls to Christ, must be considerate. There are difficulties to be overcome, and there are helpful agencies to be employed which must be rightly considered. Would we hold fast the confidence of our faith firm unto the end? Then let us consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus. Would we provoke others to love and good works? Then let us consider those of like faith and service. Would we have sympathy with those in bonds for the Gospel's sake? Then let us also consider ourselves as bound with them. Would we be fruitful in conversion-work? Then must we consider how best the desired results shall be achieved. There are environments, temptations, circumstances, and personal peculiarities, connected with each soul, to be considered.

Besides, reflecting on the soul's present danger and prospective doom will deepen our earnestness and inflame our zeal; will make us tender and importunate in prayer. "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them." "Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things." An inconsiderate teacher will make heedless scholars; an indifferent preacher will have careless hearers. The consecrated worker should be conscientious in preparation, cautious in deportment, and considerate in all things.

Courage is also an element of consecration. The soul-winner should have convictions of truth and of duty. The foundation doctrines of the Gospel must be held with intelligent and tenacious grasp, and enforced with unwavering courage. They who would win souls must not apologise for any part of God's infallible Word, but be always ready to proclaim their faith in its Divine origin; also to press upon every conscience the dreadful fact of sin, its penalty, guilt, and consequences; neither to excuse sin nor modify Scripture teaching regarding its just punishment. We need courage in these days to declare our views of man's nature, utterly and thoroughly fallen and depraved; his entire lack of personal merit or righteousness, as judged by the Divine standard; to declare with persistent and emphatic utterance that there is no salvation or hope for that soul who now repudiates salvation in Christ, and that "there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Courage is required to preach the sacrificial death of Christ as a full atonement for human sin, and the presence of the Holy Spirit needed to regenerate, elevate, and purify; that the Gospel is a proclamation of pardon to the guilty, of peace to the rebellious, and of salvation to the lost; and that whosoever believeth in Jesus Christ shall receive remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Courage is needed to watch for souls as they that must give account; to work for souls night and day, and to warn souls with tears and entreaties. And surely doing this work faithfully, prayerfully, and continuously, will bring its own reward. Thus shall we be used to save souls from death, and win them to eternal life.

Common sense is another requisite for this overwhelming work. It need not necessarily be divorced from true Scriptural consecration. By common sense I mean naturalness, modesty, and tact. Naturalness is the furthest remove from affectation; self is last, and the work is first. Some workers are self-important, are painfully official, and officialism is harmful; it soon glides into officiousness. The projection of self into unnecessary prominence in the Lord's work is always harmful. That was good advice the old angler gave the youthful sportsman: (1) Hide yourself; (2) hide yourself some more; (3) hide yourself still further. The fisherman who fails to hide himself will succeed in causing the fish to hide themselves. The preacher or teacher who makes self paramount makes his message of little account. Good, sanctified common sense is beautifully expressed in the line—

None of self, and all of Thee.

Common sense is tact: "He that winneth souls is wise"; he grows in wisdom in proportion as he engages in this sublime work. This tact is chiefly acquired. The "awkward squad," by exercise in movement, and practice in arms, become graceful soldiers and precise marksmen. So tact develops by reason of use. He who does not attempt to lead a soul to Christ until accomplished in this high art, will fail to become a soul-winner.

Some great soul-winners were at first but blundering workmen. Christian workers may do harm by imprudent zeal; or fail to do good through excessive prudence. Said Adolph Monod, in his latest words, "One warm blundering man will do more good in the Church than a dozen frigid wise ones." Alas! for the injury done by chilling wisdom. Tact increases by practice. Better miss the mark in an effort to do good than neglect the opportunity through fear of failure. There is a directing hand which will surely guide the arrow to the mark shot at a venture, while the arrow idle in its quiver is not thus honoured. There have been blundering Peters in every age; their impetuosity would be sadly missed were the race to die out. But let none be discouraged. By patient continuance in well-doing and conscientious watchguard over an eccentric disposition, we will, at least in part, correct our blunders, and thereby increase our value to the Church of Jesus Christ.

A WARNING FROM AFAR.

DEAR BROTHER,—With what pleasure we read every little notice of the Centenary of Missions meetings. THE CHRISTIAN can, of course, only give us the most prominent part of the proceedings, but even this is precious to us. It is a real treat to us. What a subject of thanksgiving, especially for us who have long been labouring in the mission field, to hear of the increasing interest now manifested in this work for the advancement of our Saviour's kingdom—a work, alas, too long neglected, or too lightly treated by the churches. I may not be permitted to see the blessed results which will be soon produced by these conferences, but I fully believe that a fresh impulse will be given to the work.

The churches will now, more than ever before, be aroused to see the duty resting upon them, and not cast their duty on a committee, or perhaps leave the onus to some zealous secretary. At present, as never before, the people of God must understand that openings are presented to them to try their faith; liberty is granted them to carry forward the missionary enterprise in nearly every land; and if they determine to go forward, with the help of the Almighty, to convey the message of life to every nation thus rendered accessible, we shall hear of a mighty blessing resting on the home churches as well as upon their undertakings.

But, on the other hand, if they fall back to the old lines—if they relapse into the cold, formal method of so many congregations—I dread lest those doors of entrance will be closed again by the judgment of God. Wars may be permitted, home commotions may break out at any moment, and the resources that believers are reluctant to spend for Christ's cause may be required to protect themselves or their countrymen. The Lord mercifully grant that such judgment may not be required. May his people be now awake to their responsibilities.

A WORKER WANTED.

IN a recent communication, Miss Gertrude H. White, 1, Cambridge-terrace, Sidmouth, Devon, writes:—

In this place there is a Mission in full working order, free of debt, but only wanting someone to come and take charge. No remuneration can be given, nor anything towards personal expenses, but all the expenses of the Mission will be paid by voluntary contributions. I have given voluntary help in playing the American organ, and leading the singing from the commencement, and now that our permanent worker has been suddenly removed from us, the whole burden falls on me, and though it is a happy burden, I find it increasingly difficult to get supplies every week.

What we want is a devoted servant of God, who has the burden of souls laid upon him, to visit and work amongst the people and take the services. I feel that, while the attendance keeps up as it does, I dare not have such a Mission closed until I have made a strong effort to keep it on. Surely someone will feel led to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty in this spiritually dark place.

SEED-SOWING IN BRITTANY.

THE Herald of Mercy, of Mr. Henry Cook's Seamen's Mission, Gosport, lay moored at Morlaix, Brittany, from August 13—27. Rev. Alfred Llewellyn Jenkins writes describing the services that were held:—

As there was no evangelist on board, the work of holding the meetings had been entrusted by Mr. McAll to myself and my friends, and we are very thankful for the experience gained and the joy it has afforded us. As I preach in both Breton and French, we suited ourselves to the needs of our congregations. During the time the Herald was in the dock the interest of the people has not abated one moment, and we had the room on board quite full. The people who were allowed on deck sat or stood by the opened skylights, and listened; and some evenings I have been told that there have been well nigh a thousand standing on the quay, listening to the words that reached them. Captain Mountefield tells me that in all his experience he has never seen such peaceful and attentive audiences.

I have been delighted with the people, and they have taken a great deal of pleasure in the meetings. Although the last meeting was advertised for 8 p.m., there were people in the room as early as six; and when I arrived at 7.30, I had some trouble in getting through the crowd to the ship. At the end of the meetings I proposed that the captain be asked to convey to Mr. Cook their sincere thanks for sending the ship over, and to express the pleasure they had felt at the opportunity to hear the Gospel. The suggestion was received and passed with great heartiness. The people then adopted a vote of thanks to Captain Mountefield and his crew for their invariable kindness to them. All this was done with as much good spirit and will as one could wish to see in any Christian church, and yet these people are nominally Roman Catholics.

As to the good that has been done it is not ours to speak of; the Lord Himself can alone gauge the results. The ship, however, has been emptied of all the books and tracts there were on board. Some two thousand New Testaments have been given away, and thousands of tracts. Several have stated openly how very much they preferred our form of Christianity to their own; and one woman, when she said that she understood now that Christ was the only Lord to be obeyed, said what many have understood. May the Master's blessing rest on what has been done in his spirit and with his help.

THE NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

II.

FIFTH DAY.—SUNDAY, AUGUST 5.

Sunday, coming about midway in the Conference, and the fifth day of this feast of fat things, was replete with spiritual gifts. After 1200 had been literally packed into Stone Hall, at the morning meeting, an overflow meeting was held on Round Top, at which were several hundred more. Mr. Moody was never taxed so severely before to care for his friends who continued to flock in on every train. Every niche in the big seminary buildings was taken up, and the people were parcelled out among the farmers for miles around. The regular attendants were augmented by crowds coming in for the day from the surrounding country. This, again, is but another testimony to the evangelist's great power among men.

Before Mr. Moody came into the Sunday morning meeting, Mr. H. M. Moore, of Boston, called attention to the fact that the evangelist and his friends were building a new church in the village, and had asked for a thanksgiving offering for this enterprise. Hats were passed around, and in a few minutes over $2000 was taken up, a grateful mark of the appreciation in which these meetings are held.

There was the customary enthusiastic congregational singing, with a duet from Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, "I shall be satisfied." Then Rev. H. B. Hartzler, of Hallisburg, Pa., preached a sermon on "Faith." Following upon the same subject, Mr. Moody gave the reins to his imagination. Those who have heard him know what that means. His sketches of imaginary conversations between Bible characters are wonderful; he pictures so vividly the persons of whom he is talking that they sometimes appear actually to stand upon the platform. Referring to the life of Abraham, he said: "I am so thankful that almost all the Bible characters failed in some respects, though there is very little said against Daniel, Jeremiah, and John the Baptist. Notice that men in the Bible who have fallen, have fallen on the strongest point in their character." Alluding to the quarrel that arose between the herdsmen, and how Abraham settled it by giving Lot the choice, the speaker illustrated the narrative by the case of two farmers, who get into expensive litigation over a foot or so of land. He caused a general laugh by suddenly remarking, "I'm hitting someone; He knows who it is. What is the use of preaching unless you hit someone?" Many lessons were graphically drawn from the story of Lot. "He got what he desired, but with it he got leanness of soul. Let us rise up and walk by faith, not sight; let us get a higher type of Christianity. Why do men spend their time in getting money to leave to their children, and too often to make the road to hell easier? Be your own executors, and let your children earn their own living."

Another large audience gathered in the afternoon, to hear Rev. J. Hudson Taylor talk upon his work in China. Preliminary to this, he gave an exposition of Numbers vi. and vii., which, he said, show the necessity of consecration in order to becoming workers. The choir sang Mr. McGranahan's "Go ye into all the World," and Mr. Taylor then spoke on his Chinese work. Some persons, he said, have an idea that it is a very slow and difficult task to convert the Chinese. It is slow and difficult, because we have not faith enough in God, and are not full enough of the Holy Ghost. The measure of expectation on the part of the worker, based on the willingness of the Holy Ghost to convict, is the measure of the conversions. As to the language, which is easier than most Americans suppose, he said that in four-fifths of China a single dialect, the Mandarin, is spoken. Mr. Taylor went on to give statistics, to show how little, comparatively, is being done in China to-day. In May of this year, only 234 American missionaries were on the field; the Continental societies had 32 there, the British Societies 203, and the China Inland Mission 216. This last Society thus furnishes one-third of the 707 sent by all. Mr. Taylor is now on his way to China, to make arrangements to double the working force, as several gentlemen have offered the means since he has come to America. He closed his address with a half promise that he might soon return and give an account of his stewardship.

Evangelist C. H. Yatman, who has had special success among the young people at Ocean Grove, and who expects ultimately to preach the Gospel in Africa, gave a forcible address in the evening. His subject was based on the faith chapter of the Bible, Heb. xi. He talked of two kinds of Christians, whom he designated a "big-faith" kind and a "little-faith" kind. There are only half a dozen things in the world that are impossible to the man who really believes. You will see Mr. Bigfaith—how he goes into the field where church work is to be done, and he does not stop to see what can be done, but he throws his shoulders back, and, with the sickle in his hand plunges right in. You see Mr. Littlefaith; it takes all day for him to grind his sickle, and it is night before he is ready to begin. A graphic description was given of the visit of the spies to Canaan, Joshua and Caleb being called the big-faith men and the other ten the little-faith fellows. He remarked that lots of revivals were broken up by little faith counsels. "I'd rather have one good strong big-faith man than a whole bunch of little-faith officials." In closing he said, "You little-faith man or woman, here from some church whose pastor is trying to work for God, when he says he believes God's power will break stony hearts, don't go about saying you doubt as to a revival. If you cannot do anything else just close your lips. The Church of Jesus Christ has made a mistake; Ingersoll would have been dead long ago if the Church had only let him alone.

SIXTH DAY, AUGUST 6.

Mr. Moody opened the morning services with an expository treatise upon the Gospel of Matthew. He hinted at a possible development of future Conferences, by saying that he should like to meet the people together for about a month, that the whole Bible might be taken up and gone over consecutively. After showing how closely the Gospel of Matthew is identified with the Old Testament, he took up the five great sermons. None of the other evangelists gave such full accounts of Christ's words. The first discourse was the Sermon on the Mount (chaps. v.—vii.), Christ's inaugural address. If you are not quite sure of your own salvation, apply this sermon to yourself, and you will find out. No man under heaven can carry out these principles unless he is a born son of God. If we could get the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount into our churches, people would throng them. The second sermon was a charge to the twelve, and was given in chapter x. The things that Christ uttered in that sermon have been like silver put into coin that has gone to the ends of the earth. The third sermon, found in chapter xiii., was preached in a ship, near Capernaum, and was composed of seven parables. In speaking of illustrations, Mr. Moody said: "I pity the man who is afraid he is going to belittle the Gospel if he tells stories. I have no doubt but there were grumblers who found fault with Christ's preaching; but those parables have lived, and what a blessing they have been to the Church. The fourth sermon was preached in Jerusalem, and near the time of his death; the last sermon, discussed briefly, was preached on the Mount of Olives..

Other speakers touched briefly upon the same topic. Dr. Vail considered Matthew the pivotal book of the Bible; for in it are found, more than in any other book, the fulfilments of Old Testament prophecies. Dr. Taylor touched up Andover when he said: We have a great many new lights now, people teaching the new theology; not one of them can interpret the Book of Matthew. If any man who holds the new theology will master this Book, he will find himself back on the old theology. It begins with a Saviour coming to save these people from their sins, and it ends with a royal command to take the glorious Gospel to all nations. Christ did not come to enable a man to live a selfish life and then in the end cheat the devil of his due. Rev. Jacob Freshman, the converted Jew from New York, Rev. H. B. Hartzler, Mr. Hastings, and others, continued upon the same topic.

In the afternoon, Miss Vasilka Stefnova, of Yambole, Bulgaria, one of Mr. Moody's sudents, spoke at Marquand Hall. Mrs. A. S. Steele, who has an Orphanage Home at Chattanooga, Tenn., gave an account of her work, also at Marquand; while Mrs. Rebecca Collins, of New York City, spoke, at Weston Hall, of the Society of Friends, with which she is connected. During the afternoon Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke to a circle of friends at Marquand upon work on the European Continent.

At Stone Hall the afternoon was devoted to addresses by three missionaries, Rev. George Constantine, a native Greek, Rev. Marcus L. Taft, from China, and Miss Sparks, from India. These descriptions of work in their peculiar fields of labour were at once thrilling and pathetic, and tears rolled down the cheeks of those present while the exercises were going on. Mr. Constantine paid a remarkable testimony to the beneficial results of these Conferences, when he stated that while he had been preaching to the Greeks for over twenty years, his real work of reaching souls began after coming to Northfield eight years ago, when a discourse by Mr. Moody, on "The Enduement of the Holy Spirit," opened his eyes and his soul; since then he has seen fruits of his ministry.

Mr. Taft brought out some of the corroboratory evidences of Christianity which exist in China to-day, and spoke of the feverish anxiety of the people for the truth. Sho Nemoto, a Japanese student, who is to go back to his native land as an evangelical worker, next year, made a telling impression by his quaint pictures of life in Japan. He recounted the work Mr. Moody was doing in that country, and said he was "the mostest biggest Christian in this world." He gave various statistics to illustrate what is being done, and prophesied a great future for his country. Miss Sparks, from India, reached the hearts of all by her touching illustrations of the work in the Orphanage, of which she is manager in that country, having three hundred young girls under her charge. It had been a great comfort to her that, in answer to prayer, a girl had never left the Institution without being first converted. Their faith had frequently been severely tested, sometimes on a death-bed, but the good Lord had never failed! Her talk, carried on in a conversational tone, was made all the more interesting by the exhibition of little heathen gods, which she had collected in her travels.

At the close Mr. and Mrs. Towner sang "Nothing but the blood of Jesus," in the Hindostani language. Mr. Moody was so stirred up by the talk about Japan that he called for funds to send teachers to that country; several Christians with consecrated pocket-books promptly offered to pay the bills if Mr. Moody would pick out the men. He sent four last year.

In the evening Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, gave a stereopticon lecture on the explorations in Egypt, which have revealed facts corroboratory of Bible teachings. Mr. Hastings is well known for his able lectures against atheism and infidelity. The tour of exploration began with a view and description of the coliseum of Rome, and ended with the cylinder of Sennacherib and inscription of Nebuchadnezzar, with the prophecy of the destruction of Babylon and its fulfilment. The speaker closed with these words of admonition and cheer:—"I believe there are multitudes of men to-day drifting into infidelity, because they do not know the facts in the case, and we ought to enlighten them. I want you to look at these things; to root your faith in the Word of the everlasting God, and so be able to fight the battles and conquer the unbeliefs of the day."

SEVENTH DAY, AUGUST 7.

Mr. Moody said, at the opening session this morning, that afternoon meetings would be held now, and that the morning gatherings would be held earlier. The missionary spirit was increasing so much that more time would be given up to that. "The rock has been smitten," he said, "and the waters have begun to flow; we are now beginning to feel like going out to battle with the world. I want to take off my hat to these missionaries, who are doing so much for the world. I am just ready to sit and let them give it to me all they want to, because I am here instead of in the foreign work." His subject of Biblical exposition this morning was "Mark." In the course of his address, he said: "Just now it is more important that we know how to cast out devils than to see Christ glorified. The worst devil we have to cast out is the rum devil, and it has got to be done by prayer. I've heard of reform until I'm sick of it. You can have pledges and ribbon, but they cannot do it." After a graphic description of Christ's power to cast out devils, he added: "This is taking place all over the country, and where there is one such sinner saved there might be ten thousand, if we only had faith. I believe we have possession by devils now, just as they had in those days; and we want the same power. Christ's power over disease is illustrated from the case of the woman who touched the hem of his garment and was made whole. Some people cannot see the difference between the touch of faith and the touch of the crowd. There will be lots of people who will come here and look at the messengers, instead of the message, and wonder why they do not get something. By and by some poor soul will come desiring to get an outpouring of the Spirit, and he will get it." Speaking of the disciples falling asleep, he said: If the devil can get the consciences of church members sent to sleep, he can do anything with them. What do church quarrels mean? They always arise from members whose consciences have gone to sleep. By the bye, Peter followed afar off. Do you want to know whether you are following the Master afar off? Put your life alongside of the Master's, and if you can see no resemblance, how can you expect an unbelieving world to see any? And pretty soon you see Peter with Christ's enemies; then he begins to deny his Lord, and to curse and swear. Did you ever think how long it took the devil to get Peter away from Christ, and how soon the Lord got him back? If any of you have backslidden, may the Lord give you one look to-day that shall bring you back. It is said that a minister in London preached every Sabbath for twenty-five years on Mark; cannot you and I give twenty-five days to studying Mark?

A number of speakers followed with brief remarks upon the same subject.

In the evening Mr. Hastings continued his pictorial lectures before another large audience. Nor does this tell the full story of the day, for all about the hillsides, and in the dales, were knots of Christians praying for the fire from heaven. A number of overflow gatherings were held in different buildings through the day and evening.

A HOUSE OF REST FOR YOUNG WOMEN was opened at 52, London-road, Sevenoaks, on August 7. The air of Sevenoaks is very dry and bracing, and the neighbourhood abounds in beautiful walks and drives. Particulars may be had from Miss Meredith, hon. secretary Y.W.C.A.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

Dear Sir,—Kindly grant me space for a brief account of our movements while on the other side of the Atlantic; but before doing so allow me to intimate to your numerous readers now travelling in Scotland that we intend to hold our Biennial Thanksgiving Service on Tuesday, September 11. New buildings will be dedicated, and praise offered for the goodness and mercy that have followed us in our work for the Master during the past two years. "The National Orphan Homes of Scotland" are of easy access from Glasgow, being 12½ miles distant on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway. Trains run every hour. The service commences at 1 p.m., but inspection of Homes and other buildings may be made any time during the day.

We sent out a party of 120 boys in March last, and on May 17 we accompanied the same number of girls. We reached Brockville, where our new Distributing Home is situated, on May 31. Larger accommodation for our increasing Scotch work became an absolute necessity, and last year we purchased "Fairknowe," a beautiful estate in Brockville, situated on the banks of the St. Lawrence. It consists of a large mansion and sixteen acres in lawn, garden, orchard, and meadow. Our friends will rejoice to know that the £2500 needed for this by the end of May, came to hand a few days before we had arranged to pay it.

The citizens of Brockville gave us a hearty welcome, and in many ways have shown their warm interest in our work. After some time spent in distributing our large family, we began visiting the children of former years in their homes, and were highly gratified with the results. We saw over 300 of these all doing well, and thanked God, as we went from one to another, for this outlet for the orphan children of our overcrowded native land. Three hundred seems a small proportion of our 2500 children now in Canada, but the distances in many cases were great, and, having only a limited time at our disposal, we were hindered from doing all we could have wished. Considering this a very essential part of our work, however, we have left an efficient and experienced staff of visitors under the superintendence of my daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Burgess, who are in charge of the work at Fairknowe.

I should like to give the result of one day's visiting within twenty miles of Brockville:—

June 12.—Visited M. A. with D. H. M. Mary at school. Mrs. M. had come to Fairknowe for a little girl the week before, and had made her choice a matter of prayer, she was sure it was answered, for Mary reminded her so much of her own little one who went home two years before. On our way back we called to see Mary at school, and saw her a picture of tidiness.

W. McG. with Mr. H. Walter was hitching up the horse when we arrived. His master and he were going for timber. The only fault to Walter was his size. "He is so small for his age." Will make a farmer, his master said.

Maria H. has been six years in her home, and is now twenty. This worthy couple have no family, and have promised a daughter's portion to Maria when she seeks a home of her own.

W. D. has been eleven years with Mr. Frew, a Scotch farmer. He is an exemplary young man of twenty-two; is secretary of the Sunday-school, and a great comfort to his foster parents.

C. McG., same home. She came a little girl of nine, and is now seventeen, a good-looking modest girl, and her mother's right hand.

M. O., same home. Mary is a forward child, but firmness and kindness conquer her, Mrs. F. says, and they manage to get on pretty smoothly.

James Blackwood, also with Mr. and Mrs. F., sent out this year, although only three months with them he seemed the little man about the farm.

The question is often asked, What do the Canadians want with so many children? Well! here is a Scotch farmer and his wife with no children of their own, on whose hearts God has laid the work of caring for four of his little ones. It did us good to see this family circle, and we thanked God on our knees for their fellowship with us in the work of helping the needy.

J. D. (with Mr. P.) was busy sawing wood with his master when we arrived.

Mr. P. is a bright young farmer, and says John is just the boy for Canada, for he is not afraid of work.

A. D., sister, in same home, minds baby, and is "doing splendid."

K. O. with J. S., a fine hearty-looking lassie, "a bit thoughtless at times, but real helpful and kind."

E. I., six, had had measles, but was recovering; kind widow lady.

H. L., J. G., and W. L. are three children in another excellent home in this district, but did not come into this day's visiting. The eldest has been five years, the second three years, and they thought they would like a brother, so their father and mother indulged them, and got little Willy from Fairknowe this year. These devoted people are giving the children an excellent education, and are very proud of their family.

This is a very fair specimen of our seven weeks' work amongst the homes of our children, but I cannot forbear adding to these a few cases of lads in other districts, who have been out quite a number of years and who are seeking to fit themselves for a profession.

J. T. has been nine years in Canada. About two years ago his parents sent him to a hardware store, and he has got on very well, going home on Saturday, but he is seeking guidance about missionary work. He came to Brockville to consult with us. We advised him as we thought best, and feel sure he will be guided aright. His foster-parents have put his name in their will to a considerable amount.

W. R., after farming some time expressed a wish to be a teacher. The good farmer sent him to school, and is content with the few "chores" he can do morning and night.

W. McK., a fine Christian lad, is printer in The Napanee Express, and is engaged in various schemes connected with church work.

J. G. came to a meeting we addressed in Toronto. He is still farming, but went to school last winter, wishing to become a missionary. His deficient education will make it up-hill work, and we advised him to consider the matter well before unsettling his present arrangements. We were much gratified with his earnestness in the two interviews we had with him.

We met many more trophies of our earlier work which we might relate. In our last tour an interesting case was that of one of our girls who married four years ago, and has two of our children, who, with one of her own, has made a charming little group. Her husband has 200 acres. We wished from the bottom of our hearts that their land might yield its increase, and that a blessing might come to them through the children they had taken to train for Christ.

Along with these encouraging details and this year's experience of the demand for children in Canada, comes the need of more accommodation at Bridge of Weir; but our heavenly Father knoweth what we have need of, and as He provides day by day for our increasing family, He will not withhold anything necessary for the advancement of his own work. £10 pays the passage and outfit of one child to Canada. £12 pays the maintenance of a child in the Homes for a year. £1500 will build a cottage to hold thirty children.

We have at present 700 children under our care, and we feel assured money cannot be better expended than in providing for the orphan and fatherless of our land. During our twenty-four year's experience, we can say, "Not one good thing hath failed us," and we would go on with renewed confidence, feeling assured that He will put it into the hearts of his stewards to rescue the perishing around us.

I am, &c., Wm. Quarrier.

13, James Morrison-street, Glasgow.

MILDMAY CONSUMPTIVE HOME, TORQUAY.—Having found the house in Warberry-road West too small and somewhat inconvenient, the Committee have decided to take a new villa on the Bronshill-road, where, if funds towards furnishing are contributed, they will be able to receive twelve patients. The Home is for advanced cases, such as are ineligible for other institutions. Donations and subscriptions are received by the honorary secretary, Miss F. Gumbleton, Smyrna, Torquay, who will also answer any inquiries respecting the work.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Joshua C. Harrison, of Camden Town Congregational Church.

We are requested to say that if the writer of an anonymous letter, received by the head of a city house of business on August 30, will send her name and address, she will be given an opportunity of satisfying herself that the statements she has listened to are unfounded.

We would direct attention to the paper on a preceding page entitled, "The Bible and Young Men," written by Mr. J. H. Tritton, and read at the recent Stockholm Conference. We are sure our readers will agree with a contemporary in the view that the article is an extremely valuable one, and ought to be widely circulated.

Dr. Barnardo continues his noble work of transplanting the neglected children of our great city to the sunny land across the sea, where they find happy homes, and foster-parents willing to care for and train them in ways of honest industry. As will be seen from a statement elsewhere, the party of girls that are to sail on the 20th inst. will make up a splendid total of over 500 emigrated this year. Meantime the home work expands, and there is need of corresponding support from a sympathising public.

In the same important branch of Christian effort is the growing work of Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes of Scotland, about which that devoted labourer writes in our present issue.

The habit of curtailing the length of sermons would appear to be generally on the increase, and public attention may well be called to the fact. As a writer in The Daily News remarks, the length of the Sabbath discourse is too often the chief point from which the majority of its hearers regard it. "When they ask 'What sort of a preacher is Mr. A.?' they mean 'For what length of time does he preach?' They consider a sermon lasting three-quarters of an hour 'very bad,' half an hour 'badish,' twenty minutes 'good,' and a quarter of an hour 'capital.'" Such people evidently go to church in much the same spirit as they would go to an opera or a play, in order to hear the music, to see their friends, and to be seen by them. The service of God by prayer and praise, the exposition of his Word, and the Gospel message of free salvation for sinners, are to them secondary considerations. Some Ritualistic innovator will doubtless soon pander to this tendency, and abolish the sermon in his service altogether.

We consider that the preaching of the Gospel, or the exposition of the Scripture, to be among the most important and urgent of a minister's vocations. A discourse should not, of course, be so long as to weary the audience; but if the preacher has his heart in his work, and realises that the salvation of his hearers is at stake, he will never be wearisome, save perchance to those who have hardened their hearts, and turned away their ears from the call to conversion.

A writer in a contemporary remarks that if barristers, and playwrights, and politicians can obtain attentive audiences for hours at a stretch, and preachers are only grudgingly tolerated for a minimum of minutes, it is because the former "deal with living issues, whereas parsons often have nothing to say that could interest any man who has had the misfortune to be born later than 50 or 60 A.D." We are free to admit that there is much of our preaching to-day so abstract in its character that "living issues" are barely touched. But a hearer must be very unfortunate if he does not meet with plenty preaching of the other sort. There is no theme under the sun so practical in its essence, and in its proper application, as the Gospel of Jesus Christ. In proportion as it is fully and faithfully unfolded will preachers have attentive congregations whether the sermons be short or long.

In face of the lavish waste, and of the accumulation of money which is going on around us, it is painful to find that, according to the latest return issued by the Statistical Department of the Board of Trade, there are now in London alone 91,163 paupers, exclusive of lunatics and vagrants, as compared with 87,874 in the corresponding week of 1887. In two years and six months the Metropolitan army of paupers has been increased by no less than 7000. It may well be asked: Where and how is this to end?

A correspondent who resides in a seaside resort, writes, regretting that Christian visitors seem, in many cases, to give their principles a holiday while they are themselves pleasure-seeking. He complains that visitors often require as much attendance on Sundays as on other days of the week. He urges the importance of Christian visitors to the seaside spending their Sundays in a manner more in keeping with their professions, and also calls upon them to make a little sacrifice, so that those who let apartments may enjoy some release from labour on the Day of Rest.

A Christian officer in South Africa writes to us of the rapid spread of Ritualistic forms and teaching among the simple-minded natives, and asks whether anything can be done to arrest or counteract such departures from the faith of the Gospel. We know of no cure or preventive, except the increase of those who will proclaim the message of salvation in its primitive simplicity. The experience of such movements in our own country seems to show that no other kind of weapon is likely to be effective.

The philanthropy and self-denying service of Christian women in our day are without a parallel in the history of Christianity. Among these works mention ought to be made of the "Women's National Indian Association" of America. A pamphlet of eighty pages, entitled, "Ten Years' Work for Indians at Hampton Institute, Virginia," gives proof of a most valuable effort on behalf of the Red Indians, who, having been brought into contact with the white man, must either be rescued or sink into wasting disease and ruin. The Hampton Institute educates, teaches trades, farming, gardening, prepares girls for domestic life, and instructs in Christianity. It has received about 500 students from different tribes, most of whom have gone back into their own prairies to establish little farmsteads, and to give example of a Christian civilisation. In addition, the Institute has received in ten years 927 young negroes; and of these 260 have become, as graduates, teachers of their people. It is not easy to estimate the full outcome of such a noble work by American women.

Mr. Sankey has been detained in America by the severe illness of a relative. He expects to arrive in October, and to spend some two or three months in Great Britain.

The endeavours made from time to time in providing suitable accommodation for hop-pickers at this season have been referred to in our columns, and in the home counties excellent reforms have been achieved. With a few honourable exceptions Worcestershire and Herefordshire seem to be disgracefully behind in this matter. The editor of The Birmingham Daily Post endorses the statements of a correspondent that in these midland counties the workers in the hop-fields are left to sleep under hedge-rows, or are, like cattle, crowded together in barns, and exposed to every hardship of wind and weather. As the result, not to speak of disease and suffering, "drunkenness and horrible debauchery" are common. The correspondent very properly adds:—

> In the Ages of Faith it would have been thought that such a treatment of the ingatherers would have sufficed to explain many a failure in the crop. Has all England yet admitted that the Lord God, strong and righteous, is no longer ruler of heaven and earth?

Among the conferences and congresses to be held this month, two, which are unobtrusive, promise good results. Baptist ministers are to meet in London during two or three days for exclusively devotional purposes, and the professors and students of a Congregational college meet in the same way, and for the same objects. Nothing can be more desirable. Young ministers in both of these denominations possess scholarship, industry, habits of reading, and a general desire to be efficient preachers. But somehow the people complain that their sermons are not spiritually useful, and that the preachers seem like men acquainted with theological books, but not students of the Bible itself. A race of young preachers in full sympathy with Christ, and free channels for the Spirit's messages to men, might be instruments of a new reformation in England.

The protracted correspondence that has been carried on in The Daily Telegraph concerning "Marriage" gives a painful impression of certain modern views respecting the province of woman. It may be useful therefore to condense a page of the last book of Sir William Dawson, "Modern Science and Bible Lands." The law of marriage in Gen. ii. 24 is that the husband goes with the wife; she is the bond of the household. This is the Edenic position of primitive woman. When the Pharisees, who held a degraded thought of women, came to Christ, and asked whether the wife might be dismissed for any caprice, the Lord took them back to Genesis and Eden. The subjection of woman in the marriage relation had been in violation of her original dignity as the true husband and centre of the family. Is not the fact that the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" can be seriously (?) discussed day after day in a newspaper which claims "the largest circulation in the world," a premonition of family and therefore of national decline?

The Swedenborgians have been holding, at Accrington, their eighty-first Conference. The followers of Swedenborg seem to be decreasing in numbers, the members in Great Britain amounting, it is stated, to only about five thousand. The element of mysticism which pervades so much of the Swedenborgian teaching may appeal to the intellectual, but it cannot have any powerful attraction to the ordinary mind looking for pardon and peace rather than philosophy.

In reference to the proposal that the churches should be left open on week days for private prayer, a correspondent of a contemporary who is in favour of the suggestion being carried out, writes :—

> There can be no doubt that the practice of opening our churches for private prayer, now commended by authority, will foster the devotional instincts of our people, and thus prepare the way for the perpetual reservation of the Blessed Sacrament within the tabernacle, to be in readiness for the sick and dying, according to the requirements both of Canon and Ecclesiastical law.

This is putting the question in a new light, one which, we trust, will not commend itself to any thoughtful mind.

A recent investigation which has been made by a Congressional Committee in America has revealed the unpleasant fact that there are in the States upwards of one million people out of work, and there, as in England, the question of the immigration and employment of foreigners is rapidly becoming of vital interest. Evidence was given that many of the foreign labourers are of the most degraded class, and that they would herd together in filthy hovels, and live upon refuse food. One influential witness stated that some of the gangs consisted of workpeople, who "were not known by their names, but were designated by numbers, engraved upon brass discs," and that "many of these wretched beings worked twelve hours a day for fivepence." Surely this is worse than anything that London slums can show.

India's need of the Gospel becomes more evident as her political life and power are asserted. In an important article in the current issue of The Contemporary Review, Sir William Hunter powerfully sets forth the social awakening which is now progressing in the peninsula Empire. Altogether independent of English policy, the people are aspiring to self-government, and Sir William, who well knows whereof he writes, is of opinion that encouragement should be given to these aspirations. For three years a National Congress has been held, representing all classes of the community, from the Mohammedan princely houses and the Hindu rajahs, down to the petty tradesman, the artisan, and the peasant; and the wishes of all sorts and conditions of the people have found vigorous expression. It is now proposed to establish an Indian political agency in London on the model of the various colonial agencies which have already become recognised institutions in the Metropolis. Oh, that India could have Divine light, as well as national life! Prayer should be offered to God at the present time, that He will vouchsafe to those in authority, wisdom that the phenomenal social activity which is now being developed may be directed into proper channels. It is, moreover, increasingly important that Christian light should shine brightly in India.

In a somewhat cursory article in The Times on India the writer says :—

> There are many questions of the deepest interest connected with India; but the passing traveller can only name them, and ask for an answer from those who have given the best years of their life to the country: (1) Are Christian missions making real progress in India? Which system of conducting them is most congenial to the Mohammedan? which to the Hindoo? (2) Is domestic slavery, in any veiled form, still practised in native States? In other words, are children or women still bought and sold, under any pretext, in a continent for which England is responsible?

We scarcely know who the writer expects to answer the questions, but it seems a pity that he did not communicate when in the country with some of the older missionaries on such important subjects.

Mr. Burnett's report to the Board of Trade on the sweating system in Leeds has been printed, and some of the facts which it contains are of deep interest. For instance, he states, that the Jewish population numbers between six and seven thousand, and that the influx of immigrants is continuous. House accommodation and food being cheaper than in London, the Jewish slop workers are better off than their brethren in the East of the Metropolis, although in many cases their wages are lower. Still the condition of things is far from satisfactory, and it is to be hoped that coming legislation may do much to remove the evils which seem common to the sweating system in whatever locality it may be established.

A correspondent, writing with reference to the preaching of infidelity in the London parks, states as the result of his experience in one of the parks, that crowds gather around the sceptical orators and cheer their words, while the Gospel meetings are thinly attended by languid hearers. Now, it seems to us that the way to reverse this state of things is to imitate the tactics of the enemy, and secure the best possible speakers for the Gospel meetings. We cannot admit that the message of God's love in Christ, presented by capable speakers, in its most winning aspects, has failed to attract and reach the popular heart. We wish it were possible for many of our ablest Christian advocates to vacate their pulpits in the summer time, and erect their rostrums, "beneath the blue sky," in places where the people most do congregate.

The Y.M.C.A. movement has been a blessing to the world, specially to young men in our great cities, such as cannot possibly be measured or reckoned up in words. At the same time, it has not fully come up to its favourite designation of "a home away from home." It is good to cater for the spare evening hours of our city youth, but when the Association closes its doors at ten o'clock its clients emerge from its precincts to find that the allurements of the billiard saloon or the perils of the streets stand between them and their lonely lodging. What wonder if even the memories of home or the friendly counsels of the secretary do not always keep the young man from falling a prey to the destroyer?

Could not the Associations generally make some greater effort to meet this need, in cases where its pressure is felt? We are glad to learn that one of the London branches, at any rate, is successfully grappling with it. The Southwark Association, under the sympathetic leadership of Mr. Assiter, the secretary, is proving a true "home away from home" to many a friendless and inexperienced country youth on his arrival in the Metropolis. During the past two years a hundred and fifty young men from many parts of the world have been received and housed under its roof. Under Mr. Assiter's care the branch has made great advances in many directions. We notice that he has had the courage to secure the Metropolitan Tabernacle for his forthcoming annual meeting, when the presence of Mr. Spurgeon, Canon Wilberforce and others, will be sure to draw a great audience to hear their advocacy of the claims of the Association.

SUDDENLY CALLED HOME.

THE North African Mission has sustained a severe loss by the unexpected death of our beloved fellow-labourer, Miss Caley. She had come home for a brief visit to see her friends, and expected to return to be married to Dr. Churcher in a few weeks. She seems to have felt the change from the warmth of Morocco to the damp and coldness of England, so that, though she came apparently in good health, congestion of the liver came on, and yesterday morning she passed away to the presence of the Lord.

She was one of the most valued of all the workers of our Mission, and was greatly beloved both by her fellow-labourers and by the people amongst whom she worked. We commend to the prayerful sympathies of your readers the bereaved mother, and also Dr. Churcher. It seems to us strange that God should have called home one of our strongest and most useful workers, but we know that He doeth all things well. Who will step forward to fill the vacant post? Who will be baptized for the dead, and go forth to tell the Moslems of North Africa of salvation through Jesus Christ?

EDWARD H. GLENNY, Hon. Sec.

21, Linton-road, Barking, September 3.

[With much sorrow we record this painful intelligence. We made Miss Caley's acquaintance and friendship two years ago at Tangier, and sympathise deeply with her mother and Dr. Churcher and the North African Mission. —ED.]

BRUSSELS EXHIBITION. — DEAR SIR, — Pastor de Jonge writes to me that the tent work at Brussels Exhibition is going on extremely well. Every day the tent is filled, and for the last three weeks the children of the neighbourhood have been gathered, in order to teach them to understand and learn the hymns. The tent, unfortunately, has received serious injury from a recent storm of wind, and as Pastor de Jonge has already spent a good deal more than he has received towards the expenses of this effort, he seems likely to be obliged to bring it to an untimely close, unless those who are the Lord's stewards come promptly to his assistance. The Pastor's address is 38, Rue de Berlaimont, Brussels.—Yours very truly,

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, S.W.—Miss Proctor of the Mission School, Schierfat, Beyrout, Syria, writes :—I, for one, can bear my thankful testimony to the value of the training I received at the Zenana Medical College, the only place where I could have obtained it in the time I had to spare. When working out here before, I saw many suffering, and knew not what to do for them. Now, with the blessing of God on the knowledge obtained at the college, I have been enabled to relieve many. Here, where there is no resident medical man, they are thankful to come to my dispensary, which is open twice a week; 375 patients have been prescribed for since the beginning of the year. My anatomy class are continuing their studies, and received much praise for their answers this examination. I long to know if your Committee will be able to admit two of them as free students at the college.

Y.M.C.A. WORLD'S CONFERENCE.

Stockholm, Aug. 15—20, 1888.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16.

Count Bernstorff, who had won golden opinions as President of the Berlin Conference in 1884, took the chair and maintained his reputation, not only ruling with courtesy and skill, but interpreting the proceedings in French, and German, and English.

Morning prayer was conducted by the Rev. Edward Osterman, president of the Y.M.C.A., Gothenburg. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, was then called upon to read the paper prepared by Mr. J. H. Tritton, of London, entitled: "What the Bible says to the Young Men of our day." This is printed at length on another page. Rev. Mr. Roos, of Berne, followed on the same subject.

Count Bernstorff opened the discussion, by also reading a paper on "What means ought to be employed for the spiritual development of active members, and for the conversion of young men in general?" The question rightly sets forth the double object of the Y.M.C.A., which it is well clearly and openly to recognise. The object is high and difficult, yet it must remain our aim. External advantages, such as comfortable rooms, library, classes, and lectures, are calculated to render the Association attractive; so that young men coming will like to remain, and will learn to feel at home in the Christian atmosphere of the place.

It is the Word of God on which we must rely, both for awakening and sustaining spiritual life. Personal testimony is helpful. Many are converted by being brought into contact with faithful Christians. In illustration of this, the Count said: "I shall myself never forget how I received the first impulse by meeting a sanctified Christian, in whose house I happened to be on a visit. His family prayers gave me the impression of the warmth of true Christianity. This seized me mightily. Afterwards there came other things which the Lord made to co-operate, but this was the beginning." In the same way living Christianity meets young men in the Associations. In this age, when the greatest desire exists for society and fellowship, these should be provided under circumstances most helpful to spiritual life.

Bible-classes are of the greatest importance. It is desirable that they should not be too large, so that the young men present may feel able to take part without constraint. There ought also to be much prayer in and for the Association. Here, again, in a small circle, the lips of the young men will be unsealed. If the prayers are not in the right form, it does not matter, if they come from the heart. Each soul also requires individual attention. This is the great duty of the Secretary; but not his alone, he should have efficient helpers.

The mouths of the young men must be opened. Even the Associations of Social Democracy teach their members to speak publicly; how much more should the Y.M.C.A. Outside aggressive work should, therefore, be encouraged, such as Sunday-school work, which also necessitates accurate Bible study. By this thorough preparation of one subject weekly, young men begin to feel at home in the Bible. He that works must eat.

Mr. D. Daamen (Amsterdam), President of the Y.M.C.A. National Council of Holland, urged, as the chief means, to preach the Gospel to young men, first, by one's own life, and, secondly, by manifesting love to one another. In the course of a brisk conversation which followed,

Herr F. von Schluembach remarked that many young men are scared by the Bible. Point out the gracious passages to them, and let them read it without scare. Though they will find in its pages a good whipping for their folly and their sins, they will also find life and comfort. There is wild confusion in the world because of the estrangement of men from the Bible.

Mr. W. H. Mills (London) said that in the present day confidence was lost through the conflict of many teachers. It is essential that confidence in the Word of God should remain. Young men should be encouraged to read it for themselves. He urged the vital importance of vigorously maintaining the Bible-class in the Associations.

Mr. L. D. Wishard (New York) contended that the Bible contains an answer to every objection young men can make to its teachings. We should seek to know their real difficulties. Abraham Lincoln was a most successful pleader at the bar because he always stated his opponent's case as fully as he himself could urge it, and then proceeded to demolish it, leaving the opposing counsel no fresh ground to occupy. The Holy Spirit is the Advocate of Jesus Christ; the only one He ever needs. He knows all the case.

In the course of further remarks, the importance was urged of promptly challenging men on the question of their personal salvation. If ever there was an occasion on which it might have been expedient to delay, it surely was in preaching the Gospel to the murderers of the Lord Jesus Christ. On the day of Pentecost, Peter addressed himself to them directly. Men, in their natural hearts, think religion is a dreary thing. It is sin which is dreary.

Hon. J. V. Farwell (Chicago) said: There was one subject referred to by Count Bernstorff which lies at the foundation of the Association. Each member should be "a minute man" for work. [This referred to men so-called in the American Civil War, who held themselves ready for any service at a minute's notice.] A great many men feel that it is enough if they are enrolled on the church book. I fear it is the same with some of our Associations. The great thing is to lead each young man to do something for Christ. When soldiers are enlisted they at once begin to learn their drill. Our blessed Master chose young men untrained. When they were filled with the Holy Ghost they were ready for work. When a young man has received the Holy Ghost he will be ready for work, and there will be something he can do.

The discussion was continued in the afternoon, when it received an impetus by the reading of a paper by Mr. James Auld (Greenock), member of the National Council of Scotland, on the mutual duties of Y.M.C.A. members." Mr. Buscarlet, of Paris, also spoke on the same subject.

After dinner, a public meeting was held, when addresses were given, in English by Hon. J. V. Farwell and Rev. Edward Hoskyns (Rector of Stepney, London); in French, by Professor Edward Barde, Geneva; and in Danish, by Rev. Vilh. Beck, of Orslev. Evening prayers followed, conducted by Rev. C. J. Bring, Court chaplain; after which a paper, entitled, "The different means employed by the Association for the physical development of young men," written by Mr. Luther Gulick, Gymnastic Instructor at the Springfield Training College, U.S.A., was read by Mr. J. F. Robinson, of Pittsburg. The writer treated the subject from an American point of view, followed by Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who spoke of the Athelic Clubs in the London Associations, and described the work of the Exeter Hall Gymnasium. Dr. Sellden, of Norberg, Sweden, spoke of the value of gymnastic exercises from a medical standpoint. Professor Hjelt, of Helsingfors, also gave the result of his experience.

Mr. Gulick's paper first dealt with the remarkable growth of the physical department in the American Associations. In 1884, eighty-three Associations gave attention to this matter; in 1888, 287. In 1884, there were sixty-eight gymnasiums, now there are 237. The quality of the work is also greatly improved. The learning of gymnastic feats is now entirely subordinated to the art of building up the body and making it strong. As this has become known the number of pupils has largely increased, for the young men who desire to excel as athletes are comparatively few, and they are not, as a rule, the more intelligent class. Gymnastic instructors have been sought, who are not only scientifically trained, but whose supreme aim is a spiritual one. This is specially the object of those responsible for the Springfield Training School for Y.M.C.A. secretaries. The American Associations are in accord with their English brethren, in providing recreation grounds, and in establishing athletic clubs for their members.

Mr. W. M. Oatts (Glasgow) spoke of a recent visit he paid to America, and to Springfield College in particular. Originally he was disinclined to show any favour to the athletic side of Y.M.C.A. work; but since he had clearly seen how admirably it was made to subserve the ultimate object of the Association, it had won his warm approval and support.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 17, was necessarily a lighter day than its two heavily laden predecessors. Morning prayer was conducted by Rev. L. Häggström (Norrköping).

Mr. George Williams presided, and in opening the meeting spoke a few cheery words from the text, "My grace is sufficient for thee." A paper was then read by the Rev. Dr. Lovegren (Public School, Upsala), on "What means ought the Young Men's Christian Associations to use for the moral development of their members?" Immorality in our day is not only spreading, but is earnestly defended. By immorality is meant the condition in which a man is governed by his lower nature. The way from immorality to morality is not a short one. Though the transition from a natural to a spiritual man may be said to be the work of a moment, yet its comprehensive consequences demand a laborious and persevering work. There are three principal forms of immorality—avarice, pride, and sensuality; the first is the most difficult to remedy. Pride is cured by the friction of companionship. Sensuality includes eating, drinking, clothing, and other habits of life, as well as licentious excesses. Chastity thrives best in the shelter of family life. For young men who have no family life, Mr. Lovegren had a practical suggestion—viz., the arrangement of Christian family evenings, in which small circles of young men and women in godliness and modesty should spend some hours in pleasant intercourse under the roof of experienced Christian friends. True piety is the source of the purest morality. Therefore, by adhering to the one main object of the Association will true morality best be promoted.

Mr. C. Bangert, secretary of the Copenhagen Y.M.C.A., followed with some interesting testimony. Then another speaker from Denmark begged total abstainers to respect the liberty of those who differed from them, while they, on their part, would respect the principles on which the action of abstainers was based. Mr. Williams, in closing the session, mentioned that many urgent points had been left untouched, notably the tremendous evil of gambling.

A brief opportunity was found at this stage for a statement concerning national work by Mr. R. C. Morse, of New York. One of the gauges by which the extension of the work may be tested is the number of young men who have devoted their lives to the work of general secretaries. The roll has doubled since 1884. There is a great demand for their services; small cities are now making application for them. In the Training School at Springfield there are now students from nine different nations.

The Chairman then called on Mr. R. R. McBurney to present the report of the subcommittee on the Report of the Central International Committee. The brief written report was read, and was about to be put to the vote, when it was apparent that there was a division of opinion on certain points in the report. It was, therefore, decided to adjourn its further consideration until the following evening, and its recommendations were ordered to be printed meanwhile.

The delegates adjourned, in order that they might take part in a delightful steamboat excursion to Warholm and Skurusund. Three of the finest passenger steamers had been retained, and were well filled. It proved a most refreshing experience after the prolonged sittings of the Conference. An excellent male-voiced choir, composed of Upsala students, past and present, accompanied the party, and throughout the afternoon and evening gave exquisite pleasure by the sweetness and finish of their Swedish songs. Dinner was served on board the steamers as they laid to off Geijershill. A few miles further on tea was provided in the grounds of Captain Ahlberg's mansion at Skuru. Testimony and worship were enjoyed in the open air. Greatly to the surprise and delight of the delegates, they found, on returning to the steamers, the whole of the little village, on the banks of the lake, beautifully illuminated by variegated lamps and coloured fires, fireworks, &c. The whole excursion testified clearly to the care and loving kindness with which it had been planned, and the perfect satisfaction it gave to all the guests was the heartiest way in which their appreciation could be expressed.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, was again a full and busy day. Professor E. Barde, D.D. (Geneva) presided. Morning prayer was conducted by Rev. Dr. Carl Martin, Professor at Upsala. At ten o'clock Mr. R. C. Morse rose to read a well-prepared paper on the creation and organisation of Y.M.C.A.'s. It mainly went to show the progress of Association work in America, during the last four years. In 1884 there were 868 Associations with 108,000 members; now 1240 with 175,000 members. The increase is partly due to the attractive buildings, of which in 1884 there were 80, now there are 132. Four years ago there were 254 general secretaries, now 466. In 1884 there were 308 weekly Bible-classes, now there are 398; then the Bible training-classes numbered 15, now there are 367. Then 432 prayer-meetings, now 661. Then 834 young men's religious services, now 2084. Springfield College was opened in 1885 with 11 students, there are now 49.

The Association has adapted itself to the requirements of many different classes of young men, including mercantile clerks, students, railwaymen and artisans, German and foreigners generally, indigent and coloured young men. While having achieved so much the Executive realise that their work has but commenced, and they are making earnest efforts to extend and consolidate the Associations throughout their country.

Before calling on the next speaker, the Chairman, a Professor of Divinity, in Geneva, desired to thank the American Associations very heartily for their successful endeavours to evangelise students.

Rev. H. F. Poulsen, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. National Council of Denmark, said that the essentials for the formation of a Y.M.C.A. are a living church, a living faith in the young men of the church, who love and gather round the Word of God. He emphasised the importance of confining the work to young men; and urged the inclusion of all classes of the community, rich and poor, in one organisation.

Mr. David Walker, of Sydney, gave a most encouraging report of the Associations in Australia. They now have fifteen active Y.M.C.A.'s, ten general secretaries, 7250 members, and seven buildings, valued at £102,000; with five other Associations in formation. He closed with some interesting incidents illustrating the nature of the work in the colonies.

Mr. Robert Burn (London) expressed the interest which all had felt in Mr. Morse's paper. He thought they should learn from it: (1) To bring the Association more and more to bear wisely upon all classes of young men; (2) in forming new Associations to take time to do it thoroughly, and in the very best method, seeking to weld in one common interest the earnest Christian young men and the wealthy Christian residents; (3) that each country should emulate the American brethren, and start a secretarial training college, small or large, of their own; and (lastly) the statistics given showed a great disparity between the number of Associations and the number of Bible-classes. He thought it behoved the Associations in every country to see if this arose from any defective methods in the formation of new Associations; and if so, that care should be exercised to form Associations in future only where a nucleus of young men had already gathered round the Word of God.

Mr. Morse pointed out an item in the statistics which, in some measure, qualified the criticism as to the disproportion of Bible-classes and Associations; he earnestly denied that Mr. Burn's inference applied to the formation of American Associations in the past. The American Associations are very strong in the number of young men's Gospel meetings which they hold.

Mr. Claus Olandt (New York) spoke of other agencies in the United States, which, in part, supplied any lack there might at present be in this department in some of the Associations.

Dr. Gladstone urged (1) the importance of following separate classes of the community by means of Association organisation; and (2) the excellent medium the Association formed for promoting a good understanding amongst the different nations of the earth, by means of the young men who migrated from one country to another, and who, through the introduction of well-organised Y.M.C.A.'s, were assured of a hearty welcome, and a kind reception.

Mr. R. Henderson Smith (Edinburgh) could not understand an Association without a Bible-class. He gave some interesting statistics about Association work in Scotland.

The topic proved an interesting one, calling forth weighty utterances from Hon. J. V. Farwell, Baron Rothkirch (Berlin), Mr. W. Hind Smith (London), L. D. Wishard (New York), Mr. Karl Fries (Stockholm), Pastor Klug (Elberfeld), and Mr. Bowdler Wilson (London).

On Saturday afternoon an opportunity was found for a paper by Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, on the White Cross Union. He spoke of the general distaste for this subject, in which he once shared, and with which he still sympathised; of the formation of the Society by Miss Hopkins; and the warm support of the Bishop of Durham. Many Associations had heartily joined in the work, and had received great blessing. Every Y.M.C.A. should embrace in its work active opposition to all forms of sin that entice and ruin young men. The sin aimed at (impurity) is keeping young men from Christ. When it is generally known that any Christian worker is prepared to advise young men on this subject, he will obtain many golden opportunities of presenting the Gospel, especially amongst lads. In conclusion, Mr. Oatts advocated the use of the purity pledge of the White Cross Union.

Rev. G. Tophel traced impurity to unbelief. He thought the Associations might help by the circulation of wise publications, by occasional medical talks, and by wise advertisements. Rev. Dr. Boyd (Glasgow) testified to the great value of Mr. Oatts' work in this connection in Glasgow. A resolution on this topic was proposed by Rev. E. Hoskyns, but time failed for its discussion, and it dropped through.

Evening prayer was conducted by Rev. K. J. Montelius, Stockholm. The German, American, and English delegates (or a portion of them) then assembled to consider the report of the sub-committee on the Report of the Central International Committee, Geneva. The report of the sub-committee reminded one of the address to the Throne, in the English Parliament, in reply to the Queen's speech, inasmuch as many of its paragraphs were echoes of those in the original report. One of these called forth strong animadversion, namely, the appointment of Mr. L. D. Wishard to an official position, as secretary of the Central International Committee for Universities and Missions. Exception was taken to the step as having been undertaken without due appreciation of the importance of this new departure, without consideration by the International Committee as a whole (merely by the Executive at Geneva), and without the authority of the Conference, which was so soon to assemble. By every speaker (including Mr. W. H. Mills, Mr. J. H. Putterill, Hon. J. V. Farwell, &c.) the strongest sympathy was expressed with the mission undertaken by Mr. Wishard; the criticism only bore upon the method of the appointment. When it was decided by the Chairman that the amendment which had been proposed was virtually a vote of censure upon the Executive Committee at Geneva, the question was so far decided in their favour. It went to the vote, however, and a strong minority of upwards of forty supported it.

The point which aroused the stronger opposition was the proposal to appoint two honorary secretaries—Mr. R. C. Morse (New York) and Mr. E. J. Kennedy (London)—to the Central International Committee. Grave exception was taken to this step: (1) As emanating from the small sub-committee, and not from the Central Committee itself; (2) as affecting the question of proportionate representation; (3) as being uncalled for; and (4) undesirable from the suddenness of the proposal, and the lack of needful time for its due consideration. An appeal was made by Mr. W. H. Mills that the question should not be carried by a majority vote, but adjourned to the next Triennial Conference. The Committee's proposal was warmly advocated, and on being put to the vote, was carried against the amendment (a direct negative) by forty-nine to forty-five. It was afterwards passed as a substantive motion by a large majority.

Two other resolutions were passed nem. con.: (1) That Oceania be represented on the Central International Committee, and that Mr. David Walker, of Sydney, be the representative; and (2) that the Committee be instructed to codify a set of rules for the guidance of its own proceedings and for the control of future Conferences; that these be submitted to the various National Executives, and be brought up for adoption at the next World's Conference. It was past ten o'clock before the delegates adjourned for the night.

On Sunday, August 19, many of the delegates filled preaching engagements in Stockholm and the neighbourhood. In the afternoon a Bible-class was conducted in Blasieholms Church by Mr. R. A. Orr, of Pittsburgh; and an address was delivered by Mr. E. J. Kennedy. In the evening an important Conference meeting was held in the same meeting-place, when addresses were delivered by Rev. — Baumgartner (Berne), Professor P. Waage (Christiania), and Rev. J. Osborne (Ballymoney, Ireland).

MONDAY, AUGUST 20,

witnessed the well-attended closing session in the large church, the home of the Conference. The Bishop of Visby presided, and, after worship, proceeded very gratefully, in four different languages, to bid farewell to the delegates, for whom and whose countries he prayed God's richest blessing. A delegate from each country (Mr. M. H. Hodder for Britain and Ireland) responded in loving terms, acknowledging the kindly and munificent hospitality of the Swedish friends, and the efficient management by the reception committee and officers. Mr. Schulthess, secretary, received quite an ovation.

The delegates then adjourned en masse to three large steamers, which in due course conveyed them to the landing-place at Drottningholm Palace, on Lake Mälaren. Here they were conducted by the Chamberlain through the beautiful and extensive palace, back to the entrance hall, through which, the CROWN PRINCE arriving, they were led to the banqueting rooms, where a sumptuous déjeuner was served. In the name of the King and Queen, the Prince assured his guests of the joy he experienced in meeting them, of his devout wish for blessing to attend the labours of the World's Conference, and his prayer to God for blessing on themselves and the work in which they were engaged. Hearty cheers were then given for the King, the Queen, and the Crown Prince. Rev. G. TOPHEL, president of the Central International Committee, responded, acknowledging the honour and kindness of the royal favour, and the assurance that the delegates would carry back to their respective countries the lasting recollection of the royal sympathy with them in their work for the eternal salvation of the young men of the world. He desired to express deep gratitude to God for this helpful testimony. They, on their part, would ask God most richly to bless the King and Queen of Sweden and Norway, and to give them long life and strength for his service, and also that God's blessing and favour might ever rest on His Royal Highness and the members of his family. A speedy return was made by the steamers to Stockholm Quay, where many a life-long parting was taken by friends who, having learned to know and love each other in time, were looking forward to an eternal reunion.

OUR SICK BAIRNS.

THE last few weeks have been a time of much trial at our Children's Home at Neuilly. Little Robert, an American boy, was the first to show signs of ailing, and his cries on being set apart until the doctor could pronounce definitely upon the issue, sounded like an invitation to his playmates to join his isolation, to which Mina quickly responded; in hope of staying the progress of scarlet fever amongst our forty-three children, the doctor had both removed to the Hospital de l'Enfant Jésu.

The precaution came too late. Marie, Josephine, Amy, and Helen formed a fever ward in the Orphanage soon to be joined by others. Whilst Jeanne, Jenny, Aubrey, Hetty, Marie, Susy, Fanny, Alice, Rose, Valentine, Blanche, and Emmeline claimed their share of attention by entertaining measles and chicken-pox; enforcing a strict quarantine, and bringing no small trouble upon our usually regular household.

Some of our earlier charges, now numbering over three hundred, are occupying important and responsible positions in England.

The cost of maintaining a child is £16 a year. Last year, out of an expenditure of over £800, only £93 was given by friends or relations of the children. At the present moment, with the heavy additional items of this long sickness, and the necessary cleansing and disinfecting of the house, in our exchequer, even for our daily wants, there is nothing! ADA M. LEIGH.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME AND INSTITUTE.—The new wing, which has now been in working order more than eighteen months, has been highly appreciated by the soldiers and constabulary. The total number of visits to the Institute during last year was over 53,447. The attendance at the Sunday services, and at all the meetings, was very fair. There is difficulty in obtaining funds for carrying on the Institution, especially in Ireland, and the committee are hoping that, considering the number of English and Scottish soldiers to whom the Home is a real benefit, friends in England and Scotland will help as they may be able. The hon. secretary is Captain R. Wade Thompson, Clonskeagh Castle, Dublin.

QUEENSLAND KANAKA MISSION.

I HAVE just come from Queensland, where a good work is going on amongst the Kanakas, or "Boys," on the sugar plantations. These people are called "Boys," but they are really men and women. They come from the South Sea Islands, about a thousand miles distant, and are engaged for three years, but they frequently return to Queensland again and again. There are in our district, besides those in other parts of Queensland. Most of them are in utter darkness, without any knowledge of God, and have only a vague belief in an evil spirit, many coming from islands where there are no missionaries. We feel it is a great responsibility for these thousands of heathen to have been brought to our very doors, and it is a grand opportunity of spreading the Gospel among them. Each one who is truly converted may become a missionary to his countrymen, and carry the light of the Gospel to many a distant island, and thus the name of the Lord God shall be glorified "in the isles of the sea." "And men shall worship Him...even all the isles of the heathen."

TWO THOUSAND "BOYS"

In all parts of the world the heathen are more than ever "stretching out their hands toward God." Surely it is a sign that the time is short, and we should strain every nerve to win precious gems for the Saviour's crown "out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation."

It would be too long a story to tell how the work has gradually enlarged from a small class of ten Boys, begun in 1882. We have now two missionaries fully employed, each teaching during the week, while Mrs. Young and I have classes also every evening and several on Sundays. God has most wonderfully owned and blessed the work. It was begun in great weakness, but in simple dependence on Him who said: "All power is given unto Me ... go ye therefore and teach all nations ... and lo, I am with you alway." We have proved his faithfulness and sufficiency in the past, and we believe He will continue to supply all our needs, and to bless even more abundantly in the future.

NINE OR TEN LARGE CLASSES

NUMBER OF CONVERTS.

In 1886, seventeen boys were baptized from our own classes. In January, 1887, Mr. Johnson, our first missionary, began work, and in August that year ten from his classes and seven from ours were baptized. On January 1, this year, thirty converts professed their faith in Christ, and in June sixty more were baptized, They are all carefully examined before baptism, and, as far as we can judge, they are truly converted. It is our earnest desire and prayer that only those who are born of the Spirit should take this step; but we believe that "God is able" to do great things, and we dare not "limit" his power. The Christian Boys show in many ways the reality of God's work in their hearts. They are so eager to learn more about Christ, and very anxious to bring other Boys to Jesus.

SAM'S CLASS.

One evening, a Boy called Sam came from a plantation, three miles distant, on the other side of the river, bringing with him his own class of ten "Boys." He had been teaching them every evening quite of his own accord, and I was astonished to find how much he had accomplished, for he is a quiet, shy fellow; and, as they came from different islands, he had to talk to them in broken English. He prayed so earnestly that God would "shine into their hearts and give them light, and teach them to know Him." And afterwards he told me, with a glowing face, that he thought some of them believed in Jesus.

OUR PRAYER-MEETING.

On Saturday evening we have a prayer-meeting for the Christian Boys at Fairymead. It is very touching to hear the earnest, simple prayers in their broken English. One Boy often prays: "We no savee (know) plenty. We love Thee little bit, but we want to love Thee more. O Lord, give us thy Holy Spirit to be our Teacher and make us to understand thy Word." Another prays, "Me no want to do what Satan say any more. Me want to belong Jesus altogether, do what He say; but me no strong, help me—no let me fall." If any "Boy" stays away from school the others pray for him, and do all they can to bring him back, and when he does return they look so bright, and do not forget to thank God for answering their prayers.

CHEERFUL GIVERS.

I often think the "Boys" are an example to us. They carry out the Master's command: "Freely, ye have received, freely give," and give with real delight. They asked to have the mission box brought down when their wages were paid, so that they might give to God before spending the money in other ways. One Boy gave 14s., another 11s. 6d., and several 9s. each. When asked why they wanted to give to God, the reply was, "Because we love Him." Some of the "Boys" support a lad in India in whom they take a deep interest, praying for him by name, and asking that he may become a Christian, and eventually a missionary to his own people.

HAPPY DEATHS.

Three of the Christian Boys have died very happily. One said, shortly before his death, "By and by, me see Jesus; me thank Him plenty." Another dear fellow was very ill, and I was telling him how the others were praying for him, and how Jesus could restore him to health, when he looked up and said earnestly, "Oh, missis, me all right! Suppose me get strong, very good; suppose me no get strong, me go home along Jesus, very good." And then, with his eyes full of tears, he added, "Oh, me love Him plenty!"

TESTIMONY OF THE EMPLOYERS.

Several employers have spoken of the marked change in those Boys who attend the classes. One gentleman, although very kind in helping us, told me, when we began, that he had not the slightest faith in the possibility of any results; and, when a class was arranged for Saturday evening on his place, he said it was a pity to choose that day, as we should never get any Boys to attend. They stop work at four o'clock on Saturday, and a great many go to town, and often get drunk. Some months later we offered to change the day, and he thanked us, but said he would rather not, for he found the class kept the Boys on the place, and that they had not now half the trouble with drink. I shall be very glad while in England to answer inquiries, and give further particulars to any who are interested. Mrs. Arthur Brown, St. Elmo, Tunbridge Wells, kindly acts as our treasurer in England, and letters addressed to her care will reach me.

The Mission is evangelical and unsectarian in character, and has received sympathy and help from all the different denominations in the district. It is supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

(MISS) FLORENCE S. H. YOUNG,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.

THE CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.—During last year, the subscriptions to this Society's funds reached a total of £950. The object is well known to be the promotion of the spread of the Gospel in the Roman Catholic countries of Europe, by assistance being given to the evangelical societies established in them for that purpose. Grants are made to six societies, of which many particulars are given in the report just published. The hon. secretary is Miss Anne F. Hardy, Dunganstown, Wicklow, Ireland.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Right well has the author done his work in this charming book. In the first part he exhibits 'Christ Lifted Up' on the cross; and deals in an inexpressibly sweet and tender manner with the words and spirit of Jesus while nailed to the tree. In the second part, Christ risen from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of the throne of God, is evidently set forth before our eyes. In both sections there is much sound exposition, and the book from beginning to end sparkles with fresh, and beautiful, and inspiring thoughts."
